LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

---

Tuesday, November 19, 1968, being the first day of the second session of the twenty-eighth Parliament of the province of Ontario for the despatch of business pursuant to a proclamation of the Honourable W. Ross Macdonald, Lieutenant-Governor of the province.

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 19, 1968

The House met at 3 o'clock p.m.

The Honourable, the Lieutenant-Governor, having entered the House and being seated upon the Throne, was pleased to open the session with the following gracious speech.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald (Lieutenant-Governor): Mr. Speaker and members of the Legislative Assembly of Ontario, I extend warmest greetings and a sincere welcome to each and every one of you.

Each session of the Legislature is an important and memorable event in the life of our province. This occasion is made particularly memorable for me because, for the first time since assuming my duties as the representative in Ontario of our beloved Sovereign, Queen Elizabeth II, I have the privilege of addressing the opening of a session of the Legislature.

As my government convenes this second session of the 28th Parliament of Ontario, the people of our province continue to enjoy a full and rich life almost unmatched in the world today. Opportunities for human betterment abound on every hand. Dynamic growth and prosperity are apparent at every turn. The quality of the social, cultural and artistic life of our people improves daily. Ontario continues to be a predominant choice of those who seek to establish new homes in a peaceful, dependable, stimulating and rewarding environment.

While we enjoy the sum of the labour of past years, the people of Ontario accept with confidence the substantial, yet exciting, challenges of the days ahead. Happily, the challenges we face are those born of success, prosperity, development and progress.

Throughout its history, and especially in recent years, my government has been privileged to play a vital and significant role in constitutional and fiscal discussions involving the federal and provincial governments of this country. My government has always viewed these events not as struggles between competitors but as joint, cooperative ventures of sovereign partners building on the wisdom of the Fathers of Confederation with one objective: a greater, stronger, more unified Canada.

My government has always sought the cooperation of the federal government in our mutual objective of assuring that the people of this province are not unduly or unfairly taxed. While our endeavours to secure such cooperation have met with little constructive response in recent months, my government expresses the hope that, in the interests of equity, fiscal stability, and national unity a more reasonable, constructive and understanding attitude toward the financial needs and constitutional position of the provinces will be recognized.

In my government's continuing recognition of its responsibilities to the people of this province, it will advance measures and propositions in the session now beginning, designed to ensure the maintenance of a vigorous and dynamic Ontario in the context of the broader interests of Canada.

In a renewed determination to hold taxation to the minimum consistent with a high level of service to the people of Ontario, and in its firm resolve to maintain the enviable credit rating of the province, my government's comprehensive programme to reduce costs and increase efficiency is being pursued with the utmost vigour. Included in the programme are increased control over that portion of spending within the direct scope of the province; tighter scrutiny by Treasury board of all matters having financial implications; re-evaluation of procedures, methods, forms and equipment; re-appraisal of existing programmes; re-scheduling and deferment of new programmes; and renewed emphasis on efficiency and economy in every branch and agency of the Ontario government.

All programmes financed in whole or in part by provincial taxpayers but administered by other public authorities, including municipalities, boards of education, universities, colleges of applied arts and technology, Crown corporations and other boards and commissions, will be subject to intense public scrutiny to ensure that maximum efficiency is attained.

In the session of the Legislature upon which the House is now embarking, my government will submit in the budget statement and in other legislative proposals, measures which will reflect a determination to achieve the fullest efficiency of government and the greatest utilization of tax revenues. All current programmes that contribute to the public good will be continued with undiminished vigour. New proposals are being designed to achieve a greater equity and efficiency in the administration of government, in our system of taxation, and in our relationship with our municipal partners.

My government has reviewed in substantial detail the constructive and definitive recommendations of the Hon. J. C. McRuer in his report upon civil rights in our province. Legislation will be introduced for the consideration of the hon. members which will implement several of the most basic recommendations contained in this report. In particular, a bill respecting the expropriation laws of Ontario will be brought forward for your consideration. In addition to including some of the recommendations made by the Hon. Mr. McRuer, the bill will also reflect the recommendations of the Ontario law reform commission in its report upon the basis for compensation for expropriation. The legislation will be designed to ensure equity and justice for all whose lands may be expropriated or affected by land acquisition programmes necessary in the public interest.

Among the measures to be placed before the hon. members will be proposals to institute regional government in various areas of the province where sufficient study has been completed.

To provide further equality of service throughout the province, amendments to The Assessment Act will improve the assessment function. Included will be the implementation of certain recommendations of the Ontario committee on taxation and the select committee of the Legislature on the report of the taxation committee.

During the session an opportunity will be afforded hon. members to give serious and responsible attention to the machinery of collective bargaining and related labour and management matters arising out of the recommendations contained in the report of the Royal commission inquiry into labour disputes.

Hon. members will be asked to consider legislation respecting mechanics' liens and the manner in which they are dealt with in the construction industry in Ontario.

To further ensure that every person in Ontario is free and equal in dignity and rights, hon. members will be asked to approve the strengthening of the Ontario Human Rights Code.

Hon. members will have placed before them for approval revisions of the hearings and appeal procedures of a variety of statutes which give protection to the people of Ontario in their business transactions both as buyers and sellers. In addition, the far-reaching and important legislation relating to business corporations, which was introduced during the first session of the 28th Legislature, will be brought before the House.

The availability of reasonably priced homes will continue to be vigorously pursued by my government, with further expansion of the highly successful Home Ownership Made Easy programme. As further encouragement to individual home ownership and to bring home ownership within the reach of an even larger segment of our people, you will be asked to approve policies which will facilitate the construction of substantial numbers of condominium dwellings.

The goal of equality of educational opportunity will continue to be a prime objective of my government. During this session, implementation of the legislation creating larger units of school administration will be pursued, together with consideration of the report of the provincial committee on aims and objectives of education in the schools of Ontario.

Legislation will be introduced creating an educational communications authority and to implement certain recommendations of the report relating to the Ontario College of Art.

My government, mindful of the continuing requirements of social services for the people of Ontario, will place before you legislation which will allow the steady development of a programme to assist children with mental and emotional disorders.

Your approval will be requested for a number of additional progressive programmes within the field of correctional services, including the establishment of a fresh approach to the counselling of families.

Placed before you for consideration will be a health protection Act, embodying the most modern concepts in public health legislation.

My government's vigorous programmes designed to prevent and reduce abuses of our environment in the various fields of pollution will be pressed forward with the utmost determination.

The policies of my government in assisting the agricultural community of Ontario to improve both the production of food and recompense to the farmer will be pursued with continued intensity.

Among the continuing programmes ensuring the steady growth and development of the communities and industries of northern Ontario will be legislation to create a body to coordinate all northern transportation policies. Included will be legislation affecting the mining industry through important changes in The Mining Act and related statutes as well as a thorough overhauling and updating of legislation affecting safety requirements in the mining industry.

My government will increase its efforts to ensure that our forest industries will share in the predicted increased demand for wood and wood products. The programme of acquisition of land to provide additional recreational areas, provincial parks and conservation authority facilities will be pursued with vigour.

The highly successful programme to equalize industrial opportunity will continue to extend its beneficial effects throughout our province.

To fulfill the demands of the motoring public and to encourage economic development in all aspects of the province's industry, the construction and maintenance programmes of The Department of Highways will be pressed forward throughout the province. Every region of Ontario benefits from its programmes.

Recognizing not only the increasing complexity and severity of municipal problems, but also the dynamic opportunities that lie before our municipal partners, my government will propose a number of financial and other measures designed to be of substantial assistance.

In summary, you will have placed before you an extensive legislative programme. This programme is designed to further enhance and enrich the lives of all the residents of our beloved province and our beloved country while striving for attainment of the greatest possible efficiency.

May Divine Providence guide you in your deliberations.

God save the Queen and Canada.

The Honourable, the Lieutenant-Governor was then pleased to retire from the Chamber.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: I beg to inform the House that, to prevent mistakes, I have obtained a copy of His Honour's speech, which I will now read.

THE EVIDENCE ACT

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Evidence Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs (Mr. Rowntree), that the speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor to this House be taken into consideration tomorrow.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, before the motion is put, perhaps you will permit me a moment or two to make some comments on this, the first day of the session, when the opportunity is available without the intrusion of any political considerations to mark the occasion.

I would like to draw to your attention, sir, that this is the first occasion that His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor has spoken to the opening session of the Legislature and we, as residents of Ontario, are proud of this man, and I speak, of course, as a citizen of Brant county, from which he himself comes; and I want to draw your attention, sir, to the fact that he is considered one of our first citizens.

As I look around the House I am glad to see, sir, that there are no vacancies resulting from our recess and I particularly am delighted to see that our good friend, the hon. member for Middlesex South (Mr. Olde), has recovered and is back among us.

I will not occupy your attention unduly, sir, but I feel that, since this is the first occasion since 1961 when we have had the opportunity to discuss public affairs this early in the year, we look forward with great anticipation to the discussion of His Honour's remarks that were presented to us this afternoon.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves that the House do now adjourn.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 3:35 o'clock, p.m.

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 20, 1968

The House met at 3 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We start our session today with the following guests in the galleries: In the east gallery are members of the King City women's institute and students from Appleby college in Oakville. I am sure we welcome these people here on the first working day of this session.

Petitions.

Mr. R. H. Knight (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I would like to present this 12,700-signature petition from the most neglected part of Ontario, northwestern Ontario.

While I recognize the petition has already done its good, I still feel that I have been charged with the responsibility to bring it to the floor of the Ontario Legislature which I am seeking to do today. I would like to formally turn it over to the Premier (Mr. Robarts) at this time.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order!

The member will of course realize, because he has now had some experience in the House, that petitions to be brought before the House must be brought in the proper and normal manner. If the member is not aware of the proper procedure I am sure that the Clerk of the House will give him guidance and tomorrow it may perhaps be presented in the appropriate manner.

Clerk of the House: The following petitions have been received:

Of the corporation of the city of Ottawa praying that an Act may pass permitting the corporation to establish a rental authority.

Of the Ontario Co-operative Credit Society praying that an Act may pass authorizing an increase in its capital.

Of the corporation of the city of London praying that an Act may pass vesting the management, operation, equipment and control of the hospitals of the city of London in a board called The Board of Hospital Trustees of the city of London.

Of the corporation of the borough of Scarborough praying that an Act may pass authorizing the borough to pass by-laws respecting advertising devices.

Of the corporation of the town of Burlington praying that an Act may pass establishing a parking area.

Of the corporation of the city of Niagara Falls praying that an Act may pass authorizing it to exempt, by agreement, owners and occupants of buildings from the necessity of supplying parking facilities.

Of the corporation of the village of Dutton and the corporation of the township of Dunwich praying that an Act may pass permitting them to maintain a home for the care of the sick and distressed in the area.

Of the corporation of the town of Lindsay praying that an Act may pass authorizing the removal or demolition of buildings that are in a ruinous or dilapidated condition.

Of Cyril W. March, Daniel McLean and Donald Graff praying that an Act may pass reviving March Diamond Drilling Limited.

Of the corporation of the town of Parry Sound praying that an Act may pass providing that the time limited for appealing the 1963 decision of The Department of Municipal Affairs with respect to the equalization factors for that year may be extended to allow such an appeal to be made.

Mr. Speaker: Presenting reports.

Hon. R. S. Welch (Provincial Secretary and Minister of Citizenship): Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present to the House, the annual report of the liquor control board of Ontario for the year ending March 31, 1968.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister) moves, seconded by Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Provincial Treasurer) that, during the present session of the legislative assembly, provision be made for the taking and printing of reports of debates and speeches, and to that end Mr. Speaker be authorized to employ an editor of debates and speeches and the necessary stenographers at such rates of compensation as may be agreed to by him. Also, that Mr. Speaker be authorized to arrange for the printing of the reports in the amount of 2,500 copies daily, copies of such printed reports to be supplied to the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor, to Mr. Speaker, Clerk of the legislative assembly, to the legislative library, each hon. member of the assembly, to the reference libraries of the province, to the press gallery, to the newspapers of the province approved by Mr. Speaker, and the balance to be distributed by the Clerk of the assembly as directed by Mr. Speaker.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves that commencing on Friday next this House will meet at 10:30 a.m. each Friday until further order; and that commencing on Monday next we will meet at 2:30 p.m. each Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday until further order.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. L. M. Reilly (Eglinton) moves, seconded by Mr. R. G. Hodgson (Victoria), that the standing committees of the House for the present session be appointed as follows: Agriculture and food committee; education and university affairs committee; government commissions committee; health committee; highways and transport committee; legal and municipal committee; labour committee; natural resources and tourism committee; private bills committee; privileges and elections committee; public accounts committee; social, family and correctional services committee; standing orders and printing committee; which said committees shall severally be empowered to examine and inquire into all such matters and things as may be referred to them by the House, and to report from time to time their observations and opinions thereon with the power to send for persons, papers and records.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): At the first session of the Legislature a year ago I drew to your attention, sir, and to the attention of the other members of the House, the view the official Opposition has that our committee system is entirely inadequate as it has been set up during previous years.

It is not my intention to recount to you, sir, the arguments that have been put before you in the past but to express the displeasure that we on this side of the House have that the leader of the House has not undertaken some initiative in this matter to improve the situation which in fact, under his jurisdiction, has been deteriorating since 1961.

There have been honest proposals put before the House and before the government, Mr. Speaker, which in fact would expedite the work of this Parliament. It would in fact make the deliberations on matters that are intended to come before these committees much more meaningful than they can now be made with the stylized and formal and inadequate approach that the Premier of this province takes.

Now there are many examples of this very matter that I would like to call to your attention. For the edification of the barrackers in the back row, where they will stay for another two years, surely they would listen to this matter and give it their full attention, because they are the ones who are driven out of the back rooms, they have to set down their euchre hands—

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Nixon: —so that they can come and be a majority, so that they can come and be a majority—

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Nixon: —and maintain the position that the Premier has ordered for so many years.

Now let us look at this reasonably and I ask you, Mr. Speaker—

Hon. J. H. White (Minister of Revenue): Let us be constructive.

Mr. Nixon: I ask you, Mr. Speaker, to keep the backbenchers and the new Minister of the Crown silent for at least a moment until we can—

Is the Minister getting up on a point of order?

Mr. Speaker: Order, order!

While we all realize that this is the opening of a new session and that there are many things to be said by all members, I would ask that the members give the leader of the Opposition a hearing, and thereafter I am sure there are those who will be capable of speaking to the matter.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate your interjection, but my view is that we must get on with the business of the House. I do not intend to hold it up at this time, but I do propose to you, Mr. Speaker, that the best suggestion to improve the committee system in many years has come from this side with the proposal that we enact the facilities for an estimates' committee which would take much of the discussion on the detailed spending procedures of this government into a committee situation, where those people who lead the various branches of the civil service would be prepared to give their views on factual matters and the Ministers would be present to state the policies as they are concerned.

There are many definite proposals that should be considered. The most important besides an estimates' committee would be, for example, that the education committee would not wait for the tardy Minister's approach to legislation, which usually comes on in April and May, but that we in fact constitute this standing committee as a continuing one to investigate the situation of education in the province of Ontario.

This is what we are here for and this is what I propose, Mr. Speaker, that we can undertake if we have a proper approach to the committees that would be constituted by the government Whip's motion.

As a matter of fact I was quite surprised that the chief government Whip made this motion. I seem to recall that the motion is usually the prerogative of the leader of the government, but it has been put by the member for Eglinton—

Mr. Reilly: I am quite sure the hon. member wants to be correct, and if he checks Hansard last year he will find it was proposed by the government Whip.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Nixon: Well Mr. Speaker, I am glad to see that the Whip is here almost in a new identity. I understand he has new facilities and is building an empire just outside the Legislature, and we can expect a much better job from him than we have seen in the past.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): It has gone to his head.

Mr. Nixon: Perhaps a laurel wreath would go with this!

But Mr. Speaker, if I might put to you my serious consideration that the House would be well served by the addition to the committee list that has been put before us just a few moments ago, by the addition of an estimates' committee which would expedite the business of the House.

And while I am concerned with that, it would do something far more important. It would give us a much more democratic and efficient means to examine not only the Minister but his chief advisors in the expenditures of the swollen budgets that have been put before us in the last two years, and which no doubt will be put before us in the near future.

With this in mind, Mr. Speaker, I want to move an amendment to the motion put before us by the member for Eglinton, moved by myself and seconded by the member for Downsview (Mr. Singer), that to the list of committees proposed be added an estimates' committee.

Mr. Speaker: It is moved by Mr. Nixon, seconded by Mr. Singer, that to the list of committees proposed be added an estimates' committee.

Mrs. M. Renwick (Scarborough Centre): I move, seconded by the hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Peacock), that the motion be further amended by adding thereto the following: housing and urban problems committee.

Mr. Speaker: Mrs. Renwick moves, seconded by Mr. Peacock, that the motion be further amended by adding thereto the following: housing and urban problems committee.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I would rise to say that I find it necessary to vote against both these amendments. If the hon. member wants to check Hansard for the opening day or the second day, for probably the last three years, the government's position will be found as far as an estimates' committee is concerned.

As far as the committee system itself is concerned, as I said last year, the committee system, its efficiency and what it is able to achieve, really rests in the hands of the members of the committees. If the hon. members read and listen to the motion, they will note it says the committees may deal with anything referred to them by this House. There has never been any intent on the part of the government to prevent any committee from dealing with any matter it wishes to, within its terms of reference.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Oh, nonsense!

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I might say the member for Downsview said "nonsense" last year at precisely the same juncture.

Mr. Singer: It is the same nonsense.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I am not going to go into the question of attendance at committee meetings, but we have kept attendance records quite carefully and it has been said in this House before that the major delinquents in attendance at committees are the official Opposition.

I am greatly interested in making the committee system work better. I am interested in anything that will make the deliberations of this House and committees of the House more meaningful.

Last year I undertook to provide staff if that were necessary to the committees in carrying out their duties. Now, if these committees wish to arrange programmes of examination of various matters that fall within the terms of reference of a specific committee, this government will not block them in that attempt.

I would suggest to the leader of the Opposition that, instead of waving his arms around, shouting and making rude remarks across the floor, he should instruct some of his members on the committees to get to work and make some concrete proposals as to what they would like to do in committee; that would be a good deal more constructive than this same speech we hear every year.

The whole secret of this lies in the members' own hands so do not thump the government for it, just activate the committees and let us see what happens.

As far as the estimates' committee is concerned, the estimates are very thoroughly examined in this House. No doubt before the Budget comes down there will be some discussion in this House as to how we are to handle the estimates this session.

If, in our examination of different procedures here, we can come to an agreement—I do not object to an estimates' committee per se—but I do object to appointing a committee which is simply going to do in one form what then will be repeated in this House. And that is precisely what would happen at the present time.

Now, if we can work out some form of committee that would not simply lead to duplication, I would be quite prepared to look at it; but simply to establish an estimates' committee at this stage with this amendment, does not seem to me to be very practical.

I really do not think it is necessary to have a select committee of the House to deal with housing and urban problems. I might say that this suggestion has not been made to me up until this time. I do not know whether the Whips met, but ordinarily they do to go over the list of committees because we have changed them around and broadened them.

I do not know whether this suggestion has ever come forward but I think there are all kinds of areas in which housing and urban problems can be considered, and I do not think that at this stage, it is necessary we establish another committee of the House. We have enough difficulties in getting attendance and getting some meaningful work done as it is.

I recall, when I was Minister of Education, that I got hold of the chairman of the committee on education and, over a period of two or three years, we examined every area of that department and how it functioned. We brought all the civil servants before the committee to answer any questions the members might have.

That went on very nicely for about two years but I dropped it eventually because the attendance faded away and I had the officials from the department there but I really did not have much attendance from the members. But however, these things—

Mr. Nixon: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, if you will permit me. The standing committee on education to which the Prime Minister refers was chaired by the present Minister of Revenue and I must say that that committee has not functioned properly since he gave up that chairmanship. Perhaps he should have been kept there rather than given his new responsibility.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well, I accept full responsibility for the appointments to this government but—

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): The Prime Minister has got to live with them.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I will live very comfortably with them for the foreseeable future.

But I mention this simply to illustrate my point that the committees contain within themselves the ability and the power to accomplish just about anything the members on the committees want to accomplish. Therefore, I do not think the point made by the leader of the Opposition—is well taken and I propose to vote against these two amendments.

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Let them make up their own minds.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order! Order! Order!

The member for Riverdale has the floor if he wishes to avail himself of it.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, I listened to the same remarks of the Prime Minister this year as we heard last year about these standing committees of the legislative assembly.

I was fascinated by the paragraph at the bottom of page three of the Speech from the Throne which says that all programmes financed, in whole or in part, by provincial taxpayers but administered by other public authorities, including municipalities, boards of education, universities, colleges of applied arts and technology, Crown corporations and other boards and commissions, will be subject to intense public scrutiny to ensure that maximum efficiency is attained.

I had thought, of course, that the intense public scrutiny would be carried on by the standing committees of this Legislature. I had assumed that under the government commissions the majority of the boards and commissions and Crown corporations would appear for this public scrutiny, which has not as yet, taken place before that committee.

I had assumed also, that the boards of education, the universities and colleges of applied arts and technology, would be appearing before the standing committee on education and university affairs.

If this is not to be the case — and the Speech from the Throne seems to be explicit on the matter—then I would ask in what way are these various emanations—including the municipalities and the other bodies listed—in what way are they going to be subject to intense public scrutiny?

Mr. Speaker: It would be my opinion that the matter raised by the member for Riverdale is extraneous to the discussion before the House at the moment.

I would also like to say to the members that I have had a note from the press gallery that the speaker system is not working very well and they would request that the members speak up. Perhaps the technicians listening might check on it.

The member for Scarborough Centre now has the floor.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, surely the concern of providing a place for the public unrest in housing and urban problems to come, rather than having them fester out there, as they are at this present time, is an overriding consideration as to whether this government could bear the burden of another committee.

The unrest that is in our society in the metropolitan area of Toronto right now has to have a place to come. The reason why the Prime Minister has not heard from this side of the House, from my own particular seat, on this question before is that in reviewing our committees today, Mr. Speaker, I felt that it was urgent that we provide a place where the people of this province can come with their briefs, with their complaints, with their unrest.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment on the two amendments that are now before the House.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: There is no doubt as to who is leader of the party, if you have not heard. News travels slowly to the Tory benches but I thought I would help them.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order! Order!

Mr. MacDonald: I do not wish to rehash the debates of earlier years, but apparently it becomes necessary as sometimes rather serious matters get lost.

Let me deal first with the question of a committee on estimates. There would be one value in a committee on estimates. Some cabinet ministers on that side of the House know their departments and, if you ask them a question, they can reply. Other cabinet ministers have not a clue. They have their ear down, trying to get fed the information so that we have to have the information from the people in the department who do know, strained through a minister who is nearly incompetent.

Do not force me to name names because I will if I have to.

There will be one value, Mr. Speaker, in having an estimates' committee and that would be, to have come before the estimates' committee, Deputy Ministers and various other experts in the department so that we could quiz them directly.

However, there are two factors that flow from that. The first is that some people think—and this is really the important point I want to make—that if you have a discussion of the estimates before the estimates' committee, there will be less discussion in the House. It does not happen.

In Ottawa they discovered that the repetition does not reduce the consideration in the House. If I have to choose between whether or not we are going to have a little greater flexibility out in a committee or deal here with the Minister, who, in the final analysis, is responsible—if he is incompetent let his incompetence be spread before the world starting with this House—that is the important thing. I want to see the estimates considered in this House on the record as fully as this House deems necessary so that we know precisely where we are. The reason why I have some hesitation in getting drawn into the proposition of an estimates' committee is because I foresee the prospect that it will become a substitute for debate in this House, and in my view that is the top priority.

On the second issue, I am not going to repeat what the hon. member for Scarborough Centre has said. She has made the case for a committee, but unfortunately the Prime Minister has rather a closed minded approach to it. He just automatically discards it, as is the usual fashion by this government.

Housing and urban problems—you review them and where will they come up? Housing will come up, I presume, under government commissions. I suspect maybe most of them may be brought under government commissions, so that you have a committee that deals with literally 80 or 90 commissions throughout the whole range of the affairs of this province, and in it the question of housing and urban affairs gets lost.

Mr. Speaker, if this government does not know as yet that it is sitting on a time bomb in terms of unmet housing and urban problems, then it will find out in the next election. Let it now ignore a more rational, sensible approach to this kind of problem, because it will suffer the consequences at the next election. Maybe that is the appropriate way to do it them, if it is intent on being stubborn.

Mr. Singer: In the second session of the 28th Legislature, we are again embarking on the ritual rain dance that has heralded sessions of this Legislature since 1867, and before that when it was the Legislature of Upper Canada. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that in a time when we have so many serious problems to face, we must revise our procedures in order to deal with our problems in a sensible and logical way.

If we listen to the words of the Treasurer, and listen to the words of the Premier, the province is on the verge of a fiscal nightmare, and we are now going to spend four to six weeks listening to the debate on the Speech from the Throne, a meaningless document as it was enunciated yesterday. We are going to hear the speeches about "the hills and the valleys of my riding" coming from 117 or a lesser number of members, and we are not going to get down to the fiscal problems that face this province, Mr. Speaker, until we have sat for another eight or ten weeks.

It would seem to me that since we are forced into the straitjacket of that kind of procedure, perhaps at this time we could depart just a little bit so that, hopefully, members of this House can get down to some of the real problems that face it. That is why the resolution, or the amendment, moved by my leader, makes abundant good sense, and the reply made by the Premier makes no sense at all.

The Premier says, for instance, that the committees can deal with anything they want. Now, collectively their decisions are the view of the government majority, and as the government majority dictates, and as the government chosen chairman dictates, so the committees act.

Hon. Mr. White: That is not so.

Mr. Singer: It is not what the members of the House want to deal with, it is what the government ordains that the committees shall deal with that is considered. Mr. Speaker, I would have hoped that the elevation of the hon. member for London South to the cabinet would have removed him from the position of director of the House, but apparently it has made no difference. His capacity is so great that apparently he can run the House and run his department as well. I wish him good luck but I am sure he is going to need it.

Mr. Speaker, an example occurs to me, or a very obvious example, about committees being able to do anything they want, and that is the committee on commissions. For several years we tried to find out what happened in the Niagara parks commission. For several years the government refused us this privilege and one day when we had a couple of hours—and that is all that was allocated to the Niagara parks commission—a vote was forced as to whether or not that matter could be discussed, and what happened?

As the discussion took place and the debate took place in that committee, it became obvious to the deputy whip, the member for Durham, that his party was outvoted, so as the debate progressed and it was obvious that the record, the tawdry record, of the Niagara parks commission was going to be made public, what did the deputy government Whip from Durham do? He ran out into the corridors and just in time as the vote was being called, he literally marched in—"go, go, go, go"—a half a dozen back benchers who did not know what was under discussion so that they could vote against the matter becoming a public issue.

Now that is the sort of thing that in the Premier's words, means that "the committees can do anything they want". Mr. Speaker, that is a denial of democracy.

Let us get on with this. The committees only meet when the chairman calls them to meet and they can only do what the government majority will let them do.

Surely the time has come when we should become practical in dealing with the affairs of this province, and when we should have more time and more ability to examine the estimates, and to bring before us the senior civil servants who are responsible so that they can be asked questions and there can be sufficient time to do it. For that reason it makes good sense if the amendment moved by my leader be supported.

Let me comment briefly on the amendment moved by the member for Scarborough Centre. Surely we must adapt our procedures to the problems of the present day world, and anyone with half an eye can see that there is a very serious problem existing in the big cities here in Ontario.

You do not have to be any genius—you do not even have to sit in the government benches—to discover that there is a housing crisis in Ontario, and what better way could there be to deal with a housing crisis, and with urban problems, than to have a special committee of this House dealing with that at regular times and with a regular agenda? Mr. Speaker, I think it is time that we brought our procedures up to date and I would hope that the hon. members of the House would support both of these amendments.

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, the last session was my first experience as a member of this Legislature and one in which I participated with interest because it was the first time that I had had an opportunity to compare the method of reviewing procedures and operations of government versus business. I was a member of four different committees, two of which were quite active—namely, private bills and the education committee, it being involved with a contentious bill that required a lot of hearings.

The private bills committee, of course, was on the regular business of private bills. The other two were municipal affairs and transport, which had in one case, two or three meetings, and in the other one, I think one meeting.

In each case, it did not give those of us on that committee an opportunity to look into the operation of the department concerned, or question people about it. To my mind we are, in effect, directors representing the shareholders or people of this province and instead of a few thousand shareholders in the case of companies there are—

Hon. Mr. White: That is the C. D. Howe approach to government.

Mr. Deacon: —millions of them in connection with the people who pay the taxes in this province. They are, as the hon. Minister from London South knows, terribly concerned about the way our money is being spent—and we heard that more than we heard anything else this summer. They see the amount we are going to have to raise and they say, "Surely to goodness, can we not find more efficient ways of spending those dollars?" As it now stands, each Minister is fully occupied with his own department. He is speaking for his own department in the cabinet, which is in a way, the inner circle which is deciding how much money is going to be spent by the government. There is no one from the outside looking on, as is the case with the boards of directors of companies, where shareholders have someone from the outside looking in and questioning the way departments are being operated.

I think that we must take a new look at this committee system. We must not just be called when there is a bill before us that is contentious. We must be given an opportunity to discuss with members of the department—with the Minister present, of course—what the procedures are and the policies in each of the various branches of the department.

In one of the departments for which I was given responsibility last year, I was given, by the Minister, an absolute open hand to go in and ask questions and find out what I wanted. In the other case, I was told "hands off". The only opportunity I had to speak or question the department was when it came before the estimates of the House. This is not the time that we can really dig in and find good sound reasons and facts, because it is just wasting the time of the House. Many of these things are detailed—things that you want to assemble and then come to a conclusion as to how wisely the administration is being handled.

I do urge that the Prime Minister reconsider the roles of the committees and make much more use of them. Perhaps cutting out our evening sessions and calling committee meetings then. On more than one occasion I had two or three committee meetings all at the same time and if our attendance was not always good, I suggest that this is one of the reasons.

I know in the case of the education committee that many times the Opposition outnumbered members of the government, as far as representation there—

An hon. member: Until the vote came and they dragged them in by the coat collars.

Mr. Deacon: But those of us who are willing to find out how departments for which we have concern are operated should be given a much greater opportunity than now is available to us in the open sessions of the House.

An hon. member: Well said.

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I just want very briefly and as vigorously as I can, to ask the Prime Minister to reconsider his opposition to the establishment of a committee on housing and urban problems.

He cannot offer his objections that this will be one of those committees which will not be well attended. I can assure him that the urban members from both sides of this House will be in full attendance at such a committee, if the scheduling of committee sessions is properly drawn up.

He has now had an opportunity to consider the arguments of the official Opposition in support of the establishment of an estimates' committee. He may well not be able to reconsider that proposal. But I urge him to reconsider, if he cannot do so at this moment, his position on the establishment of a committee on housing and urban affairs and, at a subsequent session, at his pleasure, introduce a motion for the establishment of such a committee after he has reflected as to who, among his members, could properly be appointed to this chairmanship.

I appeal to the Prime Minister to do this, Mr. Speaker, because the urgency of this area of our provincial affairs is so great—and despite the progress that his own Minister asserts the government is making with it—I feel that the Prime Minister himself feels it is so great that it is deserving of the attention that only a committee of this House can give to that problem.

Mr. Reilly: Mr. Speaker, first of all I would like to say that I listened to the hon. leader of the Opposition at the last session at the same time introduce the same thoughts that he repeated here today. May I suggest to him that as far as the estimates' committee is concerned this was discussed by the representative Whips of all three parties. We, as members of the government, were not opposed to an estimates' committee, but the members of the Opposition were opposed to an estimates' committee. We could get no unanimity among the Whips themselves for an estimates' committee.

Mr. Nixon: Nonsense!

Mr. Reilly: This is not nonsense. This is fact, if the hon. leader of the Opposition wants to reflect upon it.

To hear the hon. member for Downsview suggest that the government ordains whatever committee work the committee is going to deal with is nonsense. This is nonsense, because I was the chairman of a committee in this House and I was never instructed by the government what should appear before this committee. It was left to the chairman and it was left to the members of the committee to deal with whatever they wanted to do.

Mr. Nixon: Subject to the majority Tories who are notoriously dull.

Mr. Reilly: Well let us not deal with absenteeism, because I do not think, Mr. Speaker, that we accomplish anything in this House by dealing with who attends and who is absent and what the attendance is.

Mr. Nixon: I agree.

Mr. Reilly: Because if you want to deal with this I have facts and figures that might prove a little embarrassing to the Opposition, but I see nothing accomplished to bring this up every time. What I am suggesting—

Mr. Singer: The hon. member left his toga off today.

Mr. Reilly: What I am suggesting to you, Mr. Speaker, is that as far as the estimates' committee is concerned, the members of the government and all the members in the House are rather anxious to do anything that will improve the efficiency of the House. So far today, I have heard nothing that is going to help to improve the efficiency of the House. Under the circumstances, of course, I would vote against both amendments.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Lakeshore has the floor.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Speaker, I will speak very briefly on this.

As far as the question of attendance is concerned, I noticed last year that very often—one being on a committee—we are expected to be in two places at the same time. The scheduling of these things in part accounts, I suspect, for the attendance on certain occasions.

Now a second thing touching this attendance situation. I can well recall, Mr. Speaker, two or three occasions in the education committee—which I think the Opposition, over here, attended assiduously because of the importance of the issues. We very well might have scuttled the whole of Bill 44 in it—and the whole set-up of education that went through this House last year. We used to sit around and joke a little bit about it. It is you people over there that are ineffective in producing the bodies, not to speak of producing the minds—necessary to advert to these matters.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, on the third point, why cannot the hon. Prime Minister give consideration to updating these committees anciently contained in Alex C. Lewis's book here? When pressing problems of the day arise of an extraordinary character, why cannot a committee be set to work such as in this area of housing—which is a major concern to all of us at this time—so the public may have a greater access to us? So that briefs may be heard, so that a voice is given and methods worked out that are directly referable to the members in this Chamber! So that we are made thoroughly cognizant, not that we are not already well acquainted with, the problems involved!

Again, Mr. Speaker, I would ask that the hon. Prime Minister reconsider, update, be open, and bring this Legislature into conformity with the times.

Mr. T. Reid (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, I would just make one or two comments, one of a general nature and another of a specific one.

The first is really in the form of a question to the Premier of the province. It is a continuing question, and that is, when are we going to get down to a very hard-headed look at the total reform of the way this Legislature conducts its business? I would have liked to have seen in the Premier's statement at least an indication that he is serious about reforming the outdated ways of doing business in this province.

You are running, if you like, a very large enterprise, spending a lot of money, and I for one am very worried that we cannot cope with the social problems, housing and urban affairs, along the same lines as this House has tried to cope with other problems over the past 25 years.

I think this year is the time to reform the procedures of the House, to reform the way in which criticism can be effective from Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, and I would like to see that started this year. So, I would suggest to the government, Mr. Speaker, that we must move to reform the procedures of this House, to update them, so that we can better provide the services to the people of this province than we have in the past.

I am worried in particular that all meaningful democracy, to quote the member for Port Arthur (Mr. Knight), must move out of the Legislature onto the front steps of the legislative building. I believe—

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member is speaking to a motion with respect to an amendment to a motion with respect to the creation of committees of this Legislature. As yet, he has not yet reached that particular area of discussion and I would ask him that he do so.

Mr. T. Reid: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I simply say that I am glad at least that we have a committee system. I would like to see it part of a much larger programme of reform in this House.

The specific suggestion I would like to make to the government is that the committees of the Legislature, the standing committees of the Legislature, not be staffed by departmental officials. I think these committees, since they are legislative committees, should be staffed through the Clerk's office. I would like to see services provided not by civil servants of the government side who see their role as providing services to government members only, but by members of the Clerk's staff.

I would like to have objective secretaries of those committees writing objective reports, instead of leaving out many valuable comments that many Opposition members make in any notes they take.

And finally, Mr. Speaker, I would hope that the government members and particularly, in this case the Minister of Education would take their responsibilities and his responsibilities more seriously and show up at more of these meetings of the education committee.

Mr. C. G. Pilkey (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I will not spend any time on the question of a committee for the estimates. I believe that we had considerable dialogue on that matter at the beginning of the last session, and I think the situation has not differed from that time and so I think our position is very clear in that regard.

But this question of a housing and urban problems committee is a new suggestion to this House. I recall, during the session, that I asked this government to initiate a special discussion on the whole question of housing. Obviously this fell on deaf ears and this debate never really took place. So the suggestion that has been made by my colleague is that we do provide a forum to—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I can only point out to the member that we spent days and days discussing the whole problem of housing in this province during the estimates of the hon. Minister who is in charge of the housing corporation. So it really is not accurate to say that there is no forum for discussion of housing in this Legislature, because, of course, there is.

Mr. Pilkey: I withdraw those remarks on the basis that I recognize there was some discussion but I think we must have a continuing forum, not just a forum where we discuss it during the Minister's estimates. We must have a continuing forum, because this problem has not been met.

It is not only in the Metro area, I suggest, Mr. Speaker; it is right across the length and breadth of this whole province, this question of housing. And it is critical. I raised it because I experienced problems in my own area. Now do not tell me that the backbenchers of the Conservative government are not meeting these same problems in their areas.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): All right, we shall not tell the member.

Mr. Pilkey: Okay, do not tell me, but I suspect very strongly that you do meet these problems and what better way to bring those problems to the attention of the government than through a committee instead of raising them continually here in the Legislature? As a matter of fact as I pointed out earlier, the forum is not provided on a continuous basis. So I support my colleague's motion and I think the government should give this suggestion top priority in terms of its implementation.

Mr. N. Whitney (Prince Edward-Lennox): Mr. Speaker, relative to the discussions that have been held, I would like to refer back to two years ago, the 1966 session I think it was, when I was chairman of government commissions. At that time, at our first meeting, the committee made suggestions as to the particular commissions it would like to have brought before the committee.

To the best of our ability we followed the suggestion that was made regardless of the party or the politics of the member making the suggestion. During that session, I believe we had some 15 government commissions or more before us, and I might say that one of the commissions that the Opposition members were most desirous to deal with was the water resources commission.

Our member on the water resources commission was kind enough to make arrangements to take us out to their laboratory and to have a detailed discussion with key officials, describing the whole situation. We saw the testing of water, and they made a most interesting day of it. Yet on that occasion there was just one Opposition member present. So consequently I do feel that the Opposition is not giving credit to the efforts made by the government to make information available. That concludes my remarks.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make just a few comments on the need for a housing and urban problems committee. One area that has not yet been touched and one that is creating great problems throughout this province is the matter of tenancy. This would be a committee where tenants throughout the province could come to air their views and to explain to the government the cruel conditions of tenancy that are presently being forced upon them.

There is a great need for reform; there is a need for a place where people of this province can come and explain to this government—which is obviously so far out of touch—the great problems they are being confronted with at this time. And I urge every government member, and especially those who come from urban areas, to reflect for a moment about the problems of tenancy in the areas from which they come and to support the formation of a committee on housing and urban problems.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Scarborough West.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I would like the government and the Prime Minister to realize that the sub-amendment placed by the New Democratic Party today springs from the overwhelming magnanimity which we have for the government on occasion. It is the milk of human kindness, Mr. Prime Minister, which charges through our veins.

The fact of the matter is, Mr. Speaker, that one must exercise a little compassion for this government because it will be brought down in the next three years by the disintegration in its ranks around urban problems and housing—make no mistake about it.

What we are trying to do, Mr. Speaker, with that beneficence which is characteristic of social democrats, is to provide a certain funnel for the obvious public discontent which animates this area, and I must say, Mr. Speaker, that there is a magnificent obtuseness on the part of the government in this field.

The fact that the Ontario housing corporation no longer functions in any meaningful way; the moment this committee was raised in the House the Minister of Trade and Development fled for his very life; the—

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I advise the member and the members of the House that I had a note from the Minister who had an appointment in Trenton which he had to keep and, therefore, had to leave.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I accept that and I hope that he is building a house in Trenton. It would be a refreshing turn of events.

The Minister of Municipal Affairs has busied himself frantically with paper work in order to avoid joining the issue, Mr. Speaker, and the Prime Minister himself trembles quietly in his seat because he knows, as all of us know, that the sands of time are running out around the issue of urban problems.

Mr. Speaker, the Ontario housing corporation no longer functions. The area of low rental housing has not been adequately attended to. The HOME plan is exposed everywhere through the province of Ontario as a ludicrous fantasy on the part of government. It is evident, in terms of the tenant situation here, even in metropolitan Toronto, that that is reaching an explosive ignition point.

For its own sake, let alone for the sake of the people of the province, the government would be wise to allow a committee on housing and urban problems so that there can be some frontal coping with the situation. That is what we are asking for, Mr. Speaker, and that is why we support this sub-amendment.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order! Order!

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, in rising to support this amendment, I think that every member of this House knows of the need for compassion in this area we are talking about. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that if I ever have a need for a heart transplant, I hope to get John Robarts', because it has never been used.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order! Order!

Mr. Sargent: When pay day comes again next election—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Is that the way the hon. member is going to get my heart?

Mr. Sargent: —this will be one of the key points in the re-election or defeat of the government. Today will be a day to remember if you vote against this amendment.

Mr. Speaker: Is there any other member who wishes to speak to the motion or the amendments? Then we will vote, of course first on the second amendment moved by Mrs. Renwick, seconded by Mr. Peacock, that the motion made by Mr. Reilly be amended by adding thereto the following: "housing and urban problems committee".

The House divided on the further amendment to the motion made by Mrs. Renwick, which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment lost.

We now come to the main motion.

Mr. Reilly moves, seconded by Mr. Hodgson (Victoria-Haliburton), that standing committees of this House for the present session be appointed as follows:

1. Agriculture and food committee.
2. Education and university affairs committee.
3. Government commissions committee.
4. Health committee.
5. Highways and transport committee.
6. Legal and municipal committee.
7. Labour committee.
8. Natural resources and tourism committee.
9. Private bills committee.
10. Privileges and elections committee.
11. Public accounts committee.
12. Social, family and correctional services committee.
13. Standing orders and printing committee.

which said committees shall severally be empowered to examine and enquire into all such matters and things as may be referred to them by the House and to report from time to time their observations and opinions thereon with power to send for persons, papers and records.

As many as are in favour of the motion will please say "aye," as many as are opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the "ayes" have it.

I declare the motion carried.

Mr. Reilly: Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by Mr. Hodgson (Victoria-Haliburton), that a select committee of 15 members be appointed to prepare and report, with all convenient despatch, lists of the members to compose the standing committees ordered by the House, such committee to be composed as follows: Mr. Olde, chairman; Mrs. Pritchard; Messrs. Carruthers, Farquhar, Gilbertson, Henderson, Newman (Ontario South), Price, Rollins, Rowe, Smith (Nipissing), Stokes, Winkler, Yakabuski and Young.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Introduction of bills.

Mr. A. E. Reuter (Waterloo South): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of privilege. My point, sir, has to do with an issue of the Globe and Mail dated today, Wednesday, November 20, and a picture that appears on the front page of the third section of the issue that was circulated last evening, sir.

Mr. Lewis: The member has never been so popular.

An hon. member: All friends of yours.

Mr. Reuter: It includes myself having a private little friendly conversation with two members of the New Democratic Party, but my point, sir—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That will teach the hon. member.

Mr. Reuter: My point, sir, has to do with the caption that appears below the picture. I want to set the records straight, sir, that my name is not Jack Stokes, I do not represent the people of Thunder Bay, nor am I a member of the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Speaker, it may well be, sir, that my point of privilege is expressed to the House on behalf of the New Democratic Party as well as myself, because I am sure, sir, that they realize full well that I am a true blue Conservative, one of those tried and true fully loyal Tories. I doubt very much that they would want the impression that has been conveyed by the picture to hold true that such a tried and true Tory is in fact, sir, a member of the caucus. I simply want to set that record straight.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Prime Minister.

What are the dates for the federal-provincial conferences on the constitution and on tax matters? Secondly, can arrangements be made for me to attend these conferences as an observer?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, there is a constitutional conference which, I believe, is on December 17, 18 and 19. There is another meeting to be held of the Ministers of finance, but I do not believe any date has been set for that.

As far as your attendance at these meetings as an observer is concerned—frankly, I have had no communications from Ottawa as to what the procedural arrangements will be. I can assure you however that my attitude in these matters has not changed from the Confederation of Tomorrow conference. I will be proposing to the federal government that these conferences be open to the press, open to the television cameras.

We have nothing to hide when we go to these conferences and I would like to see the meeting of the Ministers of finance opened to the press too, so that we are going to—

An hon. member: Let the people see.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I do not have the responsibility of conferences convened by the federal authorities but if it can be arranged, I would be delighted to have you there as an observer. I would be delighted to make the same arrangements for the leader of the New Democratic Party.

We will be discussing matters of great moment to our people and I think that they deserve the fullest attention that is humanly possible to give them. I would like to think that we would involve the people of the country in these matters to the greatest extent we can and all my efforts will be directed to that end.

Mr. Nixon: If I might ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

The conference on fiscal matters is attended only by Treasurers and not by the Prime Ministers as well?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, that is so. In some provinces the leader of the government is also the Treasurer—I believe Mr. Bennett is his own finance Minister, but—

Mr. Nixon: But in this case you do not expect to attend?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: No, I do not, really. Although if I think it might be the thing to do—I would not close the door to the fact that I would not go, but it is really called as a meeting of finance Ministers.

I recall when we set up the tax structure committee, that ill-fated committee that is now being talked about to be reconstituted, I hope with some better effect than last time. At that time I asked, I believe, to be put on that committee as well as the Treasurer, in order that I could attend the meetings. I do not think there would be any objection to the leader of the government going, but it is scheduled as a meeting of Ministers of finance.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy and Resources Management.

Is Ontario Hydro's atomic generator plant at Douglas Point now commissioned?

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): Mr. Speaker, it has frequently been explained to this House that it is misleading to refer to the nuclear power generation station at Douglas Point as an Ontario Hydro atomic generator plant. It is still owned for the federal government by Atomic Energy of Canada Limited and supplies power to the Ontario Hydro system at an agreed rate.

The answer to the question as to whether this plant is commissioned is "yes".

Mr. Nixon: The Minister might give us the date of that commissioning.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, the station was commissioned on September 26.

Mr. Nixon: Then it would be incorrect, Mr. Speaker—if I may be permitted another supplementary question—to refer to that plant as a part of the Ontario Hydro system?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, this plant is not a part of the Ontario Hydro system.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I may have misled you. I note you say that this conference is on December 16, 17 and 18. I may well have said 17, 18 and 19, but it is December 16, 17 and 18.

Mr. Nixon: I have a question for the hon. Minister of Health.

When did the Minister receive the report of the investigation into air pollution at Dunnville and when will that report be tabled in the Legislature?

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Speaker, I have not officially received the report yet. When it went to the printers about three weeks ago I was given a draft copy—that is the typewritten copy, not completely corrected. I expect that it will be tabled in the House either the last week of this month or the first week of December. That is the date I am advised the printers will have it finished.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, a question for the hon. Minister of Labour.

Will the hon. Minister of Labour report to the House on the state of the strike between the Peterborough Examiner newspaper and the Toronto Newspaper Guild, sir, and advise the Legislature when he will bring the parties together to resume negotiations?

Secondly, is it a fact that the guild's request for a union security clause, which is now standard in most collective agreements of this character, is proving an obstacle to negotiations?

Hon. D. A. Bales (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question from the hon. leader of the Opposition, it is the practice of the conciliation branch to review the strike situations throughout the province almost on a daily basis, in order that we may determine what assistance can be given to the parties to help them resolve their disputes. This has been done in reference to the Peterborough situation. I cannot say at this time when the parties will be brought directly together again to resume negotiations.

In reference to the second part, there are a number of issues outstanding in reference to this matter between the parties. It would really be inappropriate for me to attempt to judge publicly the relative importance of those particular issues because they concern the parties themselves.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Minister would be prepared to say whether or not this union security clause is one of the matters at variance?

Hon. Mr. Bales: Mr. Speaker, I think it is fair to say that it is one of a number of issues.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, before asking my question, may I express my appreciation to the Prime Minister for indicating that an observer status can be granted to Opposition leaders and that it will be accorded to me also. He answered the question before I had an opportunity to ask it, for once.

My first question is to the Attorney General. Can the Attorney General advise the House whether the Ontario Law Reform Commission report with regard to landlords and tenants will be made available during this session and, if so, can the Attorney General give the House an approximate date on which such a report might be expected?

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, I expect the report in the immediate future—by that I mean very shortly.

I know that the research and study leading to the preparation of that report has been done. I might perhaps let the hon. member for York South know that I asked the law reform commission some months ago to devote special attention to the field of landlord and tenant law as part of their overall study on the real property—which is the study they are doing—and the chairman agreed to that. That work has proceeded with despatch.

I may say this—I know that the report is now in the course of preparation and I would feel it can be prepared in a matter of days, I would think. To say that we might get it this month, I am not sure, but very shortly.

Mr. MacDonald: My second question, Mr. Speaker, is to the Minister of Lands and Forests.

Has the government instituted expropriation procedures to increase park facilities along the Lake Erie lakefront?

Secondly will the government take steps to open the Michael road in Humberstone township, especially at this time when the Provincial Gas Company is laying a line along it?

Third, what steps has the government taken to avoid repeated violations of public rights by fencing being run out into the water by adjoining property owners?

Fourth, is the government giving any consideration to the development of the east Erie lakefront into a continuous green belt joining the Niagara River and Welland Canal?

Hon. R. Brunelle (Minister of Lands and Forests): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. member for York South:

Question number 1—the answer is “yes”.

Number 2—opening of road allowances is under the jurisdiction of the municipalities.

Number 3—the government is not aware of any violations of public rights by fencing. If unauthorized occupation of Crown land is discovered, remedial action is taken.

Number 4—although mention has been made of such a development, no detailed proposals are under consideration at this time. The greatest need would seem to be acquisition and development of land for parks purposes in that area.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, with regard to point three, may I ask the Minister a supplementary question? Since it is widely alleged that this goes on all the time, is it not a legitimate proposition for the law enforcement agencies to check it continuously—the running of fences out into the water?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: I would say, Mr. Speaker, that this matter is under active consideration and we should have some answers on this matter at a later date.

Mr. MacDonald: My following question, Mr. Speaker, is to the Minister of Agriculture and Food.

1. Are only two of the nine members of the cream producers marketing board actually cream producers at this time?

2. Do the regulations permit of such massive representation by non-producers?

3. If not, what does the Minister propose to do about it?

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food): Mr. Speaker, in reply to this question, I am not aware as to the number of cream producers on the cream producers marketing board. The hon. member says there are only two of them who are actual producers—this may be the case—three, the hon. member says, as of elections yesterday. I am not worried about this.

I do know that the regulations that established the cream producers marketing board some years ago intended that the members should be actual cream producers.

There are something like 13,000 cream producers in the province of Ontario. As a matter of fact, one of these men, quite by chance yesterday, happened to be seated next to me at the cream producers' lunch at their annual meeting. He mentioned to me that he was no longer a cream producer and he suggested to his board—that is to the producers in his zone—that he should be relieved of his responsibilities, but, he said, “they simply said to me, ‘you have the time now to attend these meetings’.”

I would like to point out through you, Mr. Speaker, to the hon. members of the House, that these 13,000 cream producers in this province generally speaking run one-man farms. They do not have a lot of help around them. They are not specialized farms. Cream production really is sort of a side issue to the main objective of the farm.

It is very difficult for these men to get away to meetings either in their own county, their own zone, or in the provincial organization. So they have, of their own volition, suggested that those men, who have contributed so much throughout the years in the direction of the programme, might continue in their office as provincial directors on the marketing board.

I am sure the leader of the New Democratic Party would not want The Department of Agriculture and Food to step in and suggest to these men that they were no longer competent. They are competent, because they have had, in many instances, a lifetime of experience, not only in the production of farm separated cream, but in the development of a programme which, through its own promotion, has created the fact that butter is perhaps in the least surplus position of any of the dairy products in Canada today.

They have done a magnificent job of promotion of their product. I would say that the cream producers of this province have not only promoted the use of butter on a very large scale, but they have held off the market sizeable quantities of skim milk which could have gone into dry powder and further aggravated the enormous surplus of this which we have in Canada today.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, by way of a supplementary question. Do the regulations permit of a non-producer sitting as a director?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: The regulations, as I understand them, do not specifically say that it must be a producer. They imply that it should.

Mr. Speaker: In view of the impending departure of the Prime Minister on an appointment, I would ask that those members who have questions of the Prime Minister, beginning with the hon. member for Sarnia, be given the floor. May I have the agreement of the other members for that? Thank you. The hon. member for Sarnia.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): Mr. Speaker, my question directed to the hon. Premier: Will the Premier advise if he will permit a delegation from the council of the city of Sarnia to discuss with him the proposed designation of the Sarnia area by the Ontario Water Resources Commission?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member wrote me about this on October 30. It so happens, I have a reply ready for him today, which I will send across the floor to him. As it is a local matter, it is all explained in the letter and I will not take up the time of the House.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member for Grey-Bruce wish to ask any questions?

Mr. Sargent: A question for the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker: (1) Would the Prime Minister assure me and the people of Grey-Bruce that the Ontario Hospital Services Commission, will not close any hospitals in our area; and (2) Will the Prime Minister assure me that in the future the OHSC will let the people decide before any hospital changes are made in their areas?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I would say the answer to both questions is "no". I cannot give the member any assurance of what the Ontario Hospital Services Commission might do in the exercise of the powers and discretions given to it in the legislation which established it.

Certainly, as far as the second question is concerned, ". . . let the people decide before any hospital changes are made in their area?", the whole concept of what the member is getting at there, I assume, is before any change is made in any hospital, any place in this province, you would have to have a vote of the people concerned.

Of course, that idea is completely ridiculous. I would have to say in answer to both the questions that I cannot give any assurance that the Ontario Hospital Services Commission will not order the closing of hospitals they may not consider adequate to provide health care. I just could not give such an assurance.

Mr. Sargent: In that regard, Mr. Speaker, either the member for Grey South, or the Prime Minister, will have to eat their words then.

Mr. Speaker: Order! If the hon. member has any further questions—

Mr. Sargent: A supplementary question then, Mr. Speaker, of the Prime Minister: Will the Prime Minister agree that these people pay the same rates for hospitalization as other people; that they have to drive 20 or 30 miles to a hospital in the winter time; and that the OHSC is a commission not responsible to the people? The Prime Minister will have to eat those words some time.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member wish to ask any more of the questions he has filed?

Mr. Sargent: A question of the Prime Minister: Will the government agree to an immediate outside audit to determine the exact financial position of the affairs of the Ontario government because of the financial nightmare facing the province?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, we do not face a financial nightmare. I have no intention of introducing any outside auditors. There will be an interim financial statement furnished in the normal course of events, so the answer is "no".

Mr. Bullbrook: Mr. Speaker I wonder if the hon. Prime Minister would permit me a supplementary now since I have received his epistle.

Mr. Speaker: Not until after the hon. member has completed his series of questions to the Prime Minister.

Mr. Bullbrook: I am sorry, I thought my colleague was finished.

Hon. W. D. McKeough (Minister of Municipal Affairs): The hon. member was wishful.

Mr. Sargent: Supplementary to this, in the Throne Speech it said "full disclosure". We are asking for a full disclosure in an outside audit. Will the Prime Minister go along and back up the Throne Speech in this regard then?

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member any further questions?

Mr. Sargent: Yes, I have, but he should answer the supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will realize that supplementary questions are answered only at discretion.

Mr. Sargent: He has no heart.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member would go on to his next question.

Mr. Sargent: Another question along the same line: Will the government then call an immediate probe into the ten per cent increase of the Ontario Hydro this year?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: No, I will not.

Mr. Sargent: That is all. I have some further questions but—

Mr. Speaker: Only to the Prime Minister. The hon. member for Sarnia.

Mr. Bullbrook: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am wondering if I would be in a position to advise the people of Sarnia that their council will be permitted a delegation before the Prime Minister before there is a designation of the area by the Ontario Water Resources Commission?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, there are a whole series of meetings going on at the present time and when these are completed and we see what the situation is, then we can decide whether there would be any point in receiving a delegation from the city. Not that I do not want to—if it would do any good I will—but at the moment there have been no decisions made, so it would be simply a matter of presenting a point of view, which I believe I already have.

Mr. Bullbrook: If I might, would the Prime Minister entertain one supplementary question? Does he recall that in my letter of October 30 to him, I gave him my considered opinion that, in my judgment, the delegation had some points of substance to bring to the attention of the Prime Minister and his Cabinet colleagues?

Now, can I not have an assurance from the government that before there is a designation—this is of vital importance to the people in my area—that they will at least have the opportunity of meeting with the Prime Minister?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Yes, certainly.

Mr. Bullbrook: All right. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Except for the hon. member for High Park, is there any other member I have missed who has a question of the Prime Minister?

The hon. member for High Park has the floor for that, and for two other questions, so that he may leave the House also.

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Prime Minister: Does the government intend to reimburse Mrs. Janet Gurman for her financial losses caused by the government's closing of her nursing home?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: No.

Mr. Shulman: May I ask a supplementary? Is the government giving any consideration to any help in re-establishing Mrs. Gurman?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Not that I am aware of.

Mr. Shulman: I have two questions for the Attorney General, Mr. Speaker. Will the Attorney General intervene in the case of Larry Botrie, whose family was refused compensation as a result of his death which occurred while he was attempting to aid the police?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, no, there is no intention to intervene in the matter. The application was heard by the law compensation board and the unanimous judgment was delivered that compensation was not allowable.

Mr. Shulman: Will the Attorney General allow a supplementary question?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes.

Mr. Shulman: Does the Attorney General feel that the judgment which was handed down was in line with the remarks and the intentions he expressed here in his estimates last year?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I welcome the supplementary question. I think perhaps I might be permitted to say that when this legislation establishing the compensation board was introduced last year, I believe, I did indicate that, in our consideration of it, we considered it perhaps as a preliminary step in this whole matter of compensation to victims of crime or those assisting in the enforcement of law.

I am aware, of course, of the comments of the Hon. Mr. McRuer in his report on civil rights. I did say, too, I believe, and I think my remarks are in Hansard, either in my estimates or at the time the board was set up, to the effect that I felt the language of the Act as it stood was wide enough to permit a discretion in certain cases where a policeman was not actually present, but this particular case I think went beyond that. There was no assistance to the policeman; it was an attempt to get to a phone to call police. So that if you opened it to that extent, you would be really compensating a victim of crime where many cases of that kind would arise.

I think I am at liberty to say that the whole matter of compensation to victims of crime is still being reviewed as a matter of policy of government.

Mr. Shulman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, I have a second question, sir: Does the government intend to reimburse Magistrate Gardhouse for legal expenses incurred in the hearing into his conduct?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, the answer is "no." Application was made by counsel for Magistrate Gardhouse after the hearing was concluded and the application was refused.

Mr. Shulman: Will the Attorney General accept a supplementary question?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes.

Mr. Shulman: Why?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I would say this was a matter of involving the administration of justice in which with respect to one of those persons who came before the inquiry—his conduct was called in question—

I did not want to have to say this in the House because I well realize that Magistrate Gardhouse was found not guilty of anything wrongful in his conduct. The commissioner, nonetheless, did say his conduct was indiscreet. Notwithstanding that, he was immediately re-instated by the Attorney General to his position. But in the circumstances, it was not felt that he should be entitled to have his legal costs paid.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough East has the floor.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I have questions of the Minister of Education. Does The Department of Education have a standard purchasing policy for equipment that is used in secondary schools which have technical programmes? Is there a policy for tendering for all such equipment? Do schools require a course of study outlined before such equipment is purchased?

Hon. W. G. Davis (Minister of Education): Mr. Speaker, the policies with respect to purchasing and tendering are the responsibility, of course, of the local boards. The way we do this is that the department pays a grant on the receipted invoices from the boards for technical equipment. This has been basically under the federal-provincial agreement until, I guess, about a year ago last October. The manual of school business procedures sets out the maximum approval which the department will give for equipment in any given shop.

For example, for an electrical shop the maximum is $40,000. The department pays a grant of 75 per cent of the boards' expenditures up to that particular limit and if the boards purchase more for any particular shop, in excess of this limit, they pay for the total amount themselves.

An equipment list is submitted to the department for this approval and the list is examined for reasonable consistency with the course of study that it is to relate to, making some allowance for special local needs in some parts of the province. The suggested course of study for technical schools is available to the boards and is used as a reference in purchasing equipment.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, if I could ask a supplementary question, or just ask the Minister if he would respond to my question—is there a policy for tendering for all such equipment?

Hon. Mr. Davis: The tendering is done by the local boards. We do not tender for the equipment. The local boards tender for the equipment the same way they do for their other procedures.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, then I am correct—again in the form of a question. Does the department not require proper tendering procedures before a specific board can get a grant from The Department of Education?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Well, Mr. Speaker, we require the board to carry on their responsibilities in the way they would for any purchase of any equipment or school supplies, or for construction of the facility. It is done in most instances, of course, by way of tender and this policy would apply throughout.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I have another question for the Minister of Education. Is it the Minister's intention to propose (a) an amendment to The Labour Relations Act so that teachers are no longer excluded from the right to bargain collectively and, (b) to introduce new legislation outlining special bargaining procedures for teachers and trustees, including clauses which would first, compel both parties to call on a provincial government mediator if negotiations break down; secondly, have the dispute settled by compulsory arbitration if the mediator fails to settle the dispute; and third, forbid both strikes and lockouts in this specific category?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I am just going by memory here. I do not believe we have had any specific representations on these two questions and the Minister is not considering introduction of amendments related to these two questions.

Mr. Speaker: The member still has the floor.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, a third question for the Minister of Education. How many school trustee candidates have been nominated for the new school boards created by Bill 44, and how many of these candidates attended the series of conferences planned for them during September, October and the first two weeks of November by The Department of Education to outline to them the role of the new boards?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to tell the hon. member how many candidates have been nominated because the election is to be held on December 2. We have no way of knowing this at this stage. I believe that the majority of nominations were held perhaps on Monday of this week.

I can only say from personal experience in attending one or two of the conferences that were held. They were not sponsored really by The Department of Education — they were sponsored by the Ontario trustees council with the co-operation of The Department of Education and the OTF.

Really, they were initiated to a substantial degree by the Ontario trustees council and in attending those gatherings I gained the impression that a number of the trustees who were involved in the conference, and this goes back some two to three months, were interested in becoming candidates. Now, whether in fact they did, I do not know.

To give the hon. member some indication, I think the total number to date of those who attended these conferences is in the neighbourhood of around 950 and the majority of these would be trustees. But to try and relate how many of the 950 actually are candidates for the forthcoming election, I do not know. But I hope, Mr. Speaker, the House will permit me to refer to these elections.

The member has given me an opportunity to make a general observation that we are encouraged to date by the numbers of people who are seeking election and, more importantly, from what little information we have, the interest of these people in running, and I want to make this further point: I am very anxious that the people of this province respond on December 2 and vote for these candidates because I think it is in their own interests to see that there is a great deal of interest and involvement in these elections that will take place on December 2.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question arising out of what the Minister has said. Am I correct in understanding, Mr. Speaker, that only persons who were already school trustees could get into these conferences, or were they open to someone who was thinking of the possibility of becoming a candidate but who was not, at that time, a school trustee? Were these open to these people or was it open only to people who were already school trustees?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, as I say, we did not organize these particular seminars. The invitations as I recall, and I am only going by memory, were initiated or developed by the trustees council and I would just assume that the bulk of these invitations would go to people who were members of the ISOC committees, and who were active trustees. I just do not know how you would invite them to a conference whether they have made up their minds to run or not. I think it would be impossible to do.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Sudbury has the floor.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Attorney General. Would the Attorney General advise the House when he might be expected to fill the office of Crown attorney for the district of Sudbury, which office has been vacant since July 14? When such appointment is made will the Crown attorney for the district of Sudbury have the additional responsibilities of acting as Crown attorney for the districts of Parry Sound, Temiskaming and Manitoulin?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I thought the hon. member might have been aware that Mr. Spencer Stewart was appointed Crown attorney for Sudbury, I think about a week ago. He is—

Mr. Sopha: Nobody in Sudbury knows.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well—

Mr. Sopha: He said this morning that he does not know it. How do you like that?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I am sure he knows and he, of course, has been acting there and is the appointed Crown attorney for Sudbury. With respect to the other part of the question, for the time being at least, we would expect the Crown attorney and the assistant Crown attorney in Sudbury to serve particularly Manitoulin, at least, for the time being and Parry Sound and some of the Temiskaming area.

Mr. Sopha: He is going to be a busy fellow.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: He is not going to do it all alone as the hon. member knows. He will have sufficient assistance to see that the work is done and I think that I should point out to the House that the volume of criminal work on Manitoulin, for instance, is extremely small. Likewise, in Parry Sound—there is one day a week perhaps for the time being. But, these matters are being looked at and reviewed and the House may rest assured the Crown attorney will have sufficient assistance to see that the work is done properly.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question? May I invite the Attorney General to inform the Sudbury Star, a loyal supporter of this government, forthwith that the Crown attorney has been appointed?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, just on that point, I may say that the hon. member for Nickel Belt at least received the information and I know that the Sudbury Star has been informed.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Peterborough.

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, in view of the long discussions we have had here about committees and the mythology of the Prime Minister in regard to what motivates them, I think, possibly, this question should be addressed to the member for Carleton East (Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence).

However, I shall have to address it to the Minister of Education. Will the Minister refer to the Hall-Dennis report, or at least encourage the chairman and members of the education committee, to refer to the Hall-Dennis report early in the session and encourage the committee to hear witnesses forthwith?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member will recall in the Throne Speech, it was suggested that there should be, and will be, consideration of the Hall-Dennis report. I personally would have no objection whatsoever to the committee considering the report. I am not sure, however, of the phraseology, "the calling of witnesses". I am sure there are many people who would like to appear and give their views and so on, but I do not know that one would wish to refer to them as witnesses per se. I think they are people wishing to make a contribution and this, perhaps, could be a very excellent way of coming to grips with some of the suggestions in the Hall-Dennis report. I have no objections whatsoever.

I should point out to the member for Scarborough East while I am on my feet—and it is related to this, Mr. Speaker—when he was concerned about my lack of appearance at the education committee during the discussion of Bill 44. This was mentioned to one or two of his colleagues and one or two other members opposite, and the feeling was that the Minister, during these presentations, should perhaps absent himself so that they would not feel at all inhibited, as some of them did.

Mr. Bullbrook: The Minister never feels inhibited.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Oh, well I did, Mr. Speaker, I recall very well attending all those when the final legislation was finished and I was even here the last two or three weeks of the session when I was going to discuss some other matters with the member for Scarborough East, but I could not find him.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that answers the question.

Mr. Pitman: I think, Mr. Speaker, it more than answers the question. I wonder if I could ask the Minister whether he would be good enough to send a copy of his remarks to the member for Carleton East so that we might get this education committee started, and so that we might thereby get this report before the Legislature.

A second question to the Minister, Mr. Speaker. Can the Minister indicate whether the Keiller Mackay commission on religious teaching in public schools will be brought before the House during this session?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I would answer, hopefully, "yes".

Mr. Pitman: Mr. Speaker, if I might ask a supplementary question: Perhaps the Minister will not remember, but this was the first question that I asked him the first day of the last session, and I am wondering whether he can explain the reason why there is such a long delay on this matter of such great importance?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I think the answer to the question is rather obvious. The hon. member has answered it himself; it is a matter of great importance and it has taken the committee a great deal of time to listen to all those who wish to make representations. I would think, not being a member of the committee, that it will be one of the most difficult reports that any group of individuals have been asked to write and I do know they have been working very diligently.

As I related to the House at the last session, they did run into delay because of the passing away of two members of the committee which was most unfortunate, and all that I can say on this occasion is that, hopefully, it will be here for consideration in this session.

Mr. Pitman: As a supplementary question, will the Minister have this report passed on once again to the education committee? I see the member for Carleton East is now in his seat.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I think what we do with the report really should wait until we get the report. Then we can have some discussion as to how we might treat it.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sarnia.

Mr. Bullbrook: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Attorney General. Will the Attorney General advise what disciplinary action or corrective measures have been taken by the Ontario Provincial Police relevant to the officer or officers who had issued a directive establishing a quota system of summonses, or the laying of a certain number of charges?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, if you will pardon me for a moment, I had this question before me and I have been occupied with something else. I had considered it of considerable importance and I have prepared an answer to this question.

I would say that the officer who issued the particular document has been interviewed by the commissioner, interviewed immediately, and I am sure that matter has been made clear to him. But, Mr. Speaker I must disagree with the principles stated by the hon. member for Sarnia which he attributes to the nature of that directive. The document in its complete context is based upon the Ontario Provincial Police programme of selective traffic enforcement, which is not, and never has been, anything like a so-called quota system.

It is a programme based upon accident statistics designed to guide policemen in traffic law enforcement so that appropriate attention can be given to the enforcement of the traffic laws that appear to be closely involved with traffic fatalities suffered on our highways.

In the particular case that generated this question, Mr. Speaker, little publicity has been given to the fact that the Ontario Provincial Police were directing their minds to the local and difficult situation in the interests of the travelling public, and that in the area concerned in 1968, from the date of the directive, 11 people have been killed in accidents. Eleven lives in those violent traffic accidents—that was against the statistic of six people in the same period last year, an increase of almost 100 per cent.

In the light of those facts, Mr. Speaker, the police were not pursuing a quota system and all that that suggests, but stressing to the police officers that these were selective methods of law enforcement to stop the slaughter on the highways. I think they would be grossly remiss, I may say, if they did not stress the need for that type of law enforcement.

Mr. Bullbrook: I am wondering, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. Attorney General would entertain a supplementary question in this connection? Is the Attorney General aware of a statement purportedly made by the OPP assistant commissioner Jack Whitty, and reported in the Toronto Star of November 12, 1968, as follows:

Whitty said one detachment officer, whom he refused to name, issued a directive that more charges were required from his staff.

Now, sir, my first supplementary: Is the Minister familiar with this? Second, does his department agree in principle with directives of that nature?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I am not familiar with it, Mr. Speaker. I may have seen the article but I do not recall it. As I take it—as it was read by the hon. member—he said that one detachment superintendent or officer had required more charges?

I think this still goes along with what I pointed out, that the effort of the Ontario Provincial Police was directed to the particular area of traffic law enforcement where they were concerned, as in this case, with the great increase in fatalities. It is not a case of just going out and laying any kind of a charge, but of seeing to the enforcement of the law where it relates to traffic fatalities on the highway.

Mr. Bullbrook: Is the Attorney General assuring this House that the Ontario Provincial Police, either in its hierarchy or its officers, at no time directs the officers of that department to issue more charges just for the sake of charges? That is the assurance I am interested in.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think I could give that assurance—that is as I understand it from the commissioner of the Ontario Provincial Police.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has other questions?

Mr. Bullbrook: I do not have any further questions.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sudbury East.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): I have a question for the Minister of Education. Does the Minister intend to amend The School Administration Act to include a provision for a transfer review board in each jurisdiction?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, there has been no decision on this matter as yet. The matter is still being discussed and will be again within the next four or five minutes. Some members of the OTF have been waiting since four o'clock to see the Minister; they are now in the gallery and I am sure on your behalf, Mr. Speaker, we would like to welcome them here. This is just how recent the discussions are.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Essex South.

Mr. D. A. Paterson (Essex South): Mr. Speaker, I have a few questions, the first to the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs. Does the hon. Minister have, under review, the policy whereby severances of land in rural areas from a parent to a member of the immediate family are to be changed? Will such allowances be continued if the party in question is to work on the farm; and further will this policy be changed if the party is working in another endeavour and only wishes to reside on the lot so severed?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, administrative policies are always under review and, because of the importance of equity in dealing with citizens who want to build homes for their families, the policies relating to the subdivision of land and the granting of consents is kept under particularly careful review. The main concerns are to ensure a good living environment, to avoid unduly high cost of services and to prevent urban sprawl from disfiguring the countryside, interfering with the agricultural economy and reducing the efficiency and safety of our roads.

In carrying out these policies, leniency has been shown where a single new lot is being created to accommodate a farmer who is retiring and whose son is taking over the operation of the farm. The same applies where a farmer's son who is helping to run the family farm decides to marry and set up his own home on the farm. There is no present intention of departing from this practice in bona fide cases.

I think question two is answered in that. Question three: As indicated, the current policy is to encourage residential development to locate in an area best suited to it and to avoid urban sprawl.

A family relationship in itself will be unlikely to justify departure from this policy. However, if the hon. member has any specific problems in this connection, I would be glad to have a look at them.

Mr. Paterson: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the hon. Minister of Agriculture and Food. Does the hon. Minister intend to introduce, in this session, an amendment to The Farm Products Marketing Act that will make permissive, regulations concerning acreage control, and provisions similar to those now pertaining to tobacco allowable on other agricultural products?

Second, is the hon. Minister negotiating with the province of Quebec and the federal government to minimize the imports of agricultural products that may flow into our province if our producers place voluntary limitations on the volume of their productions?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, first of all I would advise the hon. member that he would have to wait and see in reply to question (a). With regard to matter (b) it is a purely hypothetical situation. I would say this, that it is a matter of constant concern to our department and to myself personally. I have had many discussions with the Minister of Agriculture in the province of Quebec as well as with the federal government's Department of Agriculture, at ministerial level, concerning the problem of agricultural commodities flowing into the province of Ontario where there are now types of mandatory control on production of those commodities.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Huron-Bruce; does he need copies or has he his copy?

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): No, Mr. Speaker, I think I have the wording fairly—pretty close here. I have two questions, both directed to the Minister of Agriculture and Food.

Why is the cost of commercial fertilizer so high in Ontario in comparison to the United States prices, as reported by the Federation of Agriculture?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have not had time to look into this matter entirely. It is within the terms of reference of the farm income committee which, I assume, has already given that matter consideration. It is certainly within the terms of reference of the present farm income committee which has been designated to investigate all aspects of the corn industry.

I would assume it to be likely that farmers will avail themselves of the suggestion made by the federal Minister of Agriculture when he suggested to certain people that they should take advantage of the opportunities to purchase their fertilizer in the United States cheaper than they can in Canada according to their figures. There is no import restriction and there is no duty involved.

Mr. Gaunt: The other question, Mr. Speaker: Has the Minister referred the specific problem of the high cost of importing British and European made tractors into Canada, which was brought to the attention of the public at the annual meeting of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture, to the farm machinery committee?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Yes, Mr. Speaker, the Ontario farm machinery committee has a great deal of information concerning this price differential and I would say that, as well as other matters pertaining to this item that have been brought to our attention, some Ontario farmers, I understand, have already availed themselves of the opportunity of bringing in tractors from the United Kingdom by passing the normal channels.

I understand the Ontario Federation of Agriculture has compiled a document outlining how this can be accomplished.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Port Arthur has the floor.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs. Is the Minister prepared to review his decision that a plebiscite should not be held at the Lakehead to consider the Hardy report because of recent developments concerning the future of Fort William city and Neebing township?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The answer, Mr. Speaker, is "no".

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, if I might be permitted a supplementary question. Does this mean that the door is completely closed on the chance for the people in the Lakehead cities, who would be affected by amalgamation as proposed by the Hardy report, to vote on this matter? Is the door closed?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I have answered the question.

Mr. Knight: I did not hear the Minister.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister is not accepting a supplementary question on the basis that he has already answered the question.

Mr. Knight: He has already answered it. The door is closed. Thank you very much. I have a question now, Mr. Speaker, for the hon. Minister of Health. It is in three parts.

Part one: Is there a shortage of qualified personnel who are graduates of Bachelor of Science in nursing in the province? Would the Minister like all three questions, Mr. Speaker?

Part two: What is the salary cut proposed for 1969 for new nursing teachers who have completed the Bachelor of Science in nursing programmes?

Part three: Is the Minister prepared to institute an attractive bonus system to encourage more university graduates to enter nursing service as recommended by the Registered Nurses Association of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat at a loss to understand the first part of the hon. member's question. Any holder of the Bachelor of Science degree in nursing is, I presume, automatically qualified or she would not have that degree.

However, I think I know what the hon. member is getting at. There is a shortage of these people; 5.4 per cent of the almost 38,000 nurses actively engaged in nursing hold a Bachelor of Science degree in nursing. This amounts to just a little over 2,000 and we could use a great many more of them.

OHSC till the present time has—in reply to part two of the question—approved a salary differential or educational increment of $80 per month in recognition of the B.Sc.N. degree, and this is being provided for teachers in nursing. Nurses in nursing services in hospital with a similar degree, however, received an educational increment of only $50 per month and recently these two groups were equated and an educational increment of $55 per month granted to both: that is reducing those who were engaged in teaching in nursing by $25 per month. OHSC this year proposed an increase in the educational bonus of $5 per month for the nurse in hospital service who holds the bachelor degree, thus equating the increment to those in teaching positions in nursing. Both nurses hold the same academic qualifications and it has been believed, for some time, that they should both be paid the same salary increment in respect of this.

To number three: Two years ago, The Department of Health instituted a very attractive bursary system to encourage more nurses to take advanced training in all branches of nursing, but with particular emphasis on clinical nursing. We believe the educational bonus as just outlined is a reasonably attractive system, joined to the bursary system that is provided for in preparation for higher responsibility.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Downsview.

Mr. Singer: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Attorney General. What action does the Attorney General intend to take with respect to Chief James Mackey, the chief of the Metropolitan Toronto Police, and his admission on November 14, that his officers have seized privately owned wire tapping equipment during the previous two weeks—and the question should have gone on to say, that he admitted he had no authority to so act.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to take any action. The situation is that the material seized was, I think, four or five instances over a recent period of time where the Bell Telephone employees reported to the chief, or police authorities, that they had found electronic devices attached to their telephone lines.

They turned the material over to the police and reported the matter to them. There is no evidence and no way of finding out, at the moment at least, who this belonged to and, of course, nobody is coming forward to claim it. So it is just a matter of these things being reported—equipment which has been delivered to the police. I think there is nothing indicated that we should do at the moment.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. Is the Attorney General not shocked when the chief of police of the largest city in this province says "we have no authority to act as we did?" I would be shocked if I was the Attorney General.

Mr. MacDonald: He has no authority—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I do not know as I agree. I mean, I did not read what the chief of police said. There is a Telephone Act—

Mr. Singer: I am talking about the chief of police.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I am reciting the facts of the matter.

This was equipment found attached to telephone lines—found by telephone employees. It was turned over to the police. We do not know whose it is. Nobody is going to come forward to claim it. We can continue to investigate. It is against The Telephone Act, but what is to be done?

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to leave it, but what the Attorney General says is not in accordance with what the chief is quoted as having said: "We picked up five bugs in the last two weeks."

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, if I must pursue this.

In the last session, in public, in representations made to Ottawa we have requested, we have suggested, we have urged that there be a law against electronic eavesdropping, and that some provision be made for the police to do it under strict control. Now, if that law were passed—and I understand the Minister of Justice has made a statement he will produce such legislation, which I had also suggested should be national or federal, one law across the country. When we have that, then the chief of police will have the law he is perhaps looking for. But in the circumstances I recited, I do not know there is anything to be done.

Mr. Singer: One can only conclude the Attorney General is not concerned about chiefs of police breaking the law.

Mr. Speaker, I have another question for the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Would the Minister state the position of his department in the manner—this question is worded—of the vacancy, the anticipated vacancy in aldermanic representation of ward 3 in the city of Toronto?

And the second part of the same question: Has the Minister received any resolution from the city of Toronto council to suggest that there should be provision in The Municipal Act to permit a by-election to be held in this particular case and in any similar situation in the future and, if so, is he prepared to take any action?

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member would ask his question in the terms in which he submitted it and, if he did not add a further question when he submitted it this morning, he should not do so now, except by way of supplementary question.

The last question should not be taken by the Minister except as a supplementary question.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: In reply to the first question, Mr. Speaker, I would just say that as far as I am aware there is no vacancy for aldermen in the city of Toronto at the present time.

As far as the second question is concerned, the answer is "yes".

Mr. Speaker: The member for Windsor-Walkerville.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Labour—

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, with apology to my colleague, by way of a supplementary question, what action is the Minister prepared to take in answer to the resolution that he has received?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I received the resolution and I have written to them.

Mr. Singer: Is the Minister prepared to act on what they recommend?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: That matter is public knowledge. It has been quoted in the press.

Mr. Singer: Well, I am asking the Minister here.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Does the member want me to put it on record here?

Mr. Singer: Would the Minister tell us whether he is prepared to act or not?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I am prepared to act.

Mr. Singer: Is the Minister going to act in this session?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I have indicated so to the city of Toronto.

Mr. Singer: Then why did the Minister not say so, instead of shadow-boxing?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: It is in the paper. Does the member want everything repeated ten times?

Mr. Singer: What is the Minister hiding?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, why does he not answer the questions intelligently and then we would not get into this mess.

Mr. Singer: That is what I was asking for, Mr. Speaker, an intelligent answer.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to know. He added to the question all the way through it.

The second question, "Has the Minister received any resolution from Toronto?". My answer was "yes".

Why does not the member ask what my answer was, instead of going through all this gibberish and then coming up with innumerable supplementary questions?

An hon. member: And then he accused the Minister of shadow-boxing.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Yes, who is shadow-boxing who?

Mr. Speaker: Order! Perhaps the members will allow the member for Windsor-Walkerville, who has been very patient, to ask his questions now.

Mr. B. Newman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a question of the Minister of Labour and it reads as follows:

What steps is his department taking to assist the one thousand or so workers of the Ford Motor Company, Windsor, who will be on a temporary lay-off, which, for some, may last as long as one year? And, by the way, this lay-off will affect 451 people next week.

Hon. Mr. Bales: Mr. Speaker, the answer to the question of the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville:

The department, through its training services, will be supporting and co-operating with the federal manpower department in whatever steps it may take in response to the situation in Windsor. From the announcement that I received, this contemplated conversion will start next May.

Mr. B. Newman: If I may put a supplementary question, is not the department at present actively working on some type of programme for the 451 that will be laid off next week?

Hon. Mr. Bales: Mr. Speaker, the matter of 451 people had not come to my attention previously. I received notification of the conversion two days ago.

Mr. B. Newman: I will send over to the Minister the newspaper clipping that specifically indicates the numbers that will be laid off. And a lot of these, Mr. Speaker, do not qualify for supplementary unemployment insurance benefits, so they may find themselves severely handicapped.

A second question of the Minister: What steps is his department taking in an attempt to settle the three-month-old strike at the Dominion Forge Company in Windsor?

Hon. Mr. Bales: Mr. Speaker, my officials are keeping in close touch with the company so that we can render all assistance possible to them, and we have done this over a period of time.

Mr. B. Newman: Has the Minister not been called in by both labour and management in an attempt to settle this?

Hon. Mr. Bales: Mr. Speaker, I think I indicated that to you; we have been in close touch with them constantly on this.

Mr. B. Newman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Peacock: Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order which I have been holding on to for some time until the end of the question period, but I would like to put it to you now.

I felt myself to have been somewhat misled—and perhaps you yourself were—by the explanation given during our earlier discussion on the motion to establish a committee on housing and urban affairs, to the effect that the absence of the Minister of Trade and Development was due to his preparations for a trip to Trenton. It has just come to my attention, Mr. Speaker, that in fact he is on his way to preside over the inauguration of the Quaker Oats Company's entry into the frozen baked goods business. He will be participating in the enjoyment of cream puffs from a plant financed perhaps in part by his agency, instead of being in his place to deal with the business of housing when we were talking about it.

Mr. Speaker: It is unfortunate that the hon. member did not accept the explanation which I was able to give of the Minister's absence, which I believe was quite correct. It has been elaborated on, of course, by the hon. member.

At this time I would like to recognize a distinguished member of the House of Representatives of the Dominion of New Zealand, Mr. John Luxton, who is in Mr. Speaker's gallery, who, with his wife is returning from the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association gathering held in Nassau a short time ago.

Orders of the day.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will call the first order, the motion will be moved by the member for Prescott and Russell (Mr. Belanger) and seconded by the member for Fort William (Mr. Jessiman).

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: I just wish to explain to the members that I did not wish to bring them back at 2:30 tomorrow, and I had forgotten the exact wording of the Prime Minister's motion.

The House adjourned at 5:40 o'clock, p.m.

THE MUNICIPAL ACT

Hon. W. D. McKeough (Minister of Municipal Affairs) moves first reading of bill intitled, An Act to amend The Municipal Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, section 1 is a technical change; section 2 is the main reason for the bill. It straightens away the hours of voting on December 2 next, along with Bill 44. I sent a memorandum to all members of the Legislature, or a copy of the memorandum about this, and our notice to bring this bill in.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, there does not seem to be much competition on this side of the floor, but I do have a question for the Premier (Mr. Robarts).

Does Ontario Hydro status require it to get government approval before proceeding with its announced plan to build a $28 million head office to be located on the corner of University Avenue and College Street and to be completed in 1971? And if so, has the government granted, or is it considering, such approval?

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, section 38, subsection 1 of The Power Commission Act gives the Ontario Hydro Electric Power Commission authority to acquire land and erect any buildings it may deem necessary for its own purposes, and this can be done without any reference to the Lieutenant-Governor in council. Therefore, the answer to the first part of your question is "no". No sanction of this government is necessary for Hydro to proceed.

However, the member might be interested to know that no final decision has yet been reached by Hydro to go ahead with the building. They have owned the property since 1963. I am told that approval has been given for the complete design and working drawings, and no approval beyond that stage has been granted, but the building is being planned.

Hydro is presently paying out about $1.2 million a year in rentals for accommodation for their headquarters staff and, of course, this is the staff they propose to accommodate in this building. Their plans are related to what is foreseen as the expansion of Hydro up until, I believe, about 1990. This building, as it is being planned, will be larger than their immediate needs and the surplus space will be rented out until it is required by Hydro itself.

Members will know that our power requirements from Hydro are increasing at the rate of about ten per cent a year, which means in the next ten years they have to reproduce everything that we have been able to create in the history of Hydro to date. They foresee the need for this expansion and that is the basis of the planning of this building.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, if the Premier would permit a supplementary question.

Does he believe that that particular plot of ground in the heart of the capital city should be used for this purpose rather than directing the head office to be located outside the Metropolitan area?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I think, in the first place, I can only have a general opinion on the subject because I am not particularly conversant with the administrative problems. I do know however that they have a very large head office staff. They feel that it should be in this location, close to government. I do not see any reason why this site would not be suitable for them. This property is going to be used for offices. I suppose, if they do not build an office there, somebody else will and Hydro has installations of all kinds, sorts, sizes and shapes scattered all over this province and—

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): In other words, the Premier was going to—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: There is that great brain at work again.

Mr. Speaker, I find it difficult to understand the hon. member's interjections, but as I say, Hydro certainly has not concentrated its building in the city of Toronto. I do not know what the Toronto members think about this eternal running down of the capital city that takes place here.

Certainly, Hydro has a great number of installations in many, many different parts of the city and, if they think, in the interests of the efficiency of the operation of Hydro, their head office should be adjacent to Queen's Park, the centre of government and to the financial institutions of our province, I frankly do not see any objection to it.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, if the Premier would permit a further supplementary question.

I can see the validity of his point in having them close to the financial institutions because they are going to have a lot to do with them, but they are autonomous of government based on the Prime Minister's own comment. So, I would ask the Prime Minister, if in fact they decide to go ahead, would he use his authority, through the vice-chairman, to postpone this decision until the present fiscal nightmares recede?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I think that is inherent in what Hydro is doing. What they are doing is planning the building. They have not let any contracts. But it will take some considerable time to design it and the only control we have as a government, over the operation of Hydro is, of course, that we have to secure—we have to guarantee—

Mr. Nixon: We back every dollar they borrow.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: We have to guarantee every dollar they borrow. And while we are in this debate, which is far from the question, I can certainly assure the hon. members of this House that the borrowing policies, practices and the timing of borrowing by Hydro is very closely co-ordinated and worked out with the Treasurer and Treasury officials here. Because, if we are to have an orderly financing of the needs of this government and of Hydro, we need a high degree of co-operation.

This is what we have been trying to get with the federal government but have been unable to do so. But within those matters that we control, I can assure you there is a very high degree of co-operation.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Minister of Revenue (Mr. White).

Is the Minister reviewing Ontario's succession duty laws with a view to implementing the same exemptions to spouses as recently granted at the federal level?

Hon. J. H. White (Minister of Revenue): Mr. Speaker, all tax statutes are under review in the light of the Smith committee and the select committee reports.

Mr. Nixon: Oh, he is going to be a great Minister; he qualifies!

I am sure that such intensive review is necessary after the previous jurisdiction under the Treasurer has just been accomplished. We have to think of something to keep the new Minister busy and this might perhaps be as useful as anything else.

I would like to ask, Mr. Speaker, if the Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Brunelle), who is now in his seat could answer this question: Can the Minister report overall utilization figures for the provincial parks for 1968 compared to those figures for 1967?

Hon. R. Brunelle (Minister of Lands and Forests): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. leader of the Opposition, may I say that we are in the process of completing these figures and hope to have them available soon. We will be very pleased to supply a copy to his office.

Mr. R. D. Kennedy (Peel South): In view of the disastrous effects on people and property in the proximity of Malton airport, if the presently proposed expansion takes place, would the Prime Minister inform the House if the province can do anything to insure reconsideration by the federal government of this totally unacceptable scheme?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Humber has a similar question, which perhaps he will now place?

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): Yes, Mr. Speaker. My question of the hon. Prime Minister is:

As the Ontario spokesman for 1.5 million people who will be adversely affected by the extension of the Toronto International Airport, what is the Premier doing to have such an extension halted and, in the alternative, sir, promote the construction of a new international airport at Camp Borden with connecting GO transit lines to Toronto?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, in answer to both these questions, I would say first it is my understanding that the federal government is not bound by our zoning by-laws. Their powers of expropriation override any provincial power, and they are not bound by an open by-law. Against that background and the fact that international airports are entirely within the jurisdiction of the federal government, anything we do must be against that background of facts.

I have been asked to meet a group of ratepayers who will be affected and I propose to meet them. In the meantime, the government is looking very closely at all the various facts being produced by this situation. We are concerned with the living conditions of the people who reside in that area. Land values would be affected, as well as the comfort of living. I can assure you we intend to look after their interests in the best way that we can.

At the moment, there are at least five departments in this government who are interested in this whole proposition: The Department of Municipal Affairs; The Department of Highways; The Department of Health as far as pollution and noise, if I may put it that way, are concerned; The Department of Energy and Resources Management; and The Department of Transport.

We have been approached by officials of The Department of Transport of the federal government and we are in consultation with them. We are in the position, now, of trying to sort out the ramifications of the proposals the federal government has made. As far as I am aware no final decisions have been made. The whole matter is being investigated and we are gathering up all the information being produced from various sources, and advanced by various interested groups.

We have been approached by the federal government and we intend to sit down with them and discuss the whole matter. Then we will decide what position we, as a government, will take. I make these comments against the background of the fact that it is a federal responsibility. That their jurisdiction in expropriation, in zoning by-laws and in land-use policies, overrides that of the province or the municipalities involved.

Mr. Ben: Will the Prime Minister accept a supplementary question?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Yes.

Mr. Ben: Do I take it then that, aside from the concern expressed by five departments, the Prime Minister's government has made no statement to the federal government expressing its objection to the proposed expansion of the Malton International Airport?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I can only repeat what I have said. We have made no positive statement that we, as a government, object to what the federal government is proposing. What we are doing at this stage is sitting down with the federal government to examine all the ramifications and effects of what they are proposing. Those proposals may be changed; they may be altered; we do not know. Certainly, I am informed that no final decision has been made by the federal government.

In other words, the whole proposition is presently being examined and we are taking part in that examination to see how it affects the interests of this government in the various departments I have mentioned. For instance, The Department of Highways must, of course, be very interested because of the highways we have built to provide service to Malton. We do not know whether they will be adequate, for instance, if this expansion takes place.

In addition to that, there are the interests which I believe the two hon. members who asked the questions are trying to put forward, and there are the interests of the residents about the area who will be affected, and of course we are very concerned in their interests in this matter. That is why I am making arrangements to meet with them so that they may tell this government their exact points of view. Every time you pick up a newspaper there is another report from somebody dealing with this matter. I do not think all the information that will be available about the matter is necessarily before us at the moment. When we have all these opinions—and even before that—we will confer with the federal government and then decide what our position is.

Mr. Ben: The Minister is saying there is no foresight on the part of the government.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sarnia has the floor.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Premier.

Would the Premier advise whether his government has established a policy relative to uniform municipal taxation with respect to international bridges, as mentioned by the Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. McKeough) to the private bills committee of this House during the first session?

If the answer to the above is yes, would the Premier advise whether his government contemplates proposing legislation in this session with respect thereto?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I do not know that I am exactly aware of what the Minister of Municipal Affairs said to the private bills committee of the House; on the other hand, I can tell the member where the matter stands at the moment.

As I explained to the House last year, in Ontario we have about every form of arrangement in international bridges that the mind of man has been able to devise. It is once again a split jurisdiction. The federal government is involved in international bridges because of their international aspects. We are involved, of course, because the Canadian end of the bridge will be in some municipality or in some part of the province of Ontario. I have been in communication with the former Prime Minister of Canada, and the present Prime Minister of Canada, and we are in the process of instituting studies which will cover not just the one bridge the hon. member who asked the question happens to be interested in—and I know the problem in his riding—but we have a whole series of international bridges extending across the St. Lawrence River, the Niagara River, the Detroit River and the Fort Frances—is it the St. Mary's River?—and the river at Fort Frances, in any event.

So we find it necessary to take a rather broad approach to this problem. These studies are not complete, and therefore I would have to answer the member's first question in the negative. We have not yet established a policy relative to uniform municipal taxation. On the other hand, I would say that our studies in this regard are proceeding and I hope that we will have a solution which will be satisfactory to all the various interests involved.

Mr. Bullbrook: Mr. Speaker, if the Premier would permit, recognizing that his obligation is a broad one—I suggest most respectfully, would he not agree that it is a rather lengthy one? In this respect, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Municipal Affairs at the time of the presentation of my private bill last year, advised that the government had this under contemplation at that time. I wrote to the Premier some three months ago—

Mr. Speaker: Order! The member is placing a supplementary question, not making a speech. If he would place his question please.

Mr. Bullbrook: I thought that I properly premised this speech, sir, would you not agree?

In essence, Mr. Speaker, am I able to assure the people of my riding that there will be some legislation instituted in this session relative to their particular problem?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I could not possibly give him such an undertaking. As I point out, this government does not have control over this situation.

It took 30 or 40 years, at least, to build up this legal tangle involving international bridges and I do not think it can be expected to be solved in six months.

It is a very complex matter indeed and it involves some states in the United States. It involves the federal government of the United States. It involves the government of Canada. It involves the government of the province of Ontario. It involves certain municipalities and it involves certain private companies that were given permission to operate international bridges at various times in the distant past. I have no magic wand that I can wave to cut through all the legal complexities that surround the issue.

I think you can assure the people of your riding that we are very aware of their problem and we will look after their interests as this matter unfolds.

Mr. Bullbrook: I have a question, Mr. Speaker, for the hon. Attorney General (Mr. Wishart).

Would the Attorney General advise the term of appointment of one Bruce Goulet as a member of the police commission of the city of North Bay?

Two, would the Attorney General advise whether this man's appointment is the beginning of a policy by the department of appointing other than magistrates and judges to the police commissions?

Three, would the Attorney General advise of Mr. Goulet's qualifications for such office?

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, the question comes in three parts, making actually three different questions.

The appointment of a member of the police commission—board of police commissioners—is at the pleasure of the Lieutenant-Governor in council and they may serve for one year, two years, three years or longer.

That is the first part of the question.

The second part inquires, Mr. Speaker, if this is the beginning of a policy by the department of appointing other than magistrates. I would like first, Mr. Speaker, to point out that the Minister is not called upon to answer a question as to government policy in my view and I think that is clear in the rules. However, I would not refuse to answer it on that ground.

Actually there have been a number of appointments of persons other than magistrates to police commissions. In particular, I recall in my own city of Sault Ste. Marie four years ago, in addition to the mayor and the district judge, a citizen who happened to be an ex-mayor was appointed. He is still serving. That is about four years ago. That policy—if it is a policy—has been adopted in a number of other municipalities.

I think perhaps I might enlarge a little bit upon that. The Police Act used to call for the appointment of the head of a municipality, a district or county judge and a magistrate, so that there were three persons. I just do not recall the date of the amendment which changed the requirement that it be a magistrate to "one other person," but it was four or five years ago at least. We have not been bound, therefore, to appoint magistrates, and have been exercising the latitude which that amendment gave to appoint other citizens. Generally in that regard we look for a citizen who has had experience perhaps in municipal affairs or business affairs, a citizen of character, one who is knowledgeable and who has the respect of the citizenry.

We have been following that quite generally, but I would not say that we have abandoned entirely the option to appoint a magistrate. In many commissions magistrates have served for years and have served with great distinction and have offered great service to their communities. I think generally we have been moving from the magistrate to the citizen.

As to the third question about the qualifications of Mr. Goulet, I have not had time to get that information but I would be glad to get it and perhaps I might present it to the member. I take it it is for his own information. I would be glad to do that.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence (Minister of Mines): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order, or what I believe is a point of order, sir, and it involves a sort of two-pronged question to you.

1. I wonder if you could inform the House if there is any procedure whereby a member's seat could be declared vacant by the House due to a rather cavalier attitude respecting the duties and responsibilities of that member in attending the proceedings of this House?

2. I was wondering if you had given the members of any particular group of this House leave of absence to absent themselves from the House, because I draw your attention, sir, to rule 23 of the rules of this House, and I quote:

Every member is bound to attend the service of the House unless leave of absence has been given by the House.

Mr. Speaker: I would be most pleased to take the Minister's first point under consideration. With respect to the second point I am quite sure that the reason for absence of those to whom undoubtedly he refers is probably substantial, and probably as good as that reason used by any other members who find it expedient to absent themselves from the proceedings of this House from time to time.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: In pressing the point, sir, I was wondering if the members of the NDP group in this House had received your permission to absent themselves from the House today?

Mr. Speaker: It has not been the practice in this assembly for members to request leave of absence from the Speaker. That is usually done through the party Whip's office and I would anticipate that the same procedure was followed by the group in question today.

The hon. member for Scarborough East.

Mr. T. Reid (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Education.

Who are the members of the Minister of Education's committee which has been meeting since June, 1968, to examine existing concepts, standards, methods and facilities for training secondary school teachers? And when will the committee's report be tabled in the Legislature?

Hon. W. G. Davis (Minister of Education): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether the phraseology used by the hon. member really is quite appropriate. I do not think the terms of reference for the committee were really quite that broad, as I understand it. This committee really arose out of the decision to discontinue the summer courses at the OCE and is composed of a group of individuals who are recommending to us ways and means of keeping a flow of teachers into the secondary schools at the same time as we discontinue the summer school programme.

The chairman of the committee is Mr. T. D. Boone, director of education, Etobicoke; Mr. J. B. Callan, representative of the Ontario secondary school headmasters' council and principal of Nepean high school; D. F. Daddon, the dean of the OCE, Toronto; H. B. Henderson, regional superintendent of The Department of Education; St. Catharines; N. J. Hill, representative of the Ontario teachers' federation, St. Marys; Mrs. J. Aceti, executive officer, Ontario secondary school teachers' federation; J. F. Kinlin, superintendent of curriculum, The Department of Education; R. D. MacDonald, representative of the Ontario school trustees' council, Tillsonburg; A. H. McKague, superintendent of supervision, The Department of Education; Vernon Ready, dean of McArthur College of Education, Queen's University, Kingston; J. W. Singleton, representative of the association of Ontario directors of education and the director of education for the Burlington board; W. S. Turner, dean of Althouse College at Western; G. L. Woodruff, director of teacher education, The Department of Education; and David Steinhauer, secretary and also assistant director of teacher education in the department. I will get the member a list if he would like.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I was wondering if the Minister might answer the second part of my question. When will the committee's report be tabled in this Legislature?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, this is not what one would really call a formal, shall we say, committee; it has been a group working on this particular problem. I really had not contemplated tabling it as such, but I would certainly consider this, or making it available to members of the education committee or to the hon. member—just whatever procedure would be appropriate. It is apparent that it is now under discussion in the department to see just what steps we can take and certainly I will give the members the information contained in it.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I would like to clarify one of the Minister's remarks. He mentioned that the wording in the question was a bit strong. I would let the Minister know that the wording is taken from his own report of September, 1968, on the functions of that committee.

The second question for the Minister of Education, Mr. Speaker, is this. What justification is there for the Minister of Education's decision that average building costs per pupil for elementary schools for new projects should be allowed to increase by 14 per cent between 1967 and the first half of 1968?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, the actual costs of construction between the two years has increased in the neighbourhood of from two to three per cent. This is the actual increase in the average building cost. The remaining 11 per cent, and this is a guesstimate, results from a number of elementary boards that constructed, say, a five- or six-room school four or five years ago, and have added library facilities or resource facilities, perhaps gymnasiums, or what have you, to their existing facilities. The actual cost of construction for elementary schools during that period of time is between two and three per cent. The additional percentage that will reflect itself, perhaps, in the information the member obtained from the Minister's report, reflects the addition of such items as libraries, and so on, to what had been existing units.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Grey-Bruce. The hon. member for Grey-Bruce was on his feet a short time ago and he is next if he wishes to ask a question.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, a question to the Attorney General. I know I have the unanimous support of the NDP on this today.

What steps are being taken to require owners of guns to possess an identification card obtained from a proper authority?

Second, what steps are being taken to forbid the sale of any firearms to any individual not possessing such a card?

Third, will an Ontario gun code be drawn up?

Fourth, will the government consider having a firearms amnesty day during which the owners of unregistered hand guns would be able to surrender these weapons without criminal charges being laid?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member on April 23 and on June 7 of this year asked the same question of me.

Mr. Sargent: I will bet the Minister is completely wrong.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): I will bet on the Attorney General.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The question on June 7 was:

What steps does the government plan to institute in regard to a gun control law, such as prohibiting purchase by mail and making guns harder to get, and would the government consider a week of amnesty to be able to turn in illegally held weapons?

I answered at that time, Mr. Speaker, as I answer it again today, that the matter of control of guns—"offensive weapons," as they are described—is a matter for federal jurisdiction and control. There are numerous sections in The Criminal Code starting at section 82 and running some 10 sections or more, under the headings of Offensive Weapons, Possession of the Weapons, Carrying of the Weapons, Carrying Concealed Weapons, the Registration of Weapons, and Firearms.

This whole matter is in the code. I pointed out in my answer in June of this year that a bill had been presented in the federal House, on which we had offered some advice and comment to the Minister of Justice at Ottawa. The bill, which I have here, was Bill C195. It was given first reading in the federal House on December 21, 1967. It had not been concluded when the last session of the Parliament at Ottawa prorogued, but I understand it is again before the House. It will be introduced again and it has wide provisions with respect to the control of firearms. As to the matter of amnesty, that is not within our jurisdiction either.

This question has really been asked now three times, and answered the same way.

Mr. Sargent: The Ontario Junior Chamber of Commerce wants to sponsor an amnesty day. Would the Minister suggest to me that I tell them that it is "no dice," that he does not encourage it?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I would not suggest that the member tell them "no dice." I would suggest that he tell them that it is a matter within federal jurisdiction of this whole area.

Mr. Sargent: The same thing about wire-tapping too?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, wiretapping too. The criminal law applies to the whole country. These laws are in the field of criminal law; all our criminal law is contained in The Criminal Code which is a federal statute. Anything relating to criminal offences is federal.

Mr. Sargent: Another question to the Attorney General, Mr. Speaker.

Will the Attorney General consider putting into force, in Ontario, a programme whereby persons arrested for minor offences be given summonses at station houses, instead of being taken immediately into court?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, the procedure with respect to arrests—

Mr. Sargent: Of minor offences.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, I will come to that, just give me an opportunity.

The procedure with respect to the issue of summonses, rather than arrests, is, again, all laid down in The Criminal Code of Canada and those are the procedural rules, which are federal.

Now I know the hon. member is talking—if he will give me his attention—the hon. member—

Mr. Sargent: I was—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The hon. member refers to—

Mr. Sargent: We do not believe all—

Mr. Speaker: Order! Order!

Hon. Mr. Wishart: When you do not hear it, you cannot very well believe it.

The hon. member speaks of minor offences and I take it he is speaking of those quasi-criminal or minor matters which are within Ontario jurisdiction.

With respect to those, we did make provision by amending our Summary Convictions Act by which we provide that—with respect to those things which lie within Ontario statutes, such as The Highway Traffic Act, The Liquor Act, and so on—the officer may, in a sense, arrest. He may arrest and bring the person before the police station or to such premises and there, the senior officer may release such person on his own recognizance. We have that with respect to Ontario offences, and those, I think, are what the hon. member means by minor offences.

We have no authority to do this with respect to the federal offences in the code. The procedures are laid down in the code. I would say this, we again have made representation to Ottawa, through the Minister of Justice there, sometime back that this would be a procedure which might very well be adopted.

Mr. Sargent: Thanks, in a supplementary way.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: And may I just add this. The Criminal Code, I think the hon. member knows, is also now before the federal Parliament. I am not sure that it contains this provision but the criminal code is being reviewed. The new statute we expect will appear shortly.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, is the Minister aware that in another jurisdiction in 147,000 cases of summonses issued they saved $1 million in court appearances? It would seem to be a good thing to try in all minor offences in this province.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I wish you would make representation to Ottawa and support us in this.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: He is not talking to Ottawa.

Mr. Sargent: A question to the Attorney General.

Mr. Speaker, is the Attorney General aware that Mr. Justice McRuer recommends that in every single one of the provinces, 500 justices of the peace should be fired and a fresh start should be made? Does the Attorney General agree, and if so, what steps are being taken?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I am quite aware of the recommendations made by the hon. Mr. McRuer in his report on inquiry into civil rights. I did make some previous comment about this.

Mr. McRuer suggested, as the hon. member represents, that the justice of the peace procedures and training, their approach, and so on, left a great deal to be desired. He said that they perhaps should all be removed from office and, I think he said, rehired.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. McRuer did not say that.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, reviewed, in any event and sorted out. I am not sure just what he did mean, quite frankly. Certainly I do not think he directed his mind immediately to the practical consequences of such action.

I will say that along with our review of his other recommendations, this is one that we must review immediately. Every justice of the peace in the province has been asked to furnish us with the material showing the extent of his work, the service he is rendering and we are reviewing it from other approaches too. This is one of those recommendations which we are reviewing. But to simply dismiss them all and to leave the gap which would then exist in our administration of justice is not a practical approach at all.

We are reviewing it and will be coming to certain conclusions before long.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, on page 1114 of the report on civil rights, Mr. Justice McRuer reveals that the city of Toronto is in direct contravention of its general licensing by-law in allowing a club licence for $300—

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Sargent: Club licence for $300 to be sold for $13,500—

Mr. Speaker: Order! Order!

The member may not place a question unless it be supplementary to a question which has been submitted to the Speaker's office. The member cannot as far as I can see, relate this to the question he just asked the—

Mr. Sargent: This is another question.

Mr. Speaker: Is it a new question?

Mr. Sargent: Yes, better sharpen up. He has it there some place.

Mr. Speaker: What number is on the question that the member is asking?

Mr. Sargent: I do not have the master list here, sir.

Mr. Speaker: The question that the member has asked has not been given Mr. Speaker. That question has never been submitted as far as I can recall.

An hon. member: Page 1114.

Mr. Sargent: All right. A question to the Prime Minister. He has it, Mr. Speaker, but—

Mr. Speaker: It has not been submitted to the office.

Mr. Sargent: I will sit down but I want to ask this question of the Minister of Economics and Development.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps if it would be directed to the Minister of Trade and Development (Mr. Randall) it might be more directly answered.

Mr. Sargent: You change them so often around here, how are we supposed to know?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I still have one more question from the hon. member which was submitted yesterday, but the hon. member was not in his seat to read it when the time came. I wonder if I could not dispose of his question before he proceeds to question other Ministers.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I also have that question.

Mr. Sargent: You probably know the answer to that one.

Mr. Speaker: I also have that question. I would be glad to give it to the member in case he has not got it so that he may ask this one—this is the one with respect to tenants' rights.

Mr. Sargent: What steps are being taken—that is to the Minister of Economics and Development—

Mr. Speaker: No, your office was advised that that was redirected to the Attorney General's office.

Mr. Sargent: I am sorry. What steps are being taken to make new laws giving the tenants such rights as a board of tenants' affairs, a law to enable tenants to defend themselves in court against eviction, and unfair leases?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, almost a year ago I think it is now, I asked the Ontario law reform commission in its study on the whole field of property law to devote special attention to the field of landlords and tenants. We again made that request after checking with the commission just toward the latter part of the session in June of this year.

The work has been pushed forward. The studies are complete. The report is being prepared. I understand it is about ready for the printer and I am awaiting receipt of it. I expect it will contain recommendations on all these matters relating to landlord and tenant.

I might mention that a question of this nature was asked yesterday by the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald). I gave him this answer. The hon. member was not here at that time.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Trade and Development: Would the Minister advise if a loan was granted from the Ontario development corporation to Caswell Hotel in Sudbury; how does Caswell fit into the terms of reference of the Ontario development corporation; and how much was the loan?

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Trade and Development): Mr. Speaker, let me first say

I am very delighted that the hon. member for Grey-Bruce has included me again this year as a member of the team to participate in "Eddie's happy hour".

The answer to the first question is no, not to Caswell Hotel (Sudbury) Limited. A conventional loan was approved to Caswell Management of Canada Limited operating Caswell's Hotel Bernard at Sundridge.

The second answer: Conventional loans are available to soundly based and well managed companies in a resort area for the purpose of providing facilities which are required and which do not now exist in sufficient quantity in the area.

The additional facilities include an increase in conference accommodation and an improvement in the ski facilities, both of which will benefit other resorts in the area.

And, three: a conventional loan of $100,000.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question? Would the Minister answer me these three points then? This man is a top Conservative, he gave money to the funds up north—

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Sargent: Are the terms of reference that they have not been able to get financing from any other source? Is that correct?

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is right.

Mr. Sargent: So, the Minister is suggesting that the millionaire firm of Caswell could not get loans from IDB, or anyone else. Holiday Inn could not get loans from IDB, or anyone else, but the ODC—

Mr. Speaker: Order! Will the member place his supplementary question?

Mr. Sargent: He has answered the question.

Hon. Mr. Randall: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I have not answered the question, I did not get a chance.

Mr. Sargent: Let us get an answer somewhere.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let me first say, Mr. Speaker, that when this application comes in it is treated as any other. It goes before the members of the Ontario development corporation. It goes before an outside board of directors, who do not care what a man's politics are. It goes before the Treasury board and is approved by council. I might say that there have been no partisan politics in this province since the Hepburn regime.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: Would the Minister answer another supplementary question?

How much of this loan is completely forgivable? Of the $100,000, how much will he pay back?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not know: I would have to get this information—

Mr. Sargent: The Minister knows it is nothing, does he not?

Hon. Mr. Randall:—and I will be glad to answer it tomorrow.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member for Grey-Bruce wish to place any more questions of his that I hold?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Speaker, I have another question here from the hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has adopted the procedure of filing with the Speaker's office a great number of questions and then asking only a few of them on certain days.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I may not be hearing them all then.

Mr. H. Wor-ton (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Trade and Development.

When does the Minister plan to announce the sale of houses to the tenants in the Green Meadows subdivision which is managed by OHC in the city of Guelph?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Speaker, the answer to that question is: Ontario housing corporation will today be writing to each individual tenant in the Green Meadows subdivision in the city of Guelph advising them of the terms and conditions under which they may elect to purchase the dwelling which they now occupy.

There are three basic conditions which tenants must meet in order to qualify. These are as follows:

(a) Their financial circumstances must be such that they meet the gross debt service requirements of The National Housing Act.

(b) They must have been tenants in good standing for a period of not less than twelve months.

(c) Their family size must be such as to constitute full occupancy of the dwelling.

Mr. Wor-ton: If I may ask a supplementary question, would the Minister give us a copy of the conditions under which the houses are sold?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, I might add to that—

Mr. Wor-ton: Because I think it is a good deal and I would like as much information as possible.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I might say this, that the tenants will be offered five different purchase options as follows—and I will see that you get a copy of this.

First, they can pay cash if it is possible. Second, a five per cent down payment on house and land, with balance amortized over a period up to 35 years. Down payment on dwelling only, with repayment of balance on dwelling and total cost of land over a period of up to 35 years. Down payment on dwelling only, with balance on dwelling repayable over a period up to 35 years. Land on a leasehold basis, with option to purchase at the end of five years.

The purchase price has been established at $16,000 for land and dwelling, with a $2,000 forgiveness clause effective five years from the date of purchase, provided the dwelling is not resold during that period.

I might add that the additional $2,000 is to prevent speculation on resale of the property for at least the first five years. If the property is sold after this term the $2,000 is forgiven and during the five-year period no interest or payments on the principal are required on that $2,000.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Haskett).

Will the Minister consider subsidizing the research of Dr. Pearl Winesberger at the University of Ottawa into the effect of sound on living cells due to the increasing concern regarding the biological effects of noise, particularly in relationship of human behaviour and safety?

Hon. I. Haskett (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the department is not considering subsidizing this project. We are not involved in research of this kind.

Mr. B. Newman: If I may ask of the Minister a supplementary question: Does he not consider that there is a relationship between the effect of noise and behaviour concerning specific relation.

Hon. Mr. Haskett: I am not aware of this specific relation.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Speaker, if the Minister is not aware, it would be a good thing to have some research done on it.

Mr. Speaker: Order! If the hon. member wishes to ask a supplementary question, he may do so, but he may not comment or make a comment on—

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Speaker, I have another question of the Minister of Transport: Will the Minister amend The Highway Traffic Act to permit a wider use of the discretionary powers as a result of the question of the legality of the wise decision of Magistrate Joseph P. McMahon in giving an intermittent licence suspension to a man who pleaded guilty to an impaired driving charge?

Hon. Mr. Haskett: Mr. Speaker, this case involves an offence under The Criminal Code of Canada, Section 223, and not The Highway Traffic Act of Ontario. I am informed that the decision by Magistrate McMahon has been appealed to a higher court.

Mr. G. W. Innes (Oxford): I have a question for the Minister of Education.

What are the annual publishing and distribution costs of the magazine Dimensions? What is the intended purpose of this publication? Does the Minister believe that this purpose has been fulfilled?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, dealing with the latter part of the question first: The purpose of Dimensions—I have copies here, I am sure the hon. member reads it regularly—is an effort on the part of the department to involve many members of the profession, the teachers, the trustees, the home and school groups, the government officials, business executives and so on with, shall we say, some of the new thoughts on education.

They do not relate to departmental policy or departmental announcements. They relate basically to new ideas and some philosophy as far as education is concerned. This was requested from some of the organizations two years ago. While it is difficult to say that it is in fact fulfilling this purpose at this early stage, I can only say that the requests for this material exceed the supply at the present moment. I think this is one indication that it is being relatively well received in the community that it serves.

The cost, Mr. Speaker, just to use round figures, is in the neighbourhood of $69,000 per year. This means 12 issues, so that the average cost per issue would be approximately $5,750.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Downsview.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Development.

Has the Ontario Housing Corporation revised his standard form of lease?

Hon. Mr. Randall: A revised form of lease for use in all Ontario Housing Corporation developments has been prepared in consultation with The Department of the Attorney General. This document has been prepared within the framework of our existing legislation. It is now at the final draft stage and will shortly be put into effect. At that time I will be pleased to make a copy available to the hon. member.

I might say also that the Law Reform Commission is currently reviewing The Landlord and Tenant Act, as he probably knows. Any pertinent revisions to the Act which may arise as a result of this study will be incorporated into future Ontario Housing Corporation leases.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, by way of a supplementary, would the Minister advise when he anticipates the new form of lease will likely be?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Speaker, I was first told it was going to print today, so I think it is almost imminent. I would think we would use it within the next 30 days or so.

Mr. Singer: I will look forward to receiving a copy.

I have a question for the Attorney General.

In view of the decision of the Ontario Law Enforcement Compensation Board in the case of Larry Botrie and in view of the Attorney General's statement to the first session of the 28th Legislature in relation to the meaning of The Law Enforcement Compensation Act, does the government intend to bring in appropriate amendments to make meaningful the government's apparent intent when it first introduced this legislation?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, this again is a question of enquiring as to government policy, which I have the right to refuse to answer. I am prepared to answer the question but I draw the attention of the House to the matter, as I wish to preserve my right.

Second, I would like to say that this same question, in almost the same language, was asked as a supplementary yesterday by the hon. member for High Park. I answered at the time, and I am going to read part of that reply. I said:

I welcome the supplementary question, and I think perhaps I might be permitted to say that when this legislation establishing the compensation board was introduced last year, I did indicate that, in our consideration of it, we considered it perhaps as a preliminary step in the whole matter of compensation to victims of crime or those assisting in law enforcement. I am, of course, aware of the comments of the hon. Mr. McRuer in his report on civil rights. I am at liberty to say that the whole matter of compensation to victims of crime is still being reviewed as a matter of policy of government.

We did indicate last year that the bill we introduced was to compensate those injured or killed or damaged in assisting a police officer in law enforcement, and that they would be compensated. We indicated that, in our thinking, that was perhaps the first step and that the matter was being studied further. As to what the policy is, I am not in a position, at this moment, to announce.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Kitchener.

Mr. J. R. Breithaupt (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the hon. Prime Minister.

Has any policy been decided on with respect to the problems of public beaches on the Lake Erie shoreline?

Has the government given any study to the report made by Professor John N. Jackson, head of the geography department of Brock University on the request to the Niagara regional development council which concluded that the beaches are public now?

Will the government convene a conference to hear the public views on this problem so that legislation can be enacted which will balance the rights of the cottagers with the recreational needs of the general public?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I think this question has been dealt with before in the House.

It is a very complex legal matter involving the rights of the owners of these properties, and how far they extend. It has been necessary to search the titles to a great many properties in order to determine just what the legal rights of the owners are. The studies involved in getting answers to these questions, we hope to have concluded relatively soon. At that time we will decide, and will bring to the House, a policy. I would hope that would be during this current session.

As far as Professor Jackson's report is concerned, it has been studied. It is part of the study material presently being examined. I do not think it is necessary for us to hold a conference to get public views in this matter. They have been expressed in all sorts of ways. They are before us now, so it is not the intent of the government to convene a conference because we do not think it is necessary.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Perth.

Mr. H. Edighoffer (Perth): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Grossman). There are two parts:

1. Why did the department not consult the Perth county council before it advertised for the position of general clerk at the Perth county jail, due to the work already done in this field by the county clerk and his staff?

2. Is the Minister aware that the Perth county clerk's office would be saving the provincial government $4,678 each year if it continued to administer the clerical work of this jail?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, when the department took over the operation of the county jails, it did so in the knowledge that many improvements were necessary in all areas of the operations. Over the years there have been problems which have emphasized that efficiencies in all aspects and sections of the jails were most necessary, and that no phase could be treated as a part-time job; particularly, Mr. Speaker, when one considers the security needs of a jail.

There have been instances where jail staff have been severely criticized because of delay in processing, inaccuracies in recording, and so on. In fact these criticisms have sometimes been quite valid. The jail is dealing with people. It is our responsibility to ensure that these people do not suffer because of inefficiencies in the operation of the institutions.

In this particular jail, and indeed many more jails, correctional officers were not able to devote their entire working day to their correctional duties but shared clerical duties—that is, keeping inmate, admitting, and discharging records, calculating fines, and so on. The governor, particularly, was frequently responsible for minor clerical duties. When the department analyzed the total work needed to be done—not just the work that was previously carried out by the clerk-treasurer and his staff, but all the clerical work, including that previously done by the governor and correctional officers—we decided that this was sufficient to warrant the employment of a full-time clerk.

In the light of this background it is obvious why we would not consult the Perth county council before advertising the post. It was our own responsibility and we accepted it.

In answer to the second question, Mr. Speaker, we received a letter from the county council offering to have this work done for us for $50 a month, and we wrote back explaining the full duties of the position and detailing the specifications. We said, and I quote from the letter:

I feel certain that the council, when reading these specifications, will realize that we cannot presume on the generosity of the office of the clerk-treasurer to fulfil all of the requirements of this position.

Since receiving these specifications, the Perth county council have not renewed their offer, and, in my opinion, very wisely. If they do wish to do so—if they wish to commit their staff to carry out all the duties that are required by this position to our complete satisfaction, and in keeping with the degrees of efficiency required—I am sure that we would be happy to accept their offer. As a matter of fact it is a most generous offer, having regard for our requirements.

However, the hon. members Mr. Speaker will recognize the importance of correctional staff working entirely at their own responsibilities. They will remember many occasions in the past when we have had problems in the local jails—escapes, and so on—when correctional staff who were responsible for the security of the public had been distracted from their tasks and were performing as part-time cooks, part-time record clerks, part-time accountants, part-time telephone operators, part-time typists, and so on. It is our view we can no longer permit correctional work to be done by people who are doing it as a part-time function, and particularly those who should be fully engaged, all day, in what we consider vital work.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Kingston and the Islands.

Mr. S. Apps (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, with your permission I would like to announce to the House that one of my constituents, Mr. Donald MacDonald, of Wolfe Island—who by the way is no relation, I understand, to the leader of the NDP—was awarded the world's championship prize for forage seed at the Royal winter fair this year. His entry was for birdsfoot trefoil seed and was the best of all forage seeds at the fair. Mr. MacDonald has grown this type of seed for a number of years and this achievement has brought honour to himself and to all farmers in our section of eastern Ontario.

It is also a pleasure for me to announce that Mr. Harvey Knox, of Glenburnie, won the world's championship for barley seed at the Royal winter fair. Glenburnie is just four miles north of Kingston, in Frontenac county.

I think these two awards are indicative of the high calibre of farms and farmers in our area of Frontenac county and I feel sure that you will join me in congratulating these two gentlemen on their success this year.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Clerk of the House: The 1st order, consideration of the Speech of the Honourable, the Lieutenant-Governor at the opening of the session.

Mr. J. A. Belanger (Prescott and Russell): Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to move, seconded by the member for Fort William (Mr. Jessiman), that a humble address be presented to the Honourable W. Ross Macdonald, Lieutenant-Governor of the province of Ontario. May it please your honour:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects of the legislative assembly of the province of Ontario now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech which Your Honour has addressed to us.

Mr. Speaker, it is a personal pleasure and a great honour to have received the privilege of addressing this House on this occasion. It is also a privilege for me to be in this House at a time when our new Lieutenant-Governor has delivered his first Speech from the Throne. I am sure I speak for all members of this House when I say he is a welcome guest in our Chamber. Also at this time I would compliment Mr. Speaker on his excellent work during the last session.

As well, my congratulations to this government's newest Cabinet Minister, the Minister of Revenue (Mr. White). I am sure his youthful and energetic abilities assure an excellent performance in the demanding post of Minister of Revenue.

Mr. Speaker, this present occasion is the third highlight of my political career this year. On March 14 I delivered my maiden speech in this Chamber. Earlier this month, I took part, for the first time as a member, in the annual meeting of the Ontario Progressive Conservative Party.

I count our annual meeting this year an historical event. Some 2,000 Progressive Conservatives gathered from every corner of our vast province to elect new association officers and to honour three of the outstanding leaders of our party.

Observing that event, with its throngs of dedicated and enthusiastic supporters, listening to the words of our past leaders, Mr. Drew and Mr. Frost, and particularly to the words of our present leader, the Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts), I was easily able to understand why our party has elected the government of Ontario for 50 of the 68 years of this century.

Mr. Belanger: A quality product is always successful. A quality product will continue to be successful because it adapts itself with energy and imagination to the needs of its customers. When our customers, the Ontario electorate, come to the election counter they are shrewd buyers. They will not buy pigs in pokes. They are not shopping for impractical dreams or flashy packages. They look for and buy a quality political product and expect to be served, not mastered, by their government.

Mr. Speaker, I have spoken of a product because I am a small businessman from a rural riding—the riding of Prescott and Russell in eastern Ontario. I am a Franco-Ontarian. Most of the people in my riding are Franco-Ontarians and French-speaking. I am proud to represent them. I am equally proud to represent the Anglo-Saxons of my riding. As well, I consider it a particular point of pride to represent all of those newer Canadians from overseas who have chosen to add their energies and culture to the riding of Prescott and Russell. But, old or new citizens, they are shrewd customers in the political store and have chosen—and will continue to choose—the Progressive Conservative brand—the quality product.

Mr. Speaker, the fact that our party has formed the government of this province for more than 50 years of this century is a result of Progressive Conservative policies that have obviously met with the approval of the electors.

Why have our policies met with approval? Because they have been progressive policies—policies of reform—policies that have placed Ontario in the front rank of the world's most advanced jurisdictions. Harnessing the imagination, enthusiasm and individual initiative of its people, the Progressive Conservative governments of Ontario have created a community where there is more opportunity and greater prosperity than in any other province of this country.

Mr. Speaker, I also want to point out another simple but fundamental fact of our party's policies that keeps us in harmony with Ontario citizens. That is our respect and guardianship of individual freedom. This has been a cornerstone of our political philosophy. To quote a few examples: in 1950, the hon. Leslie Frost said:

We maintain that the government should be the servant, not the master, of the people. We hope to assist the initiative of our people with a minimum of regulation and interference on the part of the government.

At a later date, our present Premier, who is also a Canadian statesman, reinforced the keystone of our policies when he said:

It is our belief that the role of government is to create economic and social opportunities for its people so that they can maintain their independence from the state.

Mr. Speaker, these statements of political philosophy from Progressive Conservative leaders, past and present, are keenly appreciated by the people of my riding of Prescott and Russell. The riding I represent is mainly a rural riding, though a portion of it—one township in fact—forms part of the new Ottawa-Carleton metropolitan area. Because the majority of the citizens I proudly represent are farmers, I have a deep interest in the individual initiative and freedom that is so strongly encouraged by our government. We all know that our farming population has always nourished and will continue to sustain the same spirit of individual enterprise.

A century and a half ago, Ontario's first settlers were farmers. In the middle of the last century a farmer produced enough to feed himself and his family with a little left over to barter for those few items that he and his wife could not create by hand. Today, each Ontario farmer produces enough food and fibre for himself and 40 other people. If technology continues to advance at the same pace, each farmer will be supplying the needs of 150, perhaps 200, people by the year 2000.

Mr. Speaker, although agriculture is Ontario's oldest industry, it is not by any means an old-fashioned industry. Today, there is a new look in rural Ontario. Farms are larger, new crops are being grown, mechanization is filling the gap created by the migration of rural youth to urban areas. New farm structures are changing the very skyline of the rural community.

Paved roads are moving back the community boundaries. The one-room school has given way to central schools which offer educational opportunities equal to those in urban Ontario. Much of this progress and improvement is the result of the creative policies of our Progressive Conservative governments.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, our agricultural community is not without its problems. In 1966, the census of Ontario revealed that only 26 per cent of our farm operators grossed over $10,000 a year and only 7.5 per cent grossed over $25,000 annually. If only a quarter of Ontario farmers are able to generate gross returns of $10,000, what is the future of the other three quarters? This is a problem that must be solved.

I am confident that solutions will be found by this government and that those solutions will also protect the freedom of enterprise so dear to our farmers. I look forward with very special interest, on behalf of the farmers of Prescott and Russell, to the report of the special committee on farm income which is expected in the next few weeks.

I am proud to use the slogan, "province of opportunity" when I speak of Ontario because it is a slogan that is literally true. It has been true in the past, it is true today, and I am confident it will remain true in the days ahead. I am confident that my government is accepting the challenge to ensure that opportunity exists for those people who live in rural Ontario, whether or not they are farmers.

Much has been said about the "good life" in the country—the freedom, the independence, the enjoyment of fresh air and clean water. But space, fresh air and clean water are not enough to keep body and soul together. They are not enough to finance the family's education or provide the necessities and the extras that make life worthwhile. Unless rural living generates an income that will provide the "good life," the social benefits will be few and the pleasures of rural living meaningless.

Mr. Speaker, I will specify a few of the problems facing the farm community, not only in Prescott and Russell, but throughout the farming areas of our province.

New disposal methods which will prevent air, soil and water pollution must be developed. It may be that zoning or planning restrictions will have to be considered. Vast amounts of chemical fertilizers, pesticides and herbicides are being used in rural Ontario. We must develop fool-proof safeguards and control mechanisms that will prevent misuse, protect the user and the public, while at the same time permitting the farmer to benefit from these materials.

In any industry that involves considerable capital, management must have access to adequate credit on a continuing basis. This is especially true of agriculture, where historically the business must be refinanced every 25 years and the returns are seasonal. Our policies, I am sure, will ensure sufficient capital is available in both short- and long-term forms.

Specialized training must be provided to those who will manage the farms of the future. Present facilities are operating to capacity in turning out 400 diploma graduates each year. We cannot in future afford poorly trained farm managers.

Mr. Speaker, I have detailed some of the problems facing us in this critical area of agriculture. At this time also I want to make quite clear the fine record of service the agricultural industry has received from the Progressive Conservative governments of this province.

Our government has provided agricultural representatives, engineers, home economists, dairy fieldmen, rural development counsellors, and farm management specialists. Research facilities of every kind are available to the farmer-businessman. Colleges of agricultural technology are strategically located throughout the province. Marketing legislation provides our farm people with the machinery to conduct their own marketing in an orderly fashion. Twenty marketing boards handling 40 commodities now operate under authority of The Ontario Farm Products Marketing Act and The Milk Act of Ontario. Market development officers at home and abroad are constantly in search of new markets and assist our producers and processors to develop these outlets. Young farmers wishing to embark in full-time farming, either alone or in partnership, can arrange first mortgage loans through the junior farmer establishment loans board. Capital grants are available to assist in the expansion of farm business operations.

A specific example would be the capital grants made by The Ontario Department of Agriculture and Food for farm structures and farm drainage. In the period April 1, 1967, to November 15, 1968, the counties of Prescott and Russell generated 683 applications and grants totalling more than $315,000 were paid. Under the ARDA programme for farm water supplies and field enlargement, Prescott and Russell received an additional 265 grants totalling nearly $47,000.

Mr. Speaker, we can all be proud of Ontario's tremendous progress in agriculture. The productivity of our better farms is unequalled in any other country. But, Mr. Speaker, we face a constant challenge in this field. We must chart a continuing course of progress for rural Ontario—a course that will provide a rich, a pleasant, and a rewarding life for those who choose the rural life. That is the challenge, Mr. Speaker, and I am certain we intend to meet that challenge by providing the economic climate necessary to a healthy agricultural industry.

Mr. Speaker, as I have indicated, agriculture is the primary industry of my riding of Prescott and Russell. But that industry and our urban centres cannot transport and communicate without an up-to-date highway system. You can therefore imagine with what great delight the people of my riding greeted the Minister of Highways (Mr. Gomme's) announcement of this past week. On November 15, 1968, the Minister announced that tenders will be called this month for the first contract on the $70 million Highway 417, a magnificent new four-lane freeway between Ottawa and the Quebec border.

To add to our delight the Minister disclosed that the estimated construction time of this 63-mile freeway has been cut to half the original estimate. To quote the Minister: "We are now working on a target date of six years for completion." The first contract will call for clearing a 4.8-mile section of the right-of-way between the Base Line Road at Ramsayville and the Eight Line Road in Gloucester township. The tender closing date has been set for December 18 and the contract will be awarded shortly so that work can be completed in May.

At this point I would like to congratulate the Minister and the government also on the completion of Highway 401, the Macdonald-Cartier freeway.

The Minister has also stated that a further contract for grading of Highway 417 will be called in the spring and additional contracts will be scheduled to maintain a continuous sequence of construction.

Mr. Speaker, it is a fact of modern life that new and improved highways bring economic development and fresh potential to the region concerned. Because my riding of Prescott and Russell is not among the most prosperous ridings in Ontario, you may be sure Highway 417 is regarded as proof positive of this government's intention to do everything possible to improve the economic circumstances of every part of this province.

Further proof of this government's concern for the less favoured areas of the province is evident in the admirable efforts of the Ontario development corporation. Established for the specific purpose of stimulating economic development, the ODC has four specific objectives:

1. To provide equalization of opportunity for all Ontario municipalities in order to attract new industry.
2. To provide for an expansion of industry and employment, particularly in areas of slow growth.
3. To provide opportunities for gainful employment for our young people in the smaller centres of population.
4. To provide a wider base of industrial assessment for our smaller municipalities.

A recent example of this valuable assistance in Prescott and Russell was a loan to North Craft Industries Ltd., of Hawkesbury. This loan of $62,000 will help greatly in the immediate provision of 30 new jobs, plus ten more new jobs within two years.

In addition to loans of various kinds, the ODC programme provides extremely helpful further assistance through its staff of consultants. This assistance includes financial, business and technical advice, and special help on engineering, production and other technical problems. On-the-spot advisory services by teams of consultants sent to various centres in the province, and management training workshops tailored to assist the small businessman.

Mr. Speaker, as I said, my riding is less favoured with prosperity than many others.

But, the people of Prescott and Russell are not seeking handouts. They are looking for the opportunities and circumstances that make it possible for them to help themselves. Because their basic circumstances are not as favourable as some others, they must look to this government for continuing programmes that tend to equalize their chances with the more favoured parts of the province. As our leader, the Prime Minister, has said, "We must always recognize the need for the state to do those things for individuals which cannot be done by the individual."

Mr. Speaker, up to this point, I have spoken of my pride in the part of which I am a member: of agriculture, of highway development and economic development, and of my heartfelt pride in the riding of Prescott-Russell. I now wish to speak as a Franco-Ontarian.

Au début des années 1600, au temps où des postes de traite et des postes de missionnaire existaient le long des cours d'eau ontariens, et que quelques 45,000 Indiens étaient les seuls occupants de ce qui devait devenir l'Ontario, mes ancêtres, les Français, furent les premiers à s'y établir. Ils y avaient effectivement bâti des communautés qui s'étendaient aussi loin vers l'ouest que le district Windsor-Détroit, et cela près de cinquante ans avant que le Canada soit sous la domination britannique.

Un plus grand nombre de colons vinrent s'y installer en 1784 au temps où plusieurs loyalistes de l'Empire uni, pourchassés vers le nord, étaient à la recherche d'un refuge après la révolte américaine contre la Grande Bretagne. A eux, se joignirent pour le défrichage de nouvelles terres, des groupes d'écosais, d'irlandais, de hollandais, de suisses et d'allemands.

Vers 1812, quand nous étions menacés par la guerre anglo-américaine, la population avait déjà atteint le chiffre de 80,000. A la Confédération canadienne en 1867, elle était de 1.5 million. Aujourd'hui, nous autres Franco-ontariens comptons un total de presque 725,000 âmes . . . ou approximativement 10 per cent de la population totale ontarienne. Après le groupe anglo-saxon qui forme la majorité de la population, les Franco-ontariens constituent le groupe le plus nombreux parmi les nine autres origines ethniques principales de la province. En tant que citoyen d'origine française, je me considère privilégié de faire partie de cette mosaïque ontarienne si riche et si variée.

Monsieur l'Orateur, c'est avec fierté que je vous présente les données des groupes ethniques principaux qui enrichissent dans une grande mesure, la vie culturelle de notre province: Anglo-Saxon 60 per cent, 4,142,000; Français 10 per cent, 724,000; Allemand-autrichien 7 per cent, 487,000; Italien 4 per cent, 306,000; Hollandais 3 per cent, 216,000; Polonais 2 per cent, 167,000; Ukrainien 2 per cent, 139,000; Israélite 1 per cent, 77,000; Scandinave 1 per cent, 70,000; Indien Canadien 0.8 per cent, 56,000.

En tant que Franco-ontarien, j'ai sincèrement apprécié la déclaration gouvernementale faite en août 1967, selon laquelle ce gouvernement a annoncé sa ferme intention d'établir un système d'écoles secondaires de langue française financé par des fonds publics. J'ai constaté avec intérêt les pas de géant accomplis dans ce domaine depuis cette déclaration et les mesures qui ont été adoptées pour mettre en oeuvre cette importante décision.

Un Comité désigné pour étudier la question des Ecoles Secondaires Publiques de langue française a examiné les méthodes visant à étendre l'instruction en français au stage secondaire. Une recommandation qui résulte de cette étude propose que les cours déjà offerts en langue française dans ces écoles soient développés de façon à pouvoir inclure un programme d'études complet là où le nombre des élèves d'une région donnée justifie une telle pratique.

Les lois permettant de réaliser ces mesures d'importance historique apporteront certainement une énorme amélioration dans les possibilités éducatives des Franco-ontariens. Les Bills qui s'y rapportent prévoient les dispositions légales pour l'établissement d'écoles élémentaires et secondaires. Bien que le principe d'une instruction bilingue avait été reconnu précédemment, jusqu'au jour où ces bills furent présentés par le Ministère de l'Éducation (M. Davis), il n'existait point de statut spécifique garantissant des écoles françaises en Ontario.

Quels sont les buts d'une instruction secondaire de langue française? Quels sont les besoins formulés par la communauté Franco-ontarienne dans ce domaine? Je répondrai à ces questions d'une façon aussi brève que possible.

1. Le diplômé bilingue d'une école secondaire de langue française devrait avoir acquis une connaissance de français qui soit aussi complète que le permet le niveau d'aptitudes intellectuelles d'un étudiant moyen. Le Français est sa langue maternelle et devrait lui être enseigné compte tenu des besoins culturels aussi bien que pratiques. Sa connaissance et son aptitude de manipuler la langue française doit lui permettre de vivre une vie pleine en tant que Canadien d'origine française et doit aussi lui permettre de bénéficier et de participer activement à la vie culturelle des Canadiens francophones et de la communauté francophone universelle.

2. Le diplômé bilingue devrait avoir une bonne connaissance de l'anglais pour qu'il puisse:

(a) Communiquer d'une façon adéquate avec ses compatriotes anglophones;

(b) faire face aux conditions compétitives vis-à-vis de la main-d'oeuvre anglophone possédant les mêmes aptitudes professionnelles;

(c) prendre part aux activités politiques, civiques et sociales au sein de sa communauté.

3. Après avoir acquis les connaissances linguistiques fondamentales, le diplômé bilingue devrait posséder une bonne compréhension des normes d'évaluation et des aspects culturels de ses concitoyens anglophones.

Bref, Monsieur l'Orateur, notre ultime objectif, qui est actuellement à la portée de notre main, est d'assurer à tout étudiant francophone de l'Ontario la possibilité de recevoir une éducation dans sa langue maternelle à partir du jardin d'enfants jusqu'à l'université et plus.

Parlant d'éducation française, je suis particulièrement heureux de constater déjà des signes de coopération sincères entre anglais et français dans le domaine de l'instruction secondaire. Je désire citer l'exemple de la Commission de "l'Ottawa Collegiate Institute" qui a accepté d'assumer la responsabilité, à partir de cet automne, pour les sept écoles secondaires privées de langue française d'Ottawa. Il faut dire que ce fut là une décision admirable prise entièrement et uniquement sur l'initiative des autorités locales d'Ottawa. Il faut ajouter que dans d'autres régions de l'Ontario, des groupes francophones et anglophones ont aussi mis sur pied des comités conjoints dans le but de trouver le meilleur moyen possible d'administrer des écoles secondaires de langue française.

Au cours des dix-huit derniers mois, ce gouvernement a fait face à plusieurs événements et a su prendre d'importantes décisions qui ont pour la communauté Franco-ontarienne, une grande signification. Ces événements et ces décisions ont contribué à faire disparaître les anciennes animosités qui ont affecté plus d'une fois les relations réciproques dans le passé. Cet acte magnifique du grand Homme d'Etat qu'est le Premier (M. Robarts), acte qui avait institué la Conférence sur la Confédération de Demain en novembre 1967, mit en marche le processus d'un progrès d'envergure nationale.

L'Ontario, de par les actes et les intentions déclarés de son gouvernement, ainsi que par les grandes qualités d'Homme d'Etat de son Premier est devenu le symbole et le champion des intérêts des Canadiens francophones résidant dans toutes les provinces, en dehors du Québec.

Comment se fait-il donc que tant de choses se soient accomplies dans cette province? La raison en est simple, mais pourtant extrêmement importante, c'est parce que bon nombre d'ontariens anglophones veulent et aspirent à ce que notre province reflète plus fidèlement les idéaux que nous a tracés notre héritage historique.

Ils reconnaissent qu'il existe au Canada deux cultures linguistiques fondamentales. Ils comprennent que la diversité est la source même de notre force et de la richesse de notre vie.

Le mois passé à Cornwall, le Premier avait réitéré cette attitude en disant que "Le Gouvernement de cette province s'est engagé à assurer à tous nos citoyens une citoyenneté pleine et égale quelle que soit leur origine linguistique ou nationale. Ce faisant, nous avons reconnu les aspirations légitimes de nos résidents francophones et leur droit de pouvoir s'exprimer dans leur propre langue. Nous avons prouvé de plusieurs façons et dans de nombreuses occasions, à tous les Canadiens, que le gouvernement de l'Ontario est prêt à adopter comme il l'a d'ailleurs fait, des mesures constructives à cette fin."

Quelles sont certaines de ces mesures? Je citerai comme premier exemple la Fonction Publique de l'Ontario.

L'établissement par le Ministère de la Fonction Publique et le Ministère de l'Éducation de cours de langue française à l'intention des fonctionnaires dont les fonctions exigent une connaissance du français.

Toutes les lettres reçues en français par le gouvernement seront répondues dans cette langue.

Tous les ministères gouvernementaux seront encouragés à fournir des services bilingues dans les bureaux régionaux situés dans des zones où il existe une concentration suffisante de citoyens francophones.

Le gouvernement étendra les services de son bureau de traduction dans le but spécifique de résoudre le problème de communication en français.

Il existe encore un domaine assez sérieux où le gouvernement ontarien a aussi adopté des politiques saines concernant l'usage du français et de l'anglais dans l'administration municipale. Il préconise l'emploi des deux langues dans les communautés qui comptent un nombre suffisant de citoyens francophones; elles se situent principalement dans l'est et le nord-est de l'Ontario, dans les comtés et les districts de Stormont, Glengarry, Prescott et Russell, Carleton, Nipissing, Temiskaming, Cochrane, Sudbury et Algoma. Cette catégorie comprend aussi des communautés établies au sud-ouest de l'Ontario telles que Penetanguishene sur la Baie Georgienne, Welland et dans certaines parties du comté d'Essex.

Les municipalités seront appelées à adopter un certain nombre de mesures spéciales comme l'emploi d'un personnel bilingue suffisant pour servir le public d'une façon efficace dans les deux langues, oralement et par écrit. La place me manque pour vous donner les détails des nombreux aspects de cette politique, mais je citerai pourtant un exemple typique qui est la préparation de formules officielles locales dans les deux langues comme par exemple, les avis de cote foncière, les formules d'impôt, les factures d'eau et les listes des électeurs.

Ces projets représentent dans une certaine mesure pour les autorités municipales, la reconnaissance de la situation existante dans un certain nombre de municipalités. Un bon nombre de gouvernements locaux de l'est de l'Ontario ont conduit une grande partie de leurs affaires en français, pendant plusieurs années. Les municipalités d'Eastview et de Hawkesbury ont servi leur public dans une très grande mesure dans les deux langues. Dans le cadre des efforts qui se poursuivent actuellement et qui visent à assurer des possibilités éducatives pleines et entières aux Franco-ontariens, ces nouvelles mesures dans le domaine municipal s'accompliront de plus en plus aisément.

Encore un domaine d'importance majeure est l'administration de la justice. Il faut admettre pourtant que l'usage des deux langues dans ce domaine pose un problème assez difficile. Toutefois, une étude approfondie a été entreprise sur trois possibilités:

1. La possibilité que le gouvernement s'engage à supporter les dépenses qu'il faudra encourir pour des interprètes et des services de traduction qui seront nécessaires dans tout procédé de plaidoirie ou de justice dans les tribunaux qui se trouvent sous la juridiction provinciale.

2. Des documents judiciaires bilingues dans certains districts judiciaires comptant une population francophone suffisante.

3. L'encouragement des juges, des avocats, des greffiers, des shérifs, des huissiers et des sténographes juridiques de profiter des cours de langue.

Monsieur l'Orateur, je me permets de terminer cette partie de mon discours en citant de nouveau le Premier dans son adresse à Cornwall, l'été passé. Il a fait le résumé de notre progrès avec ces quelques mots pleins de sagesse:

Beaucoup a été accompli au cours de la dernière année pour les citoyens francophones de l'Ontario et du Canada. Quand les programmes et les politiques adoptées par tous les gouvernements du Canada auront atteint leur pleine maturité, nous aurons déjà traversé une immense distance vers l'élimination des inégalités qui ont existé pendant de si longues années. Ces changements prennent un sens encore plus significatif quand on considère qu'ils sont dûs à la bonne volonté d'un peuple travaillant à l'unison, dans un esprit de coopération et de compréhension. Nous nous sommes cherchés l'un l'autre et nous avons reconnu nos communes aspirations. Ensemble donc, en tant que résidents d'une grande province, nous continuerons toujours à consacrer nos efforts pour édifier un Canada plus fort et plus uni que jamais.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to repeat in English some of what I said in French. I think it very important and speaking as a Franco-Ontarian, I would like everybody to hear what I said in French.

Back in the early 1600's, when trading and mission posts were built along Ontario waterways, an estimated 45,000 Indians were the sole occupants of what was to become Ontario.

My ancestors, the French were the first permanent white settlers. In fact they had built communities as far west as the Windsor-Detroit district some 50 years before Canada came under British rule. Further settlement came in 1784 when large numbers of United Empire Loyalists trekked north for refuge after the American revolt against Britain. Joining them in breaking new land were groups of Scots, Irish, Dutch, Swiss and Germans.

By 1812, when we were threatened by the British-American War, the population had reached 80,000. By Confederation in 1867 it had grown to 1.5 million. Today, we Franco-Ontarians alone total some 725,000, or roughly ten per cent of the Ontario population. Following the majority group of Anglo-Saxon origin, we Franco-Ontarians are the largest of Ontario's nine other main ethnic groups. As a citizen of French origin I consider myself fortunate to be a part of the rich and varied ethnic mosaic of Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, it is a matter of pride to me to list the major ethnic groups that contribute so importantly to our province's cultural scene. Ontario is now composed of: Anglo-Saxon 60 per cent, 4,142,000; French 10 per cent, 724,000; German/Austrian 7 per cent, 487,000; Italian 4 per cent, 306,000; Dutch 3 per cent, 216,000; Polish 2 per cent, 167,000; Ukrainian 2 per cent, 139,000; Jewish 1 per cent, 77,000; Scandinavian 1 per cent, 70,000; Native Indian 0.8 per cent, 56,000.

How fortunate we all are in Ontario to share in the richness of this heritage.

As a Franco-Ontarian I greeted this government's announcement of August, 1967, with sincere appreciation. I refer to the announcement that it is this government's firm intention to establish a publicly financed system of French-speaking secondary schools. Since that announcement I am happy to note the giant strides that have been taken to carry out the intention.

A committee on French-language public secondary schools has examined the methods of expanding secondary school instruction in French. A major recommendation resulting, suggests that courses already offered in such schools in French, be extended to include a complete programme where the number of students in an area makes such a move practical.

The legislation to accomplish this historic step forward vastly improves the Franco-Ontarian's educational opportunities. The bills set out the legal provisions for the establishment of both public and secondary schools. While the principle of bilingual education had been previously recognized, until these bills were presented by the Minister of Education, no specific statutory guarantee had ever been made for French-language schools in Ontario.

What will be the objectives of French-language secondary schools? Just what is it that the Franco-Ontarian community itself has said is needed? I will answer these questions as briefly as I can:

1. The bilingual graduate of a French-language secondary school should have gained a knowledge of French that is as complete as the level of intellectual abilities of the average student will allow. French is his mother tongue and should be studied with cultural as well as pragmatic aims in view. His knowledge and command of French must allow him to live fully as a Canadian of French descent who can benefit from, and actively take part in, the cultural life of the French-speaking Canadians and of the members of the French world community.

2. The bilingual graduate should have a sound knowledge of English which will allow him to: (a) communicate effectively with his English-speaking compatriots; (b) meet the competition of English-speaking workers of equal occupational skill; (c) take part in the political, civic and social activities of his community.

3. The bilingual graduate should have gained an understanding, after having gained the basic linguistic skills, of the value systems and cultural patterns of his English-speaking countrymen.

To sum up, Mr. Speaker, the ultimate objective, now within our grasp, is to assure every French-speaking student in Ontario the opportunity to receive his education, from kindergarten through university and beyond, in his mother tongue.

In this field of French-language education it is particularly gratifying to me to see already examples of voluntary co-operation between English and French in the area of secondary education. I refer to the example of the Ottawa Collegiate Institute board in agreeing to assume responsibility as of this fall for Ottawa's seven French-language private secondary schools. This was an admirable decision taken entirely on the initiative of the local Ottawa authorities. As well, in other parts of Ontario, groups of French and English have set up joint committees to find the most satisfactory way of operating French-language secondary schools.

In the past 18 months there have been many events and significant decisions taken by this government which held great importance for the Franco-Ontarian community. These events and decisions helped to wipe out old animosities which have too often tainted relations between us in the past. That magnificent act of statesmanship by the hon. Prime Minister, when he instituted the Confederation of Tomorrow conference in November, 1967, launched the process on a national basis.

Ontario, through the acts and statements of intent of this government, and the statesmanlike concern of the hon. Prime Minister, has become identified as the champion of French-speaking Canadians in all provinces outside Quebec.

Why are we accomplishing so much in this province? The reason is simple but important. Many English-speaking Ontarians are ready and eager to have our province more faithfully reflect the mainstreams of our heritage.

They recognize that Canada has two basic linguistic cultures. They understand that diversity is the source of our strength and the richness of our life.

In Cornwall this past summer the Prime Minister reiterated our attitude when he said:

The government of this province has committed itself to the assurance of full and equal citizenship for all, regardless of national or linguistic origin. In doing so, we have recognized the aspirations of our French-speaking residents to express themselves in their own language. We have demonstrated in many ways and on many occasions before all Canadians, that the government of Ontario is prepared to take and is taking constructive steps to achieve this end.

What are some of the steps taken? I will take the Ontario public service as my first example:

The establishment, by The Department of Civil Service and The Department of Education, of language courses for civil servants whose duties require a knowledge of French.

All letters received in French by this government will be answered in that language.

All government departments will be encouraged to provide bilingual services in those field offices located in areas where there is a sufficient concentration of French-speaking people.

The government will expand the facilities of its translation bureau, particularly to deal with French communications.

In a second critical area the government of Ontario has instituted sound policies with regard to the use of French and English in municipal administration. This government is encouraging the use of both languages in those communities having a concentration of French-speaking citizens. In the main, such places are in eastern and northeastern Ontario, within the counties and districts of Stormont, Glengarry, Prescott, Russell, Carleton, Nipissing, Temiskaming, Cochrane, Sudbury and Algoma. Also in this category are communities in southwestern Ontario such as Penetanguishene on Georgian Bay, Welland and parts of the county of Essex.

Municipalities will be urged to adopt a number of specific policies such as the employment of enough bilingual staff to deal effectively with the public in both languages in oral and written communications. I will not detail the many aspects of this policy, but a helpful example is the provision in both languages of local official forms and notices such as assessment notices, tax forms, water bills and voters' lists.

To some extent these plans for the municipal field represent recognition of existing situations in a number of municipalities. For many years several local governments in eastern Ontario have effectively conducted much of their business in French. Eastview and Hawkesbury have provided most municipal services in both languages. With the efforts underway to ensure a full range of educational opportunities to Franco-Ontarians, these new policies in the municipal field will become easier to accomplish.

Another major area of concern is the administration of justice. Admittedly, the use of two languages in this field is a difficult problem. However, thorough study of three possibilities are underway:

1. The provision that the government shall meet the expenses incurred for interpreters and translation services in any pleading or process before courts of provincial jurisdiction.

2. The provision of bilingual court documents in a designated judicial district having a large enough French-speaking population.

3. The encouragement of judges, lawyers, clerks, sheriffs, bailiffs and legal stenographers to take advantage of language training facilities.

Mr. Speaker, I will close this section of my speech with a further quotation from the hon. Prime Minister, again from his address in Cornwall this past summer. He summed up our progress with these wise words:

A great deal has been achieved during the last year on behalf of the French-speaking people of Ontario and Canada. When the programme and policies of all governments in Canada reach maturity, we will have travelled a considerable distance toward removing inequalities which have existed for many years. The changes are all the more significant because we have achieved progress through people of goodwill working together in a spirit of cooperation. We have sought each other out and recognized the aspirations of each other. Together, as residents of a great province, we are working for a stronger and more united Canada.

A final point, Mr. Speaker: As a Progressive Conservative, I note with pride the fact that among the government members of this House, there are more French-speaking members by far than the combined total among the other two political parties represented. You see, Franco-Ontarians are very shrewd customers as well. They also know and obviously appreciate a quality product.

Mr. Speaker, turning from the particular concerns of a Franco-Ontarian to the more general and immediately current interest of the Speech from the Throne, I wish to compliment this government on the wisdom and economic moderation of its legislative forecast.

I note that one Toronto newspaper, the Star, has referred to the forecast as an austerity programme. If that newspaper believes that austerity consists of not attempting to buy more than one can immediately afford, then perhaps its description is correct. But, a more accurate assessment came from the Globe and Mail of Wednesday, November 20, 1968, when its lead editorial commented on the Throne Speech with these words:

It certainly promised full speed ahead with a number of costly programmes already underway.

The Globe and Mail also pointed out that while Ontario is going through a difficult financial period, its credit position is excellent. The editorial went on to say:

In some respects its (credit position) a good deal better than that of Ottawa, which has not only returned to the trough too often, but has compromised its respectability with the financial community by promising . . . and failing to produce . . . a balanced budget.

Mr. Speaker, I see nothing austere in a programme forecast that will change and improve expropriation laws; expand the HOME programme; amend The Assessment Act to secure greater efficiency; increase control over spending by the province, the municipalities, school boards and universities; review of the machinery of collective bargaining; establish a plan to provide a basic standard of services to all municipalities; make further moves to strengthen the Ontario Human Rights Code; establish an educational communications authority; assist children with mental and emotional disorders; propose a Health Protection Act to prevent and reduce abuses of our environment in the various fields of pollution; legislate to improve the production of food and increase the financial return to farmers; co-ordinate all northern transportation policies; revise The Mining Act, and offer a programme to provide additional recreation areas and more parks.

Mr. Speaker, if this is austerity, if this was, as some of the media said, a "no-news" Throne Speech, I question the news judgments involved. I sometimes feel that the media, at least in Metropolitan Toronto, are so close to Queen's Park and the flood of good news that flows from this government, that they have become jaded with riches and in their frustration are often reduced to nit-picking. In this respect they are similar in character to the Liberals and NDP.

Speaking of the NDP, Mr. Speaker, I also offer my congratulations to their leader, the member for York South (Mr. MacDonald), on his recent survival at Kitchener.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Belanger: We would have missed his lengthy criticisms, just as one can learn to miss a nagging wife.

As we have experienced over the past quarter century, the NDP's bark is much more impressive than its bite—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order! Order!

We have had a very quiet and fruitful afternoon and I would like it to continue and let this member make his speech without a continual undertone of noise.

Mr. Belanger:—especially when it comes to elections. As I suggested, we would have missed the bark.

Mr. Speaker, this province is the envy of every state and province in North America when it comes to legal aid. This humane and socially progressive system proves this government's concern for the well-being of the people it serves. Naturally enough our legal aid programme will have some teething troubles. One cannot expect otherwise of such a magnificent and far-reaching programme.

I merely wish to add a word of caution—a word of caution on the dangers of abuse. At the same time, I am sure this government is aware of the danger of abuse and will exercise every care as it keeps a watchful eye on the system.

On another topic I warmly welcomed the announcement by the hon. Robert Welch, Provincial Secretary, that there would be a full review of Ontario liquor laws. The Minister indicated his desire and willingness to seek an enlightened policy with respect to the control, sale and licensing of liquor. The present review will, I am confident, bring progressive new proposals and recommendations in line with the changing requirements and customs of the people of Ontario. In this review it is my hope the matter of Saturday evening closing hours will receive attention.

As many of us unfortunately know, licensed premises must close at 11.30 p.m. Saturday night. This highly annoying regulation leads me to slightly change the words to an old popular song—Saturday night is the lousiest night of the week.

The present Saturday night closing should be extended to at least 1.00 a.m., if not 1.30 a.m. Perhaps Saturday evening has no special significance to our wealthier citizens, but I can assure this House that it is immensely significant to those people of more modest incomes who make up the majority of our population. It is particularly significant in a riding such as Prescott and Russell, where much of our rural population regard Saturday night as a time of social communication and good fellowship. They do not enjoy being sent home early like children suffering under parental discipline.

Another particularly annoying matter in this area is the fact that to acquire a dining lounge license a specific portion of an establishment's gross income must come from the sale of food. As I understand it this portion is 25 per cent. In some cases it may bend to allow a slightly smaller percentage but, in many cases, it remains an unrealistic figure.

Mr. Speaker, it is simply impossible for many otherwise suitable establishments to meet this food-percentage requirement. It may be reasonable in highly urban areas. In more rural areas of the province, such as mine, there is not enough trade in the matter of meals to ever allow otherwise suitable premises to secure a dining lounge license. I am sure the hon. Provincial Secretary (Mr. Welch) will give his most serious consideration to these two annoying items I have mentioned. In both cases the regulations are not in tune with the times, or the people, or the particular social and geographic situation.

Mr. Speaker, in closing my speech I intended to sum up the many, many achievements of the Progressive Conservative governments of Ontario—accomplishments that have brought this province to its number one place in Canada.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Belanger: But, rather than toot our own horn, I will end with a simple quotation from our sister province of Quebec.

On July 17, 1966, a Montreal periodical, Le Petit Journal, had this to say about our province:

Without Ontario, Canada would be an under-developed country and our standard of living in Quebec would be considerably lower. Fortunately, Ontario does exist and no customs office separates Ontario from Quebec. Furthermore, Ontario's prosperity is far from being harmful to us.

Mr. J. Jessiman (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, it is a great honour and privilege for me, on behalf of the people of Fort William riding, to second the motion of the hon. member for Prescott and Russell for the adoption of the Speech from the Throne presented by the Honourable, the Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario. I believe this is the first occasion which this honour has been given to a member of the Legislature from Fort William riding.

First of all, I would like to add my congratulations to the many our new Lieutenant-Governor has already received upon his appointment as Her Majesty's representative in Ontario. Despite the negative attitude from the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha), I think that the office of Lieutenant-Governor is one that is worthy of maintaining. Some members opposite feel that just because something is old, it is irrelevant, and they want to change things simply for the sake of change.

Unkind critics of the member for Sudbury have suggested to me that maybe he really only likes to read about himself in the press.

Personally, I believe that the office of Lieutenant-Governor gives to us a link with our past traditions, which I do not think we have any reason to view with shame or misgivings, and in fact adds a great deal of colour, interest and history to the opening of the Legislature.

Also, Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the hon. member for London South (Mr. White) on his appointment as Minister of Revenue. I think all would agree that he is one of the more active and interesting orators in the House and his background and experience in economics and business and as a writer qualify him for the important position he now holds in the affairs of this province.

I would like, too, at this time, to say to you, Mr. Speaker, that we in this chamber have been very impressed with the way in which you have carried out your responsibilities. Certainly your duties require a great deal of patience and are not made easier by some of our actions. Nevertheless, your fairness in rulings, your subtle humour and your firmness in handling the operations of this House all characterize a broad ability which all members respect.

While it is not always customary to say nice words about members of the Opposition parties, and in particular the leader of the Opposition, I would on this occasion, break with that custom and thank the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Nixon) for the kind words he extended to our colleague, the hon. member for Middlesex South (Mr. Olde). All of us, I am sure, are happy to see him up and around again, in good health, and serving his constituents so vigorously and well as he has done since 1963.

Mr. Speaker, I want to comment briefly on those events which took place at a roller skating rink in Kitchener last weekend. Firstly, let me congratulate the member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) on his retention of the leadership of his group. While we in this party do not get overly excited about things that take place in minority class political groups—sprinkled with a handful of opportunists, some of them absent this afternoon—most of us have a high regard for the member for York South and it is good to see him return to his same place at the opening of this Legislature even though he may be missing right now. However, in his absence, Mr. Speaker, I do think that it should be placed on the record, that 31 per cent of the delegates, or almost one out of every three, rejected him as their leader, and it is also significant that over 25 per cent of his own caucus, or one of every four socialist members of the Legislature, say to him, "Donald, go home, we do not need you."

Why then, do his own people, his own friends, rise up to smite him? I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that one of the major reasons is that the hon. member for York South has created a believability gap that is reaching gigantic proportions. We remember in the election campaign of 1967 his slogan—67 in '67. Well, he got 20 seats—a full 47 short of his prediction. His error gap or believability gap was 70 per cent off. He said the socialists were going to win in 1955, in 1959, in 1963 and in 1967. In fact, the socialists won none. Thus, the believability gap is now 100 per cent. I will send the member for York South a copy.

Now, he talks about winning in 1971. What nonsense! No wonder his friends want to push him out. They do not believe him and neither do the people of Ontario and particularly the people of Fort William.

Quite frankly, with friends like the ones he normally has sitting beside him and behind him, the socialists in my view will be quite lucky to win seven seats in 1971. This is not my own view or the view of our side of the House, but this is what 31 per cent of the delegates to his convention said and 25 per cent of his own MPPs say. To quote the member for Riverdale (Mr. Renwick), "There is no will." And further, as the member for Riverdale said in Toronto on November 12, "Face up to the fact that MacDonald's leadership as it has been is not good enough for victory in 1971."

Mr. Speaker, just one more comment on the three-ring circus of socialist politics. The member for Riverdale charged in St. Thomas on November 4 that all full-time paid representatives of the United Steelworkers and United Packinghouse Workers were told to get out and support and work for the member for York South in his bid to retain his group's leadership. If they did not, according to the member for Riverdale, they would lose their jobs. This is a very serious charge. Here, we have a group that pretends to support the working man, yet through fear and coercion their union representatives are told to work for MacDonald or they lose their jobs. Says the member for Riverdale, and I am quoting him now from an article—

Mrs. M. Renwick (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I hope all information brought to this assembly will be accurate information. The statement made by the member for Riverdale in St. Thomas was a statement carefully prepared, carefully assessed and accurately stated, not what the member for Fort William said, "that all paid members of United Packinghouse Workers and the United Steelworkers of America. . ." It simply stated members of District No. 6—not all members, Mr. Speaker—and members of the national office of United Packinghouse Workers, whose correct name now is Canadian Food and Allied Workers, I believe, Mr. Speaker. Thank you

Mr. Jessiman: I thank the member for those kind words but I am sending over, Mr. Speaker, the actual photostatic copy out of the paper, and I quote:

"Any staff representative of those two unions who supports me or campaigns for me does so at the risk of his job."

We in this party have argued for many years that the membership of organized labour, the rank and file, have been taken to the cleaners by the NDP. We have argued that money forced out of the rank and file by—

- (a) The political check-off system;
- (b) The so-called political action groups within the unions who use rank and file funds without their consent to distribute socialist propaganda;

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Jessiman: Squirm, Donald, squirm.

(c) Union organizers whose pay cheques are made up out of the rank and file membership fees are forced to work in election campaigns without consent of the rank and file—most of whom do not and will not support the NDP—is against all principles of common decency and the right of the union members to be free to vote and support political parties of their own choosing without coercion or arm twisting.

Now we find the disease of political fear and coercion being used by the leader of the NDP and his friends in a purely internal affair of the NDP group. In other words, here we have union dues which partly go to pay the salaries of union organizers—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: It is understood that in the House on occasions such as this there would be a certain amount of interference with the speaker, but this is most unseemly and I would ask the members, particularly on Mr. Speaker's left, to give this member the opportunity of making his point. As we all know here, in due course every member will have an opportunity to speak in this debate and the rebuttals can be made.

Mr. Jessiman: Let the record show that the charge being made that union representatives must support and work for the member for York South or lose their jobs was not made by a Progressive Conservative, or by a Liberal, but by the deputy leader of the New Democratic Party, the member for Riverdale.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to turn to the subject of northern Ontario. We have heard a great deal of talk by the Opposition in connection with government policies for this part of Ontario. Much of this talk is simply centred around slogans designed to capture votes. Most of the talk is negative, but all of this talk, all of this electioneering, is very separatist in its nature.

Let me say at the outset that the people of northern Ontario do not want an eleventh province. Despite the Opposition parties' attempt to fan a movement in this direction so as to capture a few votes, northern Ontario is, and will remain, an integral part of Ontario—economically, culturally and socially.

In a few minutes, I am going to outline some of the areas which the Ontario government has brought forward, imaginative and constructive proposals for the development of the north country. But before I do, I want to read into the record that the federal Liberal member for Kenora-Rainy River on November 18 asked the Prime Minister of Canada to place on the agenda of the federal-provincial conference in Ottawa next month, the question of northern Ontario and northern Quebec becoming an eleventh province. Also, another separatist in northern Ontario—in fact the man who is making the most noise—is a character by the name of Donald McKinnon. He is well known to the leader of the Opposition—he was the provincial Liberal candidate in 1967 for the riding of Cochrane South. I might mention here that he got some 3,000 votes out of a total of 20,000 that were cast.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to turn to the positive record of the Ontario government and its policies of the north. I intend to deal at some length this afternoon on this record and to say that we in this party have not neglected the north as the Opposition members like to believe. I will be the first to admit that many programmes need to be expanded and new programmes will have to be pursued and implemented. But I also suggest that we have accomplished, through good government, programmes that are both more realistic and more extensive than the election campaign groaning of Liberals and socialists. They offer pessimism when our party offers opportunity. They offer campaign oratory and promises; we offer action and progress.

Now to the defence of that record.

It is only fitting that at the start we review and examine the educational opportunities opened up to the north by the Ontario Progressive Conservative government.

Mr. Speaker, 50 years ago, northern Ontario was a rough, demanding country with drifts of snow and perishing cold in the winter and a summer of sultry heat and voracious flies. One had to be an intrepid hunter, explorer, miner or adventurer to risk the hazards of climate and terrain.

Now the northland has a new image. As life in northern Ontario has progressed beyond the elemental struggle for survival, man has conquered his environment and brought the riches and refinements of civilization to the new north. At the hub of the learning, growing process is education.

Two new universities, Lakehead University in Port Arthur and Laurentian University in Sudbury, have very special opportunities to offer to the students of northern Ontario.

Lakehead University, for example, in co-operation with the Fort William and Port Arthur school boards and symphony orchestra, have set up a unique programme in musical education, under the direction of Boris Brott, the brilliant young Canadian who, at 24, became assistant conductor of the New York Philharmonic. This year, the Princeton string quartet, as Lakehead's musicians in residence, are giving a total of 2,400 teaching hours to the local elementary schools and will play a total of 240 concerts in northern communities from Kenora to Marathon. In this way the children and the citizens of the northland are benefiting from the best in musical training and appreciation.

As part of an effort to push the boundaries of habitable territory even further north, Lakehead has taken over a Department of Lands and Forests outpost 100 miles north of the Lakehead, near Lake Nipigon for study of the boreal forest. At the Black Sturgeon research centre, northern Ontario students will undertake environmental studies in forestry, biology, zoology and archaeology.

Mr. Speaker, among Lakehead University's new programmes designed for the needs of the local community, is a chemical engineering diploma programme oriented around and towards the pulp and paper industry. Lakehead also offers courses in mining engineering technology and a variety of courses in forestry. It has also recently initiated its first master's degree programmes in four disciplines — English, physics, psychology and mathematics. The new science and technology building houses an IBM model 40 computer which can be used by staff and students.

Symbolic of the high degree of imaginative planning that characterizes the development of the north and of this university is its $24 million programme of construction on the shores of a man-made lake that will provide skating in the winter and swimming in the summer.

Mr. Speaker, to finance these projects, the government of Ontario, through its Department of University Affairs, is providing during the 1968-1969 fiscal year a total of more than $13 million in capital and operating grants.

Laurentian University in Sudbury, being bilingual, expresses in a different way the quality and needs of the new cultural atmosphere of the Ontario north. This university is now offering a bilingual degree in all its programmes—the first in North America to do so—fulfilling one of its aims of encouraging our dual French-English culture both inside and outside the classroom. It is receiving provincial government support during 1968-1969 of a total of more than $9 million. The Laurentian faculty of arts and science now has seven colleges, including Algoma in Sault Ste. Marie and Nipissing in North Bay.

Besides courses in chemical, civil and metallurgical engineering, Laurentian offers one of Ontario's first undergraduate degrees in social work, which will prepare qualified social workers for community services, government and industry. In another co-operative venture with the Sudbury community, Laurentian's labs are being used for cardio-thoracic research.

This will give some idea of the new climate and attitude that prevails in the north. Spurred on by the momentum of the victory over the hostile environment, man has gone on to higher aspirations of development and improvement in his universities and colleges and the total life of the community.

Mr. Speaker, as a result of this new sense of challenge in the north, the government of Ontario, in co-operation with the federal government and with the enthusiastic support of Canadian industry and Ontario's northern universities, has envisioned a mid-Canada development corridor. The Lakehead cities are the only large population centres so, not unnaturally, the conference next August on this topic will be held in Port Arthur. Such a plan could realize dreams that last century's most visionary explorer could never have foreseen: dreams of a northland vigorous, expanding, challenging, to meet the needs of Canada's people, both in terms of the land and its burgeoning natural resources.

Mr. Speaker, The Department of Education, in pursuing its policy of ensuring equal educational opportunity for all children throughout Ontario, has given special attention to our rich and developing northland. This is well exemplified in its handling of the special circumstances of the north in the reorganization of school jurisdictions that is now in progress. Here, the particular problems arise from the nature of the area—a mix of highly developed urban centres with mining and other communities that are scattered and somewhat isolated in large tracts of territory. For this reason, as you know, guidelines for the special concerns of the north in this process of reorganization were provided in an independent document that was published separately.

In the coming year 1969, much effort will be devoted in the north to this reorganization of boards and administration. In the territorial districts, new boards of education for the divisions and new separate school boards for enlarged zones will assume operational control of the schools on January 1, 1969, and will appoint their own supervisory officers. The Department of Education will provide all possible assistance in the reorganization and will adjust its supervisory services for school boards in isolated areas which will not be included in new divisions or zones. It is our aim that these changes shall bring a new impetus and vigour to education in northern Ontario, just as in the south.

I want to refer at this point to an aspect of education in the north to which the government attaches great importance—the colleges of applied arts and technology.

Along with the establishment of new colleges in other parts of the province, The Department of Education has now in operation campuses of colleges of applied arts and technology at the Lakehead, Kirkland Lake, Haileybury, South Porcupine, Sault Ste Marie, Sudbury and North Bay. In these new colleges, approximately 2,650 full-time day students and 2,000 part-time and extension students are enrolled. And in addition to these I have just mentioned there is, in Kenora, Confederation College, operating a number of classes.

Among the varied courses offered in these institutions, there are programmes in the fields of trade, technician training, technology, applied arts and science, and business. In most cases plans are well developed for permanent buildings and on some campuses construction is under way or has been completed.

I should like next to draw the attention of the House to a number of educational developments which have special local significance. One of the most important groups of citizens in our society today is our Indian people. We in the northern part of this great province harbour the province's largest percentage of these first citizens. Many people have pointed out that we have an Indian problem.

Mr. Speaker, I would point out to you that this is not the case. I feel that we have a white problem in that so many varieties of missionaries, social workers, and politicians with preconceived ideas who work for Indians, do more harm than good, because they are working for their own satisfaction, seeking publicity which is always available when one assists minority groups.

The government of this province has shown a tremendous desire and has made great strides in assuring that the social benefits of our society are available to these people, in spite of the feelings of the federal government and their complete lack of co-operation in this particular field.

One has only to look at the recent members' tour of northwestern Ontario. There we saw the Minister of Social and Family Services (Mr. Yaremko) break away from those enjoying the beauty and the interesting tours to visit and examine first hand the problems of these sincere people.

This dedicated Minister of the Crown accompanied by the member for Kenora (Mr. Bernier), spent every available moment talking, looking, and planning ways to place these, our first citizens, on a level in our society that is taken by the rest of us for granted.

Steps are being taken to provide improved education for Indian residents of Ontario. The educational centre at Moosonee is nearing completion and it will be officially opened next June. This centre serves the elementary school children in certain subjects outside the scope of the public and separate schools and it offers academic upgrading and manpower training to adults. The director supervises a total staff of 23. The board of governors employs people of Indian descent wherever possible.

On the CNR main line to the north of Lake Nipigon, new schools, each of two rooms, have been erected during the past summer at Auden, where a one-room school has been replaced, and at Ferland, where previously no school existed. In both these localities the federal and Ontario governments share the financial responsibility.

It is gratifying to note, throughout the north as well as the southern part of the province, that Indian bands are asking for an appointed representative on school boards and these requests are being granted and guaranteed by the boards which provide education for Indian pupils.

In northeastern Ontario several boards have organized French-language schools in temporary or leased accommodation, for French-speaking pupils who formerly attended private, French-language schools.

These schools will also augment the French-language instruction which has been given for several years in such places as Chelmsford and Sturgeon Falls where both English-speaking and French-speaking pupils have enjoyed the benefits of a composite school programme. The board's concern in 1969 will be planning for permanent accommodation for the French-language schools and for some in which both English and French will be used.

Commencing in 1969, parents of elementary school pupils living outside the boundaries of school sections and zones where daily bus service is not available, may apply for a travelling or living allowance to the school board providing the education.

In isolated communities in the northern districts, 25 teachers are working in one- or two-room schools under the northern corps. The department subsidizes their travel and provides a northern allowance in addition to a salary paid by the board. Six schools, each of one or two rooms, have qualified for this assistance for the first time in the current school year.

May I turn now to another aspect of education in the north, which is one of the special concerns of the Ontario government there as it is elsewhere in the province—the services for the blind and deaf. In 1963 the first home-visiting teacher of pre-school deaf children was appointed. The initial service was so successful that six such home-visiting teachers are now at work. I should point out, I think, that the teachers who have received special training for this activity average almost 1,000 miles a month by car plus air travel.

Two teachers concentrate their efforts in northern Ontario. The programme has two purposes: To prepare young deaf children for admission to school, and to assist the parents in the training of their own young deaf child at home.

The Department of Education intends to expand this programme gradually so that home visits may be more frequent. In this way, young pre-school deaf children in northern and rural Ontario, and their parents, will benefit from the assistance of professionally trained teachers of the deaf while remaining together as a family in their own homes.

The provincial Department of Education also helps maintain schools for retarded children in 11 northern Ontario districts. Since April, 1966, we have provided educational programmes in special classes within Ontario Department of Health hospital facilities, for groups of children who include the mentally retarded and those who are physically, socially and emotionally disturbed. One of these schools is located in the Ontario Hospital at Port Arthur.

With the co-operation of The Department of Health, occupational therapy, kitchen, library, ceramics and sewing areas are being made available to the school for instructional purposes.

Mr. Jessiman moves the adjournment of the debate.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will resume this debate.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 22, 1968

The House met at 10.30 o'clock, a.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We are always pleased to have visitors to the Legislature and today we welcome as guests students from the following schools: In the east gallery, from St. Philip Neri separate school, Downsview, and Winchester Street public school, Toronto; and later on today in the west gallery, Don Mills junior high school, Don Mills.

Petitions.

Presenting reports.

Motions.

Introduction of bills.

RELIEF FROM LIABILITY OF MEDICAL PRACTITIONERS

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to relieve medical practitioners from liability in respect of voluntary emergency medical services.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

ETHICS OF ELECTED REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act respecting ethics of elected representatives.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, this bill prohibits certain conduct on the part of legislators, and requires disclosure of interests and activities that cannot reasonably be prohibited but whose nature and extent should be public knowledge.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the hon. Minister of Energy and Resources Management concerning the Ontario Hydro development at Pickering. I wonder if he can tell the House how far behind in the construction they are of the atomic energy site in Pickering?

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): Mr. Speaker, relative to the original in-service date established at the time the Pickering generation station was authorized, the first unit is ten months behind, the second unit five months behind, and the third and fourth units are predicted on time. The reasons are: first, late delivery of important components; second, effect of our strike last year.

Mr. Speaker, it may be noted that the same information was given by me to the leader of the Opposition in this House on May 7, 1968.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, surely in reply to the gratuitous comment in addition to the answer you will permit me to say that much time has elapsed since that particular occasion; and surely, with the good weather that we have had in the summer and fall, we would have hoped for an improvement in the situation.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister to whom the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) is directing his question is not in, I believe, this morning and will not be in until Monday.

Hon. J. H. White (Minister of Revenue): Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege. In the Metro final edition of this morning's Globe and Mail, on page one, there is an article headed, "Ontario Suggests Federal Budget May Prevent Succession Duty Cut". This heading is completely inaccurate. The lead reads as follows:

Because of "the radical changes brought about by the Benson budget" Ontario will be forced to reconsider raising the exemptions on succession duties to $96,000 from $75,000, Provincial Revenue Minister John White said last night."

This lead is completely misleading. It is misleading because the word "reconsider" is used instead of "review" and because one only of the 56 recommendations of the Smith committee and select committee report was singled out. The method I chose to ensure that what I did say would be accurate and non-controversial, was to read the question of the leader of the Opposition and quote my reply. And I would like that to be very clear.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Hamilton Mountain.

Mr. J. R. Smith (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Minister of Trade and Development.

When are the HOME lots going to be offered for sale to the public in Hamilton?

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Trade and Development): Mr. Speaker, we always have the answers.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Has the Minister got the houses?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Just listen carefully. Do not get confused.

HOME lots in the Ralston neighbourhood in Hamilton will be offered within a week of Ontario Housing Corporation receiving Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation's approval of the lot values which have been proposed for the area.

As hon. members know, the primary purpose of the HOME plan is to make lots available to potential homeowners on a leasehold basis. However, it is necessary to establish a land value at the inception because every lessee who decides, after a period of five years, that he wishes to purchase a lot, may do so at the original established value without regard to any increases in land values in the area which may have taken place during the intervening period.

Land values are also required for the very small number of homeowner applicants who wish to purchase lots at the inception either on a cash basis or over a period of up to 35 years.

We expect to receive Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation's approval within a week, and as the Ontario Housing Corporation mobile sales office is already on the site, lots will be advertised and offered to the public within a matter of days from receiving the approval.

Mr. MacDonald: Why does the Minister not answer the question?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I answered the question.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Wentworth.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a—

Mr. Speaker: Order, order! The hon. member for Wentworth has the floor.

Mr. Deans: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Highways. I hope that he can get to the point much more quickly than his friend, the Minister of Trade and Development.

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member will place his question.

Mr. Deans: In the interest of public safety, will the Minister order the closing of Murray Avenue where it enters the Queen Elizabeth Highway at Grimsby?

Hon. G. E. Gomme (Minister of Highways): Mr. Speaker, before answering this question I want to tell the House that the hon. Provincial Secretary (Mr. Welch) has pursued this matter with myself and our department on several occasions.

Mr. MacDonald: That is irrelevant.

Hon. Mr. Gomme: He just happens to be the member down there.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Hon. Mr. Gomme: The Ontario Municipal Board, by order No. PFM-9327/59, approved the closing of Murray Avenue and Kerman Avenue in the town of Grimsby with certain conditions which included the following:

The Department of Highways construct the following service roads in this particular area: 1. On the north side of the Queen Elizabeth Way between Ofield Road and Murray Avenue; 2. On the south side of the Queen Elizabeth Way from the west limit of the township of North Grimsby to Murray Avenue; 3. On the south side of the Queen Elizabeth Way from Murray Avenue to Patton Street; 4. A connection between Elizabeth and Ontario Street on a right-of-way to be provided by the town of Grimsby; 5. And subject to the construction by The Department of Highways of a number of slip-ons and slip-offs, an interchange to provide the necessary movements off the Queen Elizabeth Way to the abutting adjacent service roads.

The department during the resurfacing of the Queen Elizabeth Way to the west of Grimsby in 1968 provided left-turn lanes at Kerman and Murray Avenues in the median strip in order to improve the safety of the intersection. Any left turning vehicles are then able to be cleared of the through lanes while awaiting an opportunity to make the left turn.

At the present time, the department is preparing contract drawings for the construction of the necessary service roads, structures and interchanges in this area and the contracts will be called as soon as plans have been prepared and the necessary clearances obtained.

Mr. Deans: I wonder if the Minister would accept a supplementary question? Does he anticipate that this would be done prior to next summer's heavy traffic?

Hon. Mr. Gomme: Mr. Speaker, I have already explained when we intend to do it.

Mr. J. R. Breithaupt (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the hon. Minister of Transport.

Has the department studied the safety problems of those rebuilt small cars which are now being popularly used on sand dunes and rough terrain and are known as "dune buggies"? Has the department investigated the death of Paul Lightowlers of Ayr, Ontario, who died on August 19, 1968, from injuries received in a crash of a dune buggy? Is consideration being given for special licensing and inspection of these vehicles so that the enjoyment by the owners and drivers is balanced by the public interest and safety?

Hon. I. Haskett (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, if these reconstructed vehicles referred to as "dune buggies" are operated on the highways they must be registered and must comply with all the requirements of The Highway Traffic Act. In the case of a reconstructed vehicle, before it can be registered, a certificate of fitness is required.

I am sorry, I do not have particulars with respect to the fatality mentioned by the hon. member at this time. I will look it up and if I can find the details I will inform the hon. member.

The department does not have plans for special licensing or regulations respecting these vehicles at this time.

If I have been deficient in any answer, sir, I would be happy to discuss the matter further with the hon. member because I would like to answer his question as fully as I can.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Sandwich-Riverside (Mr. Burr)? His question will have to be deferred until the Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) is present.

The member for Port Arthur.

Mr. R. H. Knight (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Minister of Mines.

Has a decision been made yet on a universal mining claim tag for the province to permit prospectors to purchase tags at their local mine recording office for staking in any other part of the province, as we recommended in the estimates last session and as subsequently endorsed by the Northwestern Ontario Associated Chambers of Commerce?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence (Minister of Mines): Mr. Speaker, I am not too sure what the "royal we" is to which the hon. member is referring, but I can say in answer to the question that government policy will be announced in this House in due course.

Mr. Shulman: I have a question of the Attorney General, Mr. Speaker, in five parts.

1. Is Mr. Douglas Latimer to be appointed Crown attorney for Halton county?
2. Did his position as president of the Halton Progressive Conservative Association have anything to do with his appointment?
3. What is the salary he is to be paid?
4. What was the salary that was offered to special Crown prosecutor Ronald Thomas, former acting Crown attorney, to take the same position?
5. Why was Thomas not offered the same salary as has been offered to Mr. Latimer?

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Latimer was appointed on November 21, 1968; his appointment is to become effective on December 15, 1968.

The answer to the second part of the question is "no".

The starting salary for Mr. Latimer is $16,775. That is the minimum starting salary for a Crown attorney, class 2, which has a maximum of $20,010.

The salary offered to Mr. Thomas was $14,349. That is the first step of the starting salary in a Crown attorney, class 1, which moves to a maximum of $16,755.

The answer to the fifth part of the question: Mr. Thomas was not offered the same salary as Mr. Latimer because Mr. Latimer had seven years' more experience at the Bar having been called in 1957, while Mr. Thomas was called in 1964. The one man, therefore, has four years' experience, the other man had eleven years of experience at the Bar and was an assistant Crown attorney for a number of those years. In our view these are factors we have to take into account. In saying that I would like to say, Mr. Speaker, that this is no reflection on our appreciation of the abilities of either man; it is simply a matter of experience.

I do make clear the point that we were able to classify Mr. Latimer as a Crown attorney, class 2, which carries its salary as fixed, and the other man would have to start at Crown attorney 1?

Mr. Shulman: Would the Minister accept a supplementary question? Can the Minister inform me if Mr. Thomas did not, in effect, have more experience as a Crown attorney than the man who was given the opportunity?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, I would say, certainly not. As I pointed out, the one man has seven years' more experience than the other.

Mr. Shulman: I asked if Mr. Thomas did not have more experience as a Crown attorney.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Thomas has served in our office, on our staff in this building, and only occasionally as Crown attorney.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Peterborough.

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

1. Is it illegal for a municipality to give assessment advantages or grant bonuses in order to attract industry?

2. If the town of Trenton has been carrying on these activities, as indicated in the report of the Eric Hardy Consulting Company Limited, would the Minister indicate what steps he proposes to take?

Hon. W. D. McKeough (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the first part of the question, it is, of course, illegal for a municipality to give assessment advantages or grant bonuses in order to attract industry. Section 248(a) of The Municipal Act forbids this practice. I unfortunately do not have a copy of the report of Eric Hardy Consulting Limited which you have referred to. We tried to get in touch with Mr. Hardy this morning to get a copy of the report. He is out of town. When I do have a copy of the report I will get in touch with the member.

Mr. Pitman: May I ask a supplementary question? Could the Minister indicate what steps he would be likely to take if indeed the statements included in this report are those as reported by the press? Perhaps he might also indicate what steps his colleague, the Minister of Trade and Development, might take, in view of the fact that this municipality is receiving grants under the EIO programme?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I think the second part of your supplementary question should be directed to the Minister of Trade and Development.

As far as the first part of the question is concerned, it is rather hypothetical. When I have the report and have had a chance to look into it then I will decide what we will do about it.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Grey-Bruce has some questions.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, a question to the Minister of Trade and Development.

I think that he either owes the House an apology or—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member will place his question.

Mr. Sargent: Regarding a question yesterday Mr. Speaker, on a—

Mr. Speaker: Well, we are now in today's question period.

Mr. Sargent: On a point of privilege!

Mr. Speaker: We are in the question period for today. If the hon. member wishes to rise on a point of personal privilege he is entitled to do so but he is not entitled to do so in the guise of asking a question.

Mr. Sargent: I will leave the question for a moment then. On a point of privilege, the situation with regard to yesterday's question: The Minister told the House a half truth, and then in a report in the Globe and Mail this morning, he told the press that it is their practice to loan ODC loans to well established firms if they could prove the need for it—and they are well established. He can mislead the House but he should not mislead the newspapers. Mr. Speaker, he did not tell the newspapers that this money is not available to any firm or persons who can borrow some place else. This is a well established firm, but they received a loan from this government, through ODC, which is forgivable.

This is what he did not tell the papers. I think he owes this House an apology. Why can Holiday Inn and Caswell borrow money from the government when they have other sources of money?

An hon. member: Like cash in the bank.

Mr. Sargent: Like cash, and on top of that, the government makes it forgivable; at the end of the six-year term they get their money back. It does not cost them anything.

Hon. Mr. White: The member would not have a little vested interest?

Mr. Sargent: So I think the Minister owes the House an apology or he should tell the press that he did not tell them the whole truth.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. Minister now has the opportunity if he wishes, to comment on it.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Speaker, as usual, I think the hon. member for Grey-Bruce is thoroughly confused. In the first place I did not see the Globe and Mail this morning and I am not at all confused. I know exactly what I said. If it is a forgiveness loan I would remind you that we have given forgiveness loans to companies that have several millions of dollars, perhaps more than Mr. Caswell will ever have. If Mr. Caswell has gone into a designated area he is entitled to the same treatment as some of these companies that have many millions of dollars of capital.

Now, any man who has a balance sheet can walk into the Ontario Development Corporation; he can present it and we say to him, "Have you tried to borrow money from two other sources?" If the man says "Yes, and I was turned down", we ask "Have you gone to the Industrial Development Bank?" If he says "Yes, and I was turned down", then we will take a look at it and see if there is some way we can lend him money. There is nothing wrong with this.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, this is a complete—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The member will retain his seat and give the Minister the opportunity of making his explanation. The Minister gave the member the opportunity of making his point of privilege.

Mr. Sargent: He is not telling the truth, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Has the Minister anything further to say?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Speaker, as far as I am concerned I explained my position so he can go ahead.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order!

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): Point of order, Mr. Speaker. I resent, as a member of this House, being insulted by the hon. Minister rising here and giving us a lot of balderdash about borrowing money when people to whom he lent money were making profits that ran into three figures, into millions; that is, hundreds of millions of dollars.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order!

An hon. member: That is a point of order?

Mr. Speaker: Order, order! The hon member has made his point of order. He will return to his seat.

Does the hon. member for Grey-Bruce wish to proceed with his questions?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Speaker, may I rise on a point of order? I listened to my hon. friend in the back row there say that these companies make hundreds of millions of dollars. May I remind him that the amount of money a company earns has nothing to do with whether they qualify to go into a designated area. The more money they have the better. We like to see them in a designated area because they have got staying power.

Mr. MacDonald: Well why does not the Minister encourage them to use their own money instead of dipping into the public Treasury?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Keep your mouth shut a minute and I will answer you too. Do not get excited.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, is that parliamentary language? Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister is on a point of order at the moment. When he has finished his—

Mr. MacDonald: On a point of personal privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: When the hon. Minister has finished his point of order, then the hon. member will be entitled to raise his point.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Forget it!

I was making the point, Mr. Speaker, that in the federal designated-area programme, many companies that went into my hon. friend's riding in Grey-Bruce were companies of very substantial means and they qualified for that designated-area programme—

Mr. Sargent: We are not talking about that.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Regardless of their wealth they qualify because they met the requirements of a designated area. And the same applies for ODC.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York South.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I ask for your guidance. Is it parliamentary for one member to tell another member to shut his mouth?

Mr. Speaker: It is not usually considered so.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, sir.

An hon. member: Only when the government does it.

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order and it is a serious one. It is that I think the point of order relates to the matter in which the questions are put and the questions are answered, and the answers of the Minister of Trade and Development—two answers, Mr. Speaker; first the written prepared answer and, secondly, the answer given spontaneously by him—indicate to me that the procedures and rules of the question period should be completely reviewed and overhauled and that the answers of the Minister should be spontaneous and unwritten, and those will be the answers which appear on the record as being true answers.

Mr. Speaker: May I say to the hon. member that I am also of the opinion that there can be improvements made in the question period. And I can assure him that when Mr. Speaker's House committee meets, I hope next week, we will be glad to discuss it and see if there are any changes we can suggest to the House in that regard.

The hon. member for Port Arthur—on a point of order?

Mr. Knight: On a point of privilege and in connection with the subject at hand, I feel that because of the manner in which Mr. Speaker's office rules on the questions which are submitted beforehand, I may have been discriminated against today. I had a question which I wished to put to the House here pertaining to the fact that the Speech from the Throne was not given in French as well as in English, and I was told that the question was not accepted by Mr. Speaker's office. The reason given to me was that questions which start with the phrase "in view of" would not be accepted and also that the preamble to my question was too long.

However, I find if we check yesterday's roster of questions we will find that my hon. colleague, the member for Downsview (Mr. Singer), in his second question, which was addressed to the Attorney General, opened with the form "in view of", and not only that but he had a second "in view of" on the second line, and had a preamble which was considerably longer than mine. So I feel that in some way I have been cut off from a question which I deem to be extremely important.

Mr. Speaker: I would be pleased to clarify the matter for the member for Port Arthur. The reasons which he has put to the House and which perhaps were conveyed to him by my staff were not the reasons for the question being sent back for revision. We have heard considerable this morning about politics in answers, and it is my view, acting on behalf of all the members here, so far as is in my control, originally at least, that these are not to be political meetings.

It is true we must have party politics in it, but the reason the question was sent back to the member was that the preamble which he had was obviously an attack on the government by way of a question. All the question period is for, is for asking the question. I requested that this "in view of" preamble be taken out and the question itself be left there. That is the ruling that was made by Mr. Speaker, and I think it is a fair ruling, and a ruling which we have used in the past, myself and my predecessors in office. It is a ruling which, unless there is some different direction from the House, we will continue to enforce.

I also realize there is the problem of the answers to these questions, and as I said to the member for Windsor West, I do think there is some need for a re-examination of our procedures and I am quite prepared to initiate that. I have already had the leader of the third party, the member for York South, in touch with me with respect to these matters.

I would have been delighted to have had the member's question this morning because it was a question submitted both in English and in French and I was glad to see it. I was practising my French on it. But I felt that it should have the preamble which was, as I say, politically aligned, taken out, and just the question left.

Mr. Nixon: If I might comment on the point of order—

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, I thought some French should come into it, so I would just like to say merci beaucoup, M. l'Orateur.

Mr. Nixon: I was never under the impression that the rules governing questions prohibited an attack on the government. In many ways, that is the main function for Opposition, and while I am not familiar with the wording that you disapproved, surely the fact that it contained an attack on the government is irrelevant to the question.

Mr. Speaker: It is not irrelevant because the whole purpose of the question period, as I understand it, is to ask questions of urgent and public importance. That was the question which followed the statement, which was embodied as part of the question. If any member wishes to ask a question, it certainly can be an attack on the government but it must be a question and not an allegation or a statement of fact, and our rules so read.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: Let us get down to some honest business.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Peterborough has a point.

Mr. Sargent: I am on my point with the Minister; I was the motivator of this.

Mr. Speaker: Yes, but these are all questions which have arisen out of it, so the member will please yield to the member for Peterborough, and we will come back to him so he may proceed with his question.

Mr. Pitman: Mr. Speaker, on this point of order, I do not want to prolong discussion on this matter, but I think that one matter has been overlooked and that is that these questions are expected to be of urgent public importance.

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is right.

Mr. Pitman: They are expected to be on matters which are of importance at the time of the question. I would disagree with the leader of the Opposition that they are necessarily a matter of clobbering the government for some of its misdemeanors, although this may very well come out of the answer. But I think the main point is that it should be relating to events that are taking place at the time when the question is being asked.

This is what bothers me very greatly; it seems to me that the one way a member can relate his question to current events is by beginning the question with "in view of"—

Mr. Speaker: There is no ruling that you may not use "in view of".

Mr. Pitman: I am very pleased to hear that, Mr. Speaker, because that was certainly the impression that was left in the previous session, that this was an inappropriate and unacceptable way—

Mr. Speaker: Provided the preamble has to do with the question, but if the preamble "in view of" has to do with extraneous matters of an allegation or a statement of fact, then it is not allowed by the rules. But if a member must use "in view of" as the basis for his question, there is no such ruling against it, and I have allowed "in view of" questions just as I have allowed "why" questions, which I think are quite proper.

The hon. member for Grey-Bruce has now returned to the floor.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, if the Minister can get up and completely evade the truth and mislead the House and the press, then I should not be here; no one should be here.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is either on a point of order or—

Mr. Sargent: This is very important. This Minister has continually, along with the Prime Minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Is the hon. member making a point of order? If so, he will state it.

Mr. Sargent: I am suggesting this Minister is misleading the House and I will show you why regarding this loan of the ODC. Make no bones about it because it is available from the ODC people who have no other source of financing, this is true. On top of that, it is a forgiveness loan; it is a gift to them from the government, the people of Ontario. Why would anyone go to IDC or to any other institution for a loan if he can get free money from the government?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member started out with a point of order or privilege that the hon. Minister was misleading the House. Now he is making a speech.

Mr. Sargent: He has misled the House. He has not told the House or the newspapers that he took the word of Caswell or Holiday Inn, a multi-million dollar chain, Husky Oil—

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Provincial Treasurer): Mr. Speaker, I submit this is entirely out of order. This is a debate, it is not a question.

Mr. Sargent: The Minister would suggest that?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes, I would—

Mr. Sargent: Because you boys are intelligent, this guy—

Mr. Speaker: Order, order! The hon. Treasurer has the floor.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I submit to you, sir, that it requires a ruling from you because this is getting beyond the bounds of propriety, common sense or anything else, this type of harangue. As a matter of fact, while I am on my feet, may I speak about the privilege of every member of the House and that is, that these allegations of untruths, part truths, misleading information, must be substantiated in a better form than they are being substantiated here this morning.

Mr. Sargent: I am trying to.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is rising on a point of order; the hon. member is on his feet on a point of order and the hon. member for Grey-Bruce has the floor.

Mr. Sargent: The Minister then can justify his position—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will confine himself to his point of order.

Mr. Sargent: All right. My point of order is this, that he has not told the House in honest terms why these loans were granted to Holiday Inn, Husky Oil, Caswell—multi-million-dollar firms—when the terms of reference of the ODC are not to lend money—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has now made his point. He will return to his seat. If the hon. Minister wishes to reply to it he has the opportunity. If not, the hon. member for Humber has the floor on a point of order.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Speaker, all I would say is that there is a great deal of confusion in the mind of the hon. member for Grey-Bruce. He is confusing a loan in which the ODC collects interest for the loan, in the same way as a client would get a loan if he went to any other institution. He is also confusing the money given away on a forgiveness basis to companies going into designated areas.

Mr. Sargent: I am not talking—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Just wait a minute. The value of the company's assets has nothing to do with the loan being made, provided they go into an area where we want them—into a designated area. I do not care if it is the Bank of England, if they go into a designated area, they can get a forgiveness loan and Caswell fell into that category. Because the hon. member says he was a Conservative from away back makes absolutely no difference to us. You can bring anybody in—I do not care—their political faith makes no difference to the board of ODC or to me, and I do not see those loans until after they come to Cabinet and that is where I defend them, in Cabinet, if Cabinet wants to turn them down; so if there is any confusion it certainly is not on this side of the House.

Mr. Sargent: I received—

Mr. Speaker: Order, order!

May I suggest in order that the valuable time of some 100 members of this House be not further taken up with this, that the hon. Minister arrange an appointment with the hon. member for Grey-Bruce and go over these matters. And then, if they are not understood, it could form the basis of a further question in the House.

Mr. Sargent: Thanks.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Humber has a point of order.

Mr. Ben: I will pass.

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member for Grey-Bruce a question?

Mr. Sargent: A question to the hon. Minister of Trade and Development. What will be the cost of the Expo '70 exhibit in Japan? How many trips are planned this year and who will be going on these junkets from this department?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will please follow his wording. The wording is "How many trips are planned this year and who will be making the trips from this department?"

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. member's question, the total cost of Expo '70 participation in Japan will be in the order of $2.6 million.

Secondly, there will be two trips to Japan this fiscal year, made by J. W. Ramsay, J. C. Purvis, and F. Moritsugu, who are the three men responsible for building and running the Ontario pavilion for Expo '70—and as the hon. member already knows, I was there this year to participate in the ceremony of digging the hole and getting the building under construction, so that we would finish three or four months ahead of time and stop paying double time and overtime to get the job finished.

Mr. Sargent: People cannot get houses in this province and you are running across the country—

Mr. Speaker: Order, the hon. member will proceed with his next question.

Mr. Sargent: A question for the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Will the Minister advise what is to be done about apartment owners who have raised their rents to cover the cost of the shelter tax payment to apartment tenants?

Secondly, does the government plan an enquiry and investigation into this widespread practice during the past few months in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, in reply to the first part of the question, the member is aware, I am sure, that there are no rent controls presently in effect in the province of Ontario.

The answer to the second part of the question is “no”.

Mr. Sargent: A supplementary to that question: Is the Minister aware that even before this Act was put into effect rents were apparently being raised—even before you made this public?

Another question for the Minister. Will the Minister advise when will—

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I might say that is one of the most helpful statements we have had in a long time from the hon. member.

Mr. Sargent: Well, I do not know. You see what could happen if the Chair would let us develop these things but he has the old dagger all the time in here.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: You had better call the Sergeant-at-Arms.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Sargent: A question regarding the Beaver Valley area: When will the plans for Beaver Valley be completed?

Secondly, how many such cases in Ontario are presently delinquent?

Thirdly, when is the chaos in your department going to be rectified?

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): Is that in the question?

Mr. Sargent: That is in the question.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, my reply to the first part of the hon. member's question is that much work has been done toward the completion of an official plan for the Beaver Valley. While no deadline has been set, the municipalities have been, and are being urged to prepare a plan to guide future development so that substandard conditions and unduly high municipal expenditures can be avoided.

In recognition of the urgency involved the government undertook to finance, at no cost to the municipalities involved, a planning appraisal of the area. This appraisal was completed by a firm of planning consultants and was submitted in its final form within the past three weeks. Copies have been sent to the municipalities concerned and a meeting is being arranged in the near future to settle the details of carrying out the planning programmes.

In regard to the second part of the question, Mr. Speaker, I would say that a number of communities in Ontario have come to appreciate the need for effective planning programmes to establish the development policies they need. However, I do not have information which would indicate how many have not yet succeeded in carrying out such programmes to completion. I would say this, however, Mr. Speaker: Many of the communities in this province are working sincerely and diligently to discharge their responsibilities in this regard and it seems harsh to characterize their efforts as being delinquent.

In reply to the third part of the question—when is the chaos in this department going to be rectified?—I suppose I could only say, Mr. Speaker, that it ill behooves a member of this House in my opinion to characterize the work of a group of hard-working civil servants in my department as chaotic. I resent that, I do not choose to answer.

Mr. Sargent: He does not choose to answer. Maybe he will not answer a supplementary question then? Is the Minister aware that the county council of Grey county said this is costing them several hundreds of thousands of dollars for your delinquency? Is the government prepared to give them a subsidy to that effect? Talk about chaos!

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, I think I might just say that I am aware very much of what is felt by the county council. We have had innumerable meetings with officials in Grey. I may say, Mr. Speaker, that I am very helpfully kept informed of the thinking of the people of Grey county council, of the members of the local municipal councils, by the very capable, efficient, understanding member for Grey South (Mr. Winkler).

Mr. Nixon: Who is not here today.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Perhaps he is up looking after the people of Grey South.

Mr. Sargent: He is in deep trouble, too.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Does the member for Grey-Bruce wish to place any more questions? The member for Dovercourt has a question of the Minister of Education.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, the hon. member for Grey-Bruce asked three questions on Wednesday. He has now chosen to put two of them. May I ask if the third question is being withdrawn or how long are we going to go on with this little game? Is the question withdrawn, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: The question is not withdrawn.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: So we go on with this little farce day after day—

Mr. Sargent: This man is being paid a handsome salary to do his job and he, along with the Attorney General yesterday, was complaining about having to answer questions again. Who does he think he is—

Mr. Speaker: Order, order!

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think, sir, that it would be very helpful for the orderly conduct of this House if you gave a ruling on this matter of hon. members opposite getting together a list of questions so that the Ministers have to get their staff hurrying about to get answers, and then some hon. member deciding to put those questions when he pleases, which may be three weeks from now—three months from now—or never at all. I think this is abusing the whole question period.

Mr. Speaker: Of course, I would point out to the hon. Minister and the members that the shoe also fits another foot and that is, if the hon. Minister is not present then the hon. member who is asking the question is not able to put it and sometimes, that goes on for a considerable time.

So at the present time, I have no intention of changing the procedure until this matter has been further discussed by my committee.

An hon. member: Three cheers for the Speaker.

Hon. W. G. Davis (Minister of Education): Mr. Speaker, I would make the suggestion that both members are present, the member asking and the Minister who has the reply. The member opposite does not wish to put the question. Would it not be appropriate for the Minister, before the orders of the day, to give the answer in any event? The matter would be cleared up right then and there. And there could be no complaint because both people are here.

Mr. Speaker: I think that is an excellent suggestion and I will be glad to have it considered when my committee—and I hope to call them next week—are discussing this. Then we will refer it to the party leaders and we will hope to clear up some of this confusion.

But my position, hon. members, is this: that there is a very great divergence of opinion among the 116 other members of this House as to what is, first of all, a matter of urgent public importance before the orders of the day; secondly, as between the hon. members and Mr. Speaker as to how they should be worded; and thirdly, as between the hon. members of the Opposition and members of the Treasury benches as to the manner in which a question should be answered.

These are matters which either have to be decided and strict rules followed, or we must carry on in perhaps not quite as riotous a fashion as we have. But we must carry on and give sufficient leeway both to hon. members and to Ministers to make their points.

As I have said, we will try to discuss this next week with my committee, if we can find time to meet and there are improvements which can be made. There is no question about it.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The bounds within which you are prepared to consider improvements in the context of your committee excludes the one area which members of this party at least feel very strongly about: that is, to completely chuck the question period as it is presently constituted by way of written submissions and written replies, and substitute for it the rather more useful, adult, and effective, question period which is spontaneous both from the Opposition and by way of ministerial reply. Then, the question period will not be reduced to a ludicrous state day after day. We can have some effective exchange of opinion in the House and one would hope that that might be incorporated in your terms of reference.

Mr. Speaker: Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker and his committee can take no action in that regard until the rules of the House, which now prescribe how questions are to be answered, are changed. As I understand it there has been, over a long period of time, a great discussion and enquiry into the rules, and as yet Mr. Speaker has had no return from the various committees who have been dealing with the matter. But it is a point which I think should be and will be and is being considered by that particular body.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. The hon. member for Grey-Bruce remarked a moment ago that the Attorney General yesterday complained about answering questions.

Mr. Sargent: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: He seems to be slightly confused.

An hon. member: What else is new?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The only thing I complained of was his failure to ask the questions he submitted to you, Mr. Speaker.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The situation yesterday, Mr. Speaker, was that of the five questions he submitted he asked four and I simply urged him to ask the other one. I was not complaining about answering it. I never have complained. One of the questions, I did point out, had been asked twice before, but I was not complaining about answering. I was urging him to get his questions before me so they could be answered.

Mr. D. M. De Monte (Dovercourt): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Minister of Education.

What is the percentage of the provincial contribution of the capital cost of new construction of schools, and what is the percentage of the provincial contribution of the maintenance costs of schools?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I would like to answer this, and also make one observation with respect to the point made by the hon. member for Scarborough West when he suggested the question period should consist of questions without any forethought and answers without any forethought. I always feel very strongly that while Ministers here are expected to give answers off the cuff there is every—

Mr. Lewis: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I cannot speak for the answers. They may come without forethought but the questions would be thoughtful.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Exactly. This is just the point. The questions would all be arranged in the minds of the hon. members opposite and then you—

Mr. Lewis: And, if the Minister is master of his department he could cope with it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order, order!

Will the hon. Minister return to his seat when the Speaker is on his feet?

Now perhaps the hon. Minister will confine himself at the moment to answering the question which was put to him, and thereafter if he has a point of order I will be glad to give him the floor.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Quite right, Mr. Speaker, quite right.

Mr. Speaker, with respect to the question asked, I quite agree with the speaker.

Mr. Sargent: Bit confused there—

Hon. Mr. Davis: No, just trying to save a longer dissertation. This is a difficult question to answer, I might point out, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): Particularly in the way it has been prepared.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Well, in that we were somewhat involved in the preparation, this would perhaps increase its complexity. I quite agree.

But in the case of elementary and secondary non-vocational projects—and you have to divide the non-vocational from the vocational—the average provincial contribution would be approximately 70 per cent of 80 per cent of the total, or on a provincial average in the neighbourhood of 56 per cent. The secondary vocational projects which are available up until March 31, 1969, are being supported at a 75 per cent rate.

There are some exceptions, to this, Mr. Speaker, in that there are certain vocational units being built in some sections of the province—basically in northern Ontario where they are serving neighbouring communities—that are not part of the initial school district where the contribution could be 100 per cent of those portions of the structure; the balance would be at the 75 per cent rate. So, Mr. Speaker, it is difficult to give a total provincial average unless you would break it down into these various areas.

Dealing with the second part of the question, I am not sure, Mr. Speaker, just what is meant by “provincial contribution of the maintenance costs of the schools.” If the hon. member is referring to day-to-day maintenance—painting and so on during the summer months or as part of the operation—then this is not calculated in any provincial grant as it relates to capital purposes.

Mr. De Monte: Would the Minister accept a supplementary question?

In connection with the maintenance costs of schools, there are certain grants given to the schools, and is part of these grants spent on maintenance? By maintenance, I mean capital maintenance.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, if we mean by maintenance the day-to-day caretaking and so on of the schools, this is not calculated in here. We have special grants for renovations of existing school structures but I do not think we would consider this as being maintenance.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The first order, resuming the adjourned debate on the motion for an address in reply to the speech of the Honourable, the Lieutenant-Governor at the opening of the session.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. J. Jessiman (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, before I go into my final 40 pages I would like to compliment the member for Scarborough Centre (Mrs. M. Renwick) for rising like a tigress defending her mate and questioning the authenticity of the remarks that I made in regard to a meeting. I would like to read to you, Mr. Speaker, and those present, from the Globe and Mail of November 5, datelined out of St. Thomas, and the headline is, “Renwick Charges Unions Told to Help MacDonald.” I read:

All full-time representatives of two large Ontario unions had been warned to help Donald MacDonald retain the leadership of the Ontario New Democratic Party or lose their jobs, his opponent, James Renwick charged here Monday night. Mr. Renwick, president of the national NDP and deputy leader of the Ontario party, told an Elgin county NDP rally the orders were relayed to district representatives of the United Steelworkers by Lynn Williams and Stu Cook, and to international representatives of the United Packinghouse Workers by Iona Samis and Jim Bury.

“This is a public political party, not a private club to be manipulated by power brokers,” Mr. Renwick told the crowd of 50 as Mr. MacDonald waited his turn to speak. The two men face a party convention at Kitchener November 15 to 17. “But any staff representative of those two unions who supports me or campaigns for me does so at the risk of his job,” charged Mr. Renwick, who announced his candidacy for the leadership on October 8.

Replied Mr. MacDonald, “I’m glad to say that’s a charge that usually comes from the other parties, that the labour unions manipulate our party. Mr. Renwick should know better. The labour unions were supposed to be against him when he ran for national president. But he was elected. He said the matter was one which should be discussed in private by the party, not washed in public like linen.

“Mr. Renwick is indulging in a bit of crying because he is not getting their support. He is using a heavy, emotion-laden form of arm-twisting, a lament for his own loss of support.”

“I will get considerable support because of this arm-twisting,” interjected Mr. Renwick. “Donald has been on the phone ever since I announced I’d run, phoning the caucus members, phoning riding presidents, seeking personal loyalty rather than loyalty to the party.”

“I sure have been on the phone,” snapped Mr. MacDonald. “What sort of a game do you think we’re playing? Tiddly-winks?”

Two questioners from the floor tried to get Mr. Renwick to substantiate this charge. He said he would not reveal his source, which produced a few groans from the audience.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): What type of game was Camp playing?

Mr. Jessiman: I read this into the records, Mr. Speaker, and I will now proceed. Going back to the continuation of yesterday, and referring to the emotionally disturbed children who are now housed over at the psychiatric hospital in Port Arthur.

Excursions are arranged for the children to local stores, industries, the circus, banks, and so on. Many of the benefits enjoyed by children in the regular public schools are being provided for the children in the school programme at the Ontario Hospital in Port Arthur.

In discussing the activities of The Department of Education, I want to stress here the programmes of the youth and recreation branch, which also plays an important role in programmes for northern Ontario. Working with municipal councils, school boards, private agencies and single interest groups, this branch encourages local action to develop a wide variety of opportunities for recreation and informal education.

We can single out five areas of service in which the northern Ontario youth and recreation branch is active: First, it plans consultative visits to communities by district representatives and programme specialists; second, the branch offers resource material on the organization and programming of recreation and adult education activities; third, it provides assistance in designing, organizing and conducting programmes of training for full-time, part-time and volunteer leaders of recreation activities; fourth, the branch assists in organizing programmes of training for executive members of voluntary organizations; and, as its fifth main service, the youth and recreation branch in northern Ontario authorizes grants to municipal councils and to school boards in unorganized territories for municipal expenditures on recreation. In the coming year, programmes will be extended to isolated communities in northwestern Ontario for which transportation will be provided by Department of Lands and Forests aircraft.

The Department of Education continues to give active leadership in training for business and industry and manpower retraining. More than 100 courses are provided to help people meet the challenge of change by upgrading their work skills. One interesting example of such opportunities are the courses that are offered on a number of Indian reserves by the Kenora centre.

There has been much favourable comment regarding the beneficial side effects experienced on the reserves as a result of the Ontario manpower retraining programme. General health and welfare have improved, and, probably most important, adults now appreciate the value of the education acquired by the younger generation.

An experimental project has been initiated recently for the hard-core unemployed in Timmins to determine the most effective methods for motivating and training people with such a background.

Steps are now being taken to provide additional services to adults in the more remote areas of the province. Ontario expects to commence full-time courses in English as a second language at Fort Albany and Kasechewan where the population is predominantly Cree. Ontario plans to offer part-time courses at approximately five other major reserves by utilizing the potential of daytime teachers in a night school programme. These part-time courses will be concerned primarily with English as a second language and basic training for academic upgrading at the levels of grades one to six. At Quetico and Elliot Lake, English as a second language is being offered on a total immersion basis. This approach is being used for a number of persons who have arrived recently from Czechoslovakia.

A course for operators of heavy duty equipment is being offered at the Quetico training centre. The graduates of the course are finding ready employment in northwestern Ontario.

If I have dwelt here on education in northern Ontario, it is because it is an area of special concern to me and those I represent; but the expansion of educational effort can be seen throughout the province. It is in keeping with the needs and aspirations of our people and of Canada as a whole, the needs and aspirations which have made education, in the eyes of the economic council of Canada, for example, the top priority of the nation.

I might add, Mr. Speaker, that these accomplishments have been made by members of a government and a party who do not think action can be initiated by firing off a press release or making incorrect or emotional statements and then catch the next motor boat to go fishing.

These, then, Mr. Speaker, are educational programmes of substance, pushing back both the frontiers of knowledge and the frontiers of our northern environment and bringing to the north country facilities and learning comparable to those offered anywhere in Canada or Ontario.

On the equalization of industrial opportunity—for many years, the second greatest challenge facing the north is industrial development. To expand our population and to interest people in moving to the north, we must provide jobs. It is in this area that the new equalization of industrial opportunity programme announced by the Prime Minister (Mr. Roberts), in September of 1967, and I might add, derided by the Opposition, has been welcomed by the north. As of November 19, this year, the total amount of loans authorized under EIO is $1,666,613. This has meant, at commencement, almost 400 jobs, sir, and in five years it will mean close to 600 jobs. It has almost meant an increase in plant area of 178,000 square feet.

EIO loans under study at the present time for the north amount to some $2,000,290. In addition to these, interest-free forgivable loans, term loans have been authorized for an amount of $810,000.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): How much did they make available to get Norply going?

Mr. Jessiman: During October 1967 and November 19 of this year, the Ontario Development Corporation consultants provided on-the-spot advisory service to 211 companies and individuals in the north, including Norply of Nipigon, I might add.

The EIO programme has reached into communities all across northern Ontario—places such as Port Arthur, Hearst, Glenorchy, Red Lake, Fort William, Falconbridge and Kenora.

Mr. Speaker, the question has often been asked: What has mining done for northwestern Ontario?

First of all, to start off on a general basis, the mining industry now produces better than $100 million worth of mineral annually from operations in the northwestern Ontario region and the output has been growing quite consistently over the last several years! From the way things look at the present time, I think we can look forward to greater and more spectacular advances in the years ahead.

With the short time allocated to me, I would just like to list some of the highlights in northwestern Ontario mining in recent years.

One—the huge Griffith mine was officially opened at Bruce Lake in June of this year.

This $62-million project is particularly important to northern Ontario.

Operating 365 days a year on an around-the-clock basis, the Griffith mine is providing new employment opportunities for over 350 men and will have an annual payroll of more than $2 million in that locality. With ore reserves estimated to be sufficient for 30 to 50 years of production, the property is also creating a continuously increasing need for local services, supplies and facilities.

The official opening ceremony, which incidentally I had the pleasure of attending with the Prime Minister and the Minister of Mines (Mr. A. F. Lawrence), also the member for the Kenora area (Mr. Bernier) and other officials, represented the culmination of two full years of concerted effort on the part of many companies and individuals. Up to 850 men were employed during the peak of this programme including 150 Griffith pre-production personnel. The contractor established a 100-man engineering force, producing 1,400 drawings and specifications, and purchased $10 million worth of equipment for the plant. The project also involved the construction by the CNR of a spur line from Red Lake Junction, the erection by the Ontario Hydro-Electric Power Commission of a new electric power generating station at Ear Falls and 115,000-volt transmission line to the property, laying of a natural gas pipeline from Vermilion Bay on the Trans Canada Highway, building of a $5-million ore dock at Fort William, and the provision by the Ontario Housing Corporation of 100 housing units at Ear Falls.

I am delighted to say that this mine means new life for our great northwest and a considerable boost to Ontario's whole economy. I am certain that our hopes for a long and prosperous life for this new mining venture will be fulfilled.

Incidentally, I was happy to learn that right from the beginning every possible step has been taken to see that our waters will not be polluted by the operations of the Griffith mine. It is also good to know that a complete sewage disposal plant is being installed at Red Lake to keep this beautiful body of water safe for recreation and pure for drinking.

As members can well imagine, pollution has always been a matter of major concern to the mining industry, although perhaps the industry has not always been given credit for recognizing its responsibility in this respect. I think that I would be one of the first to agree that this far too prevalent attitude of the public is unfair and unwarranted in most cases. I know, and I wish that other members of the public-at-large realized, that many millions of dollars have been spent by the mining industry in an effort to keep air and water as pure as is possible in an industrial environment.

Two—Steep Rock iron mines. Although Steep Rock has been through rough times finding markets for its ore, it is heartening to note that the company is now operating on two long-term contracts. One, with Algoma Steel for 1.1 million tons of pellets a year for 22 years and the other contract with Detroit Steel Corporation for 250,000 tons of pellets a year for ten years.

Three—the Caland Ore Company. This company which is a wholly-owned subsidiary of Inland Steel Company, continues to mine and ship ore from the open pits. The company's pelletizing plant produces more than 3,000 tons of pellets daily. Approximately 400 employees are on the payroll.

Four—the Algoma Steel Corporation. It goes without saying that this company consumes vast quantities of iron ore and other raw materials in its production of steel. With a huge appetite for more than three million tons of iron ore annually, new sources of supply are continually being developed.

The Michipicoten iron range near Wawa, Ontario, has long been a major supplier of iron ore for Algoma's blast furnaces and it is here that the company recently opened another open pit to mine siderite ore.

The Ruth and Lucy mine, with a projected minimum production of 50,000 tons of ore per month, came into production after extensive diamond drilling by the Algoma ore division's exploration department during 1967.

Five—the new Fort William ore dock. This important facility was officially opened in September of this year.

Finally, I would like to comment briefly on the Ontario government's contribution in this field. There is no doubt about the fact that the current administration has done a tremendous amount to help the great north-west move forward.

It is not necessary to go very far afield to pick up evidence of this. Let us look at access roads, for example. The road from Pickle Crow mine to Lingman Lake, 265 miles to the northwest, was started as one project of the federal-provincial roads to resources programme. Since that agreement has, unfortunately, expired the work will be continued as part of Ontario's own northern resource roads programme which is financed out of The Department of Mines budget. Still closer to home and under the same programme the road from Balmertown is being driven northward to connect with the Pickle Crow road. When the job is completed it will be possible to travel the circular route from Highway 17 through Red Lake to Pickle Crow and back to Highway 17 at Ignace via Highway 599. I mention only these roads although in the past few years a great many others have been constructed to open large areas in this part of the province for full development of their natural resources. Since the inception of the programme in 1951, there has been more than ample proof that the relatively very modest investment has paid off handsomely in the development of our natural resources.

Let us now take a look at the geological branch of The Department of Mines. This is certainly the fastest growing branch of the department, and about half the total departmental budget is devoted to its work. That, I think is exactly as it should be because, without the information that our highly qualified geologists present to the public in the form of reports and maps, it is almost certain that active prospecting activity would become almost entirely the province of major companies, which alone could afford the necessary geological reconnaissance work required as a preliminary to intensive prospecting activity.

This year The Ontario Department of Mines carried out 30 geological projects throughout Ontario and, of that number, 13 were in the part of the province west of Wawa. Field parties were at work in the Favourable Lake area, in the North Shoal Lake area, in Macnicol, Tustin, Bridges and Docker townships, in the Sturgeon Lake area, the Rainy Lake area, Finlayson Lake area, Crooks township and Red Lake, the Beardmore area and the Manitouwadge area.

Operation Kapuskasing was conducted two years ago as a pilot project in which the use of helicopters made it possible to cover 28,000 square miles in a single season. It was such an unqualified success that the same technique was used again last year in operation Lingman Lake in the extreme northwest part of the province to survey an additional 23,000 square miles. This year a similar airlift survey was mounted in operation Pukaskwa at the eastern end of Lake Superior.

During September of this year, more than 70 members of this Legislature were privileged to participate in a tour of northwestern Ontario hosted by The Department of Lands and Forests and its Minister (Mr. Brunelle). The tour was headed up by our Prime Minister.

The tour provided all of us and particularly the more recently elected members of the Legislature, with a first-hand opportunity to observe the extent of development in this part of the province and to acquaint themselves with many of the challenges facing residents in the northern latitudes.

During the tour we travelled more than 2,000 miles from the capital of this province to its westernmost edge and back, visiting many of the area's villages, towns and industries. As the member for Fort William, I am very pleased to record that the hospitality accorded tour members was entirely expected and traditional to the area.

I had a few words here to add, but unfortunately the member who was present on the tour is not present in the House and I will not direct at him in his absence my words on his conduct in Fort William.

I might mention, Mr. Speaker, that it was also during this members' tour that the Prime Minister opened the Minaki air strip, which is the first of the "highways in the sky" programme. For the construction of the Minaki airport the provincial government contributed $30,000. This new programme is intended to assist in the construction of small airports throughout northern Ontario, and eventually, the provincial government hopes to have air strips constructed in the north to form an air corridor for tourist and commercial aircraft. It is my understanding that new air strips under the programme are planned and already under construction at Kirkland Lake, Nestor Falls, Sioux Narrows, Bugle Lake, Cochrane, Big Trout Lake, Sandy Lake and Wawa.

Mr. Speaker, last July the OHC board of directors toured to Ear Falls where 100 rental housing units are being built under the Housing for Industry Programme to assist in the development of a new mine in the Red Lake area. This was followed by a board of directors' meeting at the Lakehead—the first such meeting to be held outside Toronto—and its purpose was to acquaint board members with the special programmes of the northern communities.

During the year, two programmes designed to acquaint northern residents with the corporation and to provide corporation officials with a first hand view of the needs of Ontario's northern communities, were organized. The first was a unique housing workshop on wheels which covered 1,400 miles with meetings in Moosonee, Cochrane, Timmins and Englehart, with a side trip to Kirkland Lake. On October 10, the workshop was held in Fort William which was attended by members of council, planning boards, community organizations and municipal officials from throughout the northwestern Ontario economic region.

A programme aimed at providing more than $4.6 million worth of student accommodation in post-secondary institutions in northern Ontario is underway by OSHC. At Lakehead University in Port Arthur 480 single student units are under construction. The first three houses accommodating 144 students, together with a social centre, will be ready next month, and another 96 will be ready early in the New Year with the whole project scheduled for occupancy before next September.

On August 7, a contract was awarded for 250 single units at Laurentian University which are scheduled to be ready in August, 1969.

A proposal call will be issued shortly for a 200-single-student bed project at the Northern College of Applied Arts and Technology in Kirkland Lake. Preliminary discussions have been held with Confederation College of Applied Arts and Technology in Fort William which may be interested in having OSHC build a 150-student bed project.

During the past year OHC has brought on to the market two offerings of Home Ownership Made Easy lands in Sudbury and Teck township and nearly all of these have been marketed. The corporation has purchased additional land in Sudbury which is now in the planning stage.

A contract has been signed for the servicing of 94 building lots in Espanola which will be available for prospective home owners next spring. In Longlac a servicing contract has been signed for the development sites for 12 town houses for low income families and the servicing of nine lots for prospective home builders. The corporation holds additional land in this municipality which will be developed when approvals are received. As well, OHC has holdings in Timmins and New Liskeard, and is assembling land in Sturgeon Falls, which will be offered next year.

OHC's housing development programme was active in 26 northern municipalities during 1968. This activity resulted in the completion and occupancy of 176 family units in five communities, and the completion and occupancy of 100 senior citizen units in five communities.

Another 72 senior citizen units are under construction in five communities and 197 family housing units are under construction in six communities.

A total of 226 senior citizen units in nine communities and 528 family units in 16 communities are in various stages of development up to the contract-signing stage.

OHC's northern Ontario rental housing programme for families and senior citizens as at October 31, 1968, represents a construction cost of about $35.745 million.

OHC's planning and research section is carrying out surveys in 15 northern municipalities, some of which are being surveyed for the second and third time.

Mr. Speaker, when one speaks about agriculture generally most people in Ontario would think that we confine our remarks to areas in eastern Ontario and southwestern Ontario primarily. However, I think it should be pointed out that there is very wide agricultural activity taking place in northern Ontario.

A full scale socio-economic survey of northwestern Ontario, which is now under way, was first proposed by the Ontario ARDA directorate, and was approved by ARDA with the two levels of government sharing the cost equally. One important aspect of this is an extensive multi-purpose study of the entire economic base for northwestern Ontario. This is being done by the rural development branch of the Ontario Treasury. A second study undertaken by The Department of Lands and Forests is designed to develop ways and means of improving living standards of Indian people. We have great hopes for this overall programme once the initial surveys have been completed and the northwestern Ontario regional development council is provided with this information.

Mr. Speaker, the Ontario Department of Agriculture and Food has also a number of assistance programmes for livestock producers designed to improve the herds through transportation assistance, beef, sheep and swine sire programme policies, artificial insemination, and so on.

The department was primarily responsible for the organizations of the five northern Ontario feeder cattle sales in Little Current, Thessalon, South River, New Liskeard and Rainy River. These sales handle in the neighbourhood of 10,000 cattle each year.

Thirteen areas in northern Ontario now have veterinary service as a result of provincial subsidies to the tune of $4,000 per year veterinarian plus five cents per mile. Veterinarian services labs exist in Kapuskasing, Hearst and Cochrane.

Northern Ontario milk producers were the first to benefit from pooling when the Ontario government created the Ontario Milk Marketing Board in 1965. There are three such pools in the north.

Crop insurance is another area of positive government action and has been provided for a number of crops in northern Ontario. Since 1965, adverse weather assistance has been provided to northern Ontario farmers to the extent of more than $4 million.

We maintain the New Liskeard demonstration farm and college of agricultural technology to train young farmers and to develop new varieties and new techniques for the north. The extension department has the highest ratio of professional staff to the number of commercial farmers in all of Ontario. There are 14 extension workers in the north, six of them bilingual.

Each year a special fund of $250,000 is designated for assistance in the purchase of such items as fertilizer equipment, weed sprayers, livestock, and so on, and administered by the regional agricultural representative upon the advice of local farmers' committees.

In 1967-1968 $135,000 worth of capital grants were made to northern Ontario farmers. To date nearly $1.5 million in grants have been paid to northern Ontario communities under The Communities Centres Act.

More than 200 young farmers have been established under the junior farmer loan with loans totalling $2.75 million in northern Ontario.

Community pastures have been established at Thunder Bay, Timiskaming and on Manitoulin Island.

A beef ranching programme of 5,000 acres is now in operation in the Cochrane area.

More than $44,000 was granted to the Thunder Bay co-operative livestock abattoir and this plant is now provided with full-time meat inspection.

Hundreds of northern Ontario Indians have been trained in forestry or transported to southern Ontario for seasonal labour as a part of the farm labour programme of The Department of Agriculture and Food.

These, Mr. Speaker, are again just part of one Ontario government department's activities in the north. These are just a few policies I mention to illustrate this government's awareness of a need to assist the north.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I realize I have spent some time in outlining Ontario government programmes for northern Ontario, but I am not nearly finished and I make no apology.

If, in the last session of this Legislature, we were treated to four hours and ten hours of listening to the frivolous remarks by the member for High Park (Mr. Shulman) and the oratory of the member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha), and I do not mean to embarrass the member for Sudbury by linking his name with the other—heaven forbid—I think the government record in this session deserves a good hearing. One department — that of Lands and Forests — deserves special mention. I would just like to go over some of the highlights of this department and its work in northern Ontario. I think, Mr. Speaker, that we should be proud of our provincial parks system that now includes 96 parks which have an area of more than eight million acres. In 1967, I am told, we had an increase of more than four per cent of park visitors and it has now reached the all-time high of 10,192,553.

To cope with this increasing demand of recreation, Ontario during the 1967-1968 fiscal year has reserved a further 531 acres of land and lakes for future development.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the hon. member one question.

Mr. Jessiman: Also public demand for increased recreation areas has resulted in—

Mr. Nixon: Perhaps he did not hear me, I wonder if the hon. member would permit a question?

Mr. Jessiman: —of a master plan for Algonquin Park and I understand similar master plans are being developed for other parks.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. leader of the Opposition please state his point of order?

Mr. Nixon: The member just speaking indicated the figures for park attendance ending in the fall of 1968.

Mr. Jessiman: 1967.

Mr. Nixon: Ah, that is why I asked him to repeat it and he would not pay any attention to me. I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but I asked the specific information from the Minister yesterday and he said it was not compiled.

Mr. Jessiman: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the leader of the Liberal Party should know that it could not possibly be compiled yet.

Also, public demand for increased recreational areas has resulted in the recent announcement of a master plan for Algonquin Park and I understand similar master plans are being developed for other parks.

In the area of recreational planning, the department has initiated a number of long-range plans and research plans, and work in fact has been started on an outdoor recreational plan for Ontario.

At the same time, Mr. Speaker, public pressures for increased recreation on the parks branch is also evident on the fish and wildlife branch which must meet public demand for more hunting and fishing areas.

I might mention, Mr. Speaker, that possibly if the leader of the Liberal Party went on a complete tour and possibly did a gate check of each he might have the—

Mr. Nixon: I visited ten parks including one right on the member's back doorstep and he had never visited it.

Mr. Jessiman: How does the member know? He did not follow me. He should not speak unless he knows.

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): I notice the member does not deny the statement.

Mr. Jessiman: Game management plays an important role in providing additional and productive hunting areas and with most of the land privately owned, it has become necessary to acquire suitable areas of land for this purpose. Another method adopted by Ontario is through a land-owner assistance programme to improve relations between hunters and land owners and to restore hunting on private lands. The programme will be well underway this year and includes assistance to improve land for wildlife and increased protection by conservation officers where land is open for hunting.

The government is also concerned with deer range improvement and studies have indicated that deer populations can be increased where there is adequate shelter provided and suitable browse available.

The ever-increasing demand made by the public on the fisheries resources of the province makes the need for sound fisheries management even more necessary. Under this programme, Ontario's lakes are being inventoried as a first step. More than 3,000 lakes have been surveyed to date with the programme providing direction for an accelerated programme of management.

These are just a few of the many programmes currently underway within The Department of Lands and Forests—a department so vital to the development of northern Ontario. I could, of course, go on and on and spell out in detail the northern activities of the fisheries research branch, the timber branch, which incidentally only last week marked the billionth tree produced by the department, and the forest protection branch which performed the singularly excellent task of the successful spraying of the spruce bud worm over some 270,000 acres in the Shebandowan Lake district.

I might mention at this point, Mr. Speaker, that this is rather an important part of the function of Lands and Forests. There was a local area of infestation that, thank goodness, was controlled, in the south and west of Fort William. It was with special concern and delight that the Prime Minister of this province came to the Lakehead and flew over the area and we went out and examined it at ground level. Since then, I personally have been back with the foresters.

I am no biologist but certainly I used their knowledge and went back with them and the infestation has been controlled. We do not have to go back many years to where we had a tremendous outbreak of spruce bud worm on the northwest shore of Lake Superior and there were millions of acres of devastation caused by the worms. So this is of very special significance.

Mr. Speaker, in 1956, the Ontario Progressive Conservative government set up the Ontario Water Resources Commission. Since its inception, this commission has approved projects in Ontario totalling $1,600 million. Today, in order to execute its responsibilities, the commission has developed regional offices. One has already opened in Kingston to serve eastern Ontario. Another has been opened in London to serve southwestern Ontario and negotiations now are currently underway for the opening of a third regional office at Fort William to serve the Lakehead and northwestern Ontario.

In the last few years, we have heard a steady scream of criticism from the Opposition benches about water pollution, and in order to inform them as far as northern Ontario is concerned, I really should put on the record in detail the activities of this commission and its work in our part of the province. However, while they deserve to have these facts given to them, I will just briefly list the areas where OWRC projects are currently under development in northern Ontario:

Sioux Lookout, Balfour township, Bruce Mines, Chapleau, Beardmore, Smooth Rock Falls, Himsworth township, Black River, Matheson, Hearst, Nakina, Rayside township, Schreiber, Blezard township, Latchford, Longlac, Geraldton, Shackleton and Machin, Emo township, Ignace, Ear Falls, Red Lake, Lake Timiskaming.

Also, the OWRC is currently involved in municipal water and sewage facilities in Port Arthur, Fort William, Red Lake, Kenora, Ear Falls and Fort Frances, and negotiations are underway on Terrace Bay, Marathon and Shebandowan Lake.

This gives hon. members some idea of the government's progress in the field of sewage treatment and waterworks in northern Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, as the Progressive Conservative member for Fort William, when I speak of the great city of Fort William, synonymously I must include the beautiful city of Port Arthur—my apologies, the member has vacated—and the immediately adjoining municipalities of Shuniah and Neebing. The united Fort William and her adjoining municipalities and districts have a population of over 110,000 people. The Canadian Lakehead, as it is always referred to, although not a legal designation, has grown in use over the years as a description of these two historic ports, situated at the western end of the greatest inland waterways in the world—the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Seaway—and are directly connected to the Atlantic Ocean. A mid-continent seaport, Mr. Speaker, the Lakehead has the honour of being the highest seaport in the world at an elevation of over 600 feet above sea level.

At its historic beginning in 1678 as a transshipping point, it was known as Fort Kaministiquiwa. I might explain it, Mr. Speaker, Kaministiquiwa is an Ojibway word meaning river of many miles. It was known as Fort Kaministiquiwa and built to protect the transshipment eastward of valuable furs and the interchange of goods going westward out of eastern Canada. Since that time this great inland port has grown to become the third largest seaport in Canada with annual shipments of almost 20 million tons. The concentration of 25 grain elevators with capacity to store over 110 million bushels, which is one sixth of the total crop capacity of the prairie provinces of Canada, makes the Canadian Lakehead not only the third largest seaport in Canada, but the granary of the world.

Grain is not the only commodity creating this robust economy in the Lakehead, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nixon: They have a lot of trouble keeping the grain moving down there.

Mr. Jessiman: Yes, the federal government sure has trouble selling it, does it not? We did fine when we were in there.

It is the pivot point and service centre for a vast untapped natural resource empire stretching north to Hudson Bay. The Lakehead is the funnel, directing materials to the hungry industrial consumers of the continent and foreign lands. Fort William, situated exactly halfway across the great domain, is closer to Chicago than it is to the Queen city of Toronto, and the newsprint manufactured from one of our local mills supplies all the requirements of one of the largest papers of Chicago.

Mr. Speaker, again referring to the cities of Fort William and Port Arthur that have gradually grown to produce one solid business and social unit, it is difficult to speak or refer to one without the other. Side by side, as husband and wife, these two great cities are almost identical in population with close to 50,000 each. When the recommendations of the Hardy report on the study of regional government are implemented, we soon will be united, I hope, in a beautiful marriage because of the great distances to other centres.

From the Manitoba border, just west of Kenora, to Queen's Park is a distance of 1,200 miles. Mr. Speaker, is it any wonder that a feeling of loneliness is often mistaken for a feeling of neglect? In distance it is almost twice as far to travel to Toronto as it is to travel to Winnipeg from my home town. At this time I would compliment Air Canada on its recent inauguration of jet service between the Queen City and the Canadian Lakehead effective November 1. We are now just over one hour of air travel from the Canadian Lakehead to Toronto.

The Lakehead airport, although situated in Fort William, services the whole area of Thunder Bay with several flights daily both east and west. Internationally we are also connected by many airlines to the United States, and like Toronto we have outgrown our present facilities and larger accommodations are planned in the not-too-distant future to service this great area.

In sports and recreation, Mr. Speaker, we take no back seat to any part of the province of Ontario. It is only normal to associate the Lakehead with hockey because of our long winter season and outdoor rinks. We are proud of our record of achievement in this field of recreation. With the expanded NHL, with many new teams, it is almost impossible to name one that has not a player on it from our Canadian Lakehead and area. In the past five years, our little league teams from the Lakehead have won three of five Canadian championships—a record unsurpassed in this great province. In the field of sports, Mr. Speaker, we are located in the heart of the northwestern chain of mountains, which are actually a continuation of the Laurentian escarpment. Within five miles of our cities, we have four fine ski resort areas with vertical drops as great as between 800 and 900 feet, comparable with any skiing facilities in the Dominion of Canada—certainly the finest in the province of Ontario. The ski slopes are serviced with both T-bar and chair-lift equipment, and rapidly the Canadian Lakehead is becoming the ski capital of Ontario. We have been well represented on the Canadian ski teams that have participated in world amateur skiing, and in the not-too-distant future, I am sure, sir, that we will be producing world champions in the province of Ontario, and particularly at the Canadian Lakehead.

As a past president of the Fort William Chamber of Commerce, I state in the past Centennial year, Mr. Speaker, it was our privilege in Fort William for our male choir to become not only the Centennial choir champions for the province of Ontario, but also to represent Ontario in the great Centennial sing in Nova Scotia, and win the Canadian award for male choirs for the whole Dominion of Canada. Our male choir then, sir, represented Ontario in conducting a tour of Europe, and the same choir, Mr. Speaker, attended a function for the Premier and gave a resounding rendition of "Well, Hello Johnny". Also during our Centennial year, the Fort William city band won the Canadian championship for its class of band for the Dominion of Canada and brought great acclaim to our city. Not to be outdone, the Fort William men's pipe band participated in the Canadian championships and represented our province in Scotland and in Europe and brought great acclaim by performing for Her Majesty the Queen on this trip.

Mr. Speaker, last July, the hon. Minister of Tourism and Information (Mr. Auld) unveiled in Kenora one of the most revealing and action resulting tourist information studies. This report has received acclaim from tourist associations and the general public as a whole, as a report on which to build an industry that will triple the revenue in the areas examined. But, Mr. Speaker, conducting a study is one thing. What we need is immediate action to bolster our tourist business if we are to get our rightful share, and I would suggest to the Ministers of Tourism and Information, Lands and Forests, Trade and Development, that they combine their efforts on behalf of the whole northern part of the province and as a starter use one office in the northern states to invite tourists to visit us. This is a dual use of existing offices in the United States at this present time. We should stock Lake Superior with Coho salmon, so that the "Coho fever" would extend into Ontario instead of stopping at the south side of our Great Lakes. I have witnessed what has happened since Wisconsin, Michigan, and Minnesota have combined and planted the Coho. Before it is too late, let us spend a million to make ten million in this area. Let us recognize that tourism is our third largest industry and really put an effort on; let us extend the tourist season to 12 months instead of two or three. If we are serious about giving the north a real shot in the arm, then let us take advantage of what we have most of in the north, beautiful wilderness, and let us develop it to its fullest.

Mr. Speaker, it will not be long before we have regional government in the Lakehead. But, if we are to recognize the importance of adopting the concept of regional government in the same way that we have received and adopted the new boundaries in education, then I would suggest that we also recognize the necessity for allowing the responsibilities of area administration of all departments of government to be placed in the area concerned. Decisions for the north are then made in the north—by true northerners who understand the problems as they exist in the north. What we need is a type of satellite Queen's Park located in the north. Let us also consider transferring, if not all, then at least more of The Department of Lands and Forests to northwestern Ontario in the area where the crop is grown and harvested. And Mr. Speaker, let us also recognize the nickel capital of the world, Sudbury, and make it the area from where most of The Department of Mines should be operating.

Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday of this week, we all listened with a great deal of interest to the Lieutenant-Governor's speech, and of particular importance for those of us from northern Ontario was the announcement of a plan to co-ordinate all northern transportation policies. My understanding is that this new body will provide money to dispense grants for building roads and landing fields, and will generally be able to grant up to $15,000 a mile to companies who want to build roads to such resources as mines and forests.

Also, I noted with interest the promise of a revision in The Mining Act to overhaul our laws affecting safety requirements in the mining industry, and also a programme to provide additional recreation areas and more provincial parks, particularly, I hope, in northern Ontario. On the whole, the Throne Speech was realistic, practicable and sensible. Generally, it has received applause throughout Ontario. We realize that socialists will be unhappy because the government has decided not to go on and adopt any of the NDP's large spending programmes.

Mr. Speaker, in connection with the government's northern Ontario policies, I would just like to quote briefly from an editorial which appeared recently in the Dryden Observer.

No matter where one lives in Ontario, the tendency is to fear that the rest of the province may be enjoying benefits out of proportion to those of one's own area. There is little evidence, however, to suggest that any section of the province is being too seriously short-changed.

The Robarts government has shown itself sensitive to requests for recognition of area problems. Despite what political opponents may say, and it is their privilege to say what they please, Mr. Robarts seems determined to lead Ontario to successful development in every field of endeavour.

Election-time criticisms of the government's attitude to northern and northwestern Ontario have been found, with some exceptions, groundless. On a per-capita basis at least, these parts of the province are getting their share.

Mr. Speaker, I have attempted here today to place on the record just some of the Ontario government's policies that have been responsible for opening up one of the last frontiers in North America. I think that the people in northern Ontario should have a ready reference of what the government is doing in such important areas as education, municipal reorganization, agriculture, water resources and so on.

There are those critics, and we hope there always will be, who argue that the government does not do enough, fast enough. I count myself among them. It is from constant pressure, constructive criticism and the continuous strivings for new programmes that we in northern Ontario can ensure that we receive our fair share of government assistance and spending. But I would also say that there are different types of critics—those who are responsible and constructive, and those who go off in all directions, promising everything, making wild and unsubstantiated charges and whose only goal is destruction. They have promises for everything and policies for nothing, and that in my view is why they will continue to remain on the Opposition benches in the Legislature of Ontario.

Mr. Nixon moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): Mr. Speaker, on Monday we will continue with the Throne Debate.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 12.35 o'clock, p.m.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Introduction of bills.

THE EXPROPRIATION ACT, 1968-1969

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General) moves first reading of bill intituled, The Expropriation Act, 1968-1969.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, the bill which I have just had the privilege of introducing represents a result of our exhaustive review of the recommendations of the Hon. J. C. McRuer in his report on civil rights and the recommendations in the report of the Ontario Law Reform Commission relative to the basis for compensation on expropriation.

While I would not ordinarily take the time of this House, Mr. Speaker, to go into detail on the first reading of a bill, I did feel that the exceptional nature, the fundamental aspects of this bill, merit a brief comment which may assist the members in reviewing the subject matter of the bill.

The various recommendations that have been made have all been considered and the great majority of them are now represented in this legislation. They have been codified in some aspects to meet, in a practical way, the significant problems which are inherent in expropriation matters, while at the same time the fundamental principles inherent in the recommendations have, I believe, been maintained. If I may, I will review some of the principal features which are dealt with by the bill.

Before any expropriation can take place under the new law, an interested owner can require that an inquiry be held in public as to the fairness, soundness and necessity of the particular expropriation.

This would give all of those owners interested, and the expropriation authority, an opportunity to review with public dialogue the various aspects of any proposed expropriation.

The enquiry officer would then make his report upon the proposed expropriation and this would be submitted to an approving authority which would be a politically responsible group representative of the people. We have attempted to ensure that in every case of expropriation, the ultimate approval would have to be given by an elected individual or group of individuals, since we agree with the proposition that the taking of property for the public interest must by its nature be the decision of a person elected by the people.

The approving authority after considering the enquiry officer's report would make its decision as to the expropriation. It will be noted that the expropriating authority is a completely different agent from the approving authority.

In short, we have provided that there can be a file of necessity, in every case where property is taken by way of expropriation, that this is a public hearing, and that the final decision following a report by the enquiry officer will be made by an elected person or persons who are responsible to the electors.

This bill, Mr. Speaker, will also introduce the principle of equivalent reinstatement for the owners of residences, which must be expropriated for the public purpose. Under the bill, the land compensation tribunal will have the authority to award an amount of additional compensation, over and above market value, where the property taken is a residence and where equivalent accommodation may not be provided by the market value of the expropriated property with the other allowances that are now going to be made available.

This is a new principle which may cause some difficulties for expropriating authorities. But we feel it will provide a new and welcome degree of equity in dealing with homeowners. The new bill codifies the basis of compensation for expropriation and expressly provides that it will be based upon the market value of the land, damages attributable to disturbance, damages for injurious affection and any special difficulties in relocation. Market value is defined as the amount that would be obtained by the willing seller on a sale to a willing buyer in the open market.

Other sections clarify the principles inherent in this new and broad approach to compensation.

Hon. members will be interested in the fact that damages for disturbances will specifically include moving, legal and survey cost on relocation, together with the 5 per cent allowance for residence owners who must find new homes. Many procedural changes have been made to further ensure that property owners will be dealt with on a fair and reasonable basis. Expropriating authorities will have to pay to the owners 100 per cent of the market value of the property within three months of the expropriation or before taking possession, whichever is the earlier. At the same time, the authority will make an offer of the total amount it is willing to pay to that owner, including amounts for disturbance, injurious affection and relocation.

When making that offer, the expropriating authority will be required to provide the owner with a copy of the authority's appraisal report, upon which that offer is based. In return, the owner will not have to disclose his appraisal report unless and until the matter goes to arbitration and at that point there will have to be prior disclosure.

Provision is made in this bill for payment to the owner of his legal and appraisal costs, which are reasonably incurred in those cases where the owner, after arbitration, recovers more than was offered by the expropriating authority. If the owner recovers less, then the board will have a discretion to award costs to either party on a less generous basis.

The bill reflects the recommendation of the Hon. J. C. McRuer as to the establishment of a land compensation tribunal which will be a new board constituted to deal particularly with these compensation matters. The board of negotiation which has been a most useful and effective remedy, will be retained as the first step in promoting settlement in these compensation disputes, while there will be an ultimate appeal to the court of appeal from decisions of the land compensation tribunal. There are many other features of this bill, Mr. Speaker, upon which I could comment, particularly since they are of such significance and interest to the people of this province. However, I have taken enough of the time of the hon. members and I am sure that we will all be able to pursue the principles and the details of this bill together in the near future. I commend this to the hon. members, for we feel that it represents the enactment of many principles upon which all members of this House are in complete agreement.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, if you will permit me on first reading, a question to the Attorney General on the statement and the bill that is before us: It appears to me from the Attorney General's remarks the bill that we have now read for the first time today embodies many of the corrections to many of the objections that have been stated from this side over the years. For this reason, we welcome it—we welcome it enthusiastically.

I would like to ask the Minister if it is roughly parallel to the federal Expropriation Procedures Act, which is before Parliament at the present time?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well Mr. Speaker, quite frankly I do not know. We have some knowledge of it, but I have not seen the federal bill and I would rather speculate that we go broader and farther.

THE MUNICIPAL ACT

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Municipal Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to try to safeguard the interests of the tenants, and I hope it will receive the same kind of wholehearted support that the bill which was introduced by the hon. Attorney General has just received.

The purpose of the bill is the control of leases and rents and to establish a rent control board. It is a piece of permissive legislation and would allow municipalities to establish, where necessary, rental control boards to ensure that the people of this province are no longer going to have inflicted upon them the many great impositions.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has stated the purpose of his bill and he does not need to go into an explanation of it at this stage. Second reading is the appropriate place for that.

If the hon. member has anything further to say with respect to the bill, which he thinks would be within the rules and of importance to the members, he is free to do so.

Mr. Deans: Yes, I would say that in this bill there is provision for a fine of $2,000 in the event that a conviction is registered against any person who should see fit to ignore it.

Mr. Speaker: I do not think the consideration of the bill clause by clause, or what is in it, is a proper statement at this particular stage of the bill's history; we need merely a statement as to its purpose and I think the hon. member has given that.

COMMISSIONER TO INVESTIGATE ADMINISTRATIVE DECISIONS AND ACTS OF OFFICIALS

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview) moves first reading of a bill intituled, An Act to provide for the appointment of a commissioner to investigate administrative decisions and acts of officials of the government of Ontario and its agencies and to define the commissioner's powers and duties.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is my fifth effort to try and bring the government around to providing an ombudsman for the province of Ontario. As you know, sir, an ombudsman would be an official who would be able to protect the citizens of this province against arbitrary, unfair and unusual acts by the civil service, and for which the citizen now has no other remedy.

RELIEF OF MEDICAL PRACTITIONERS, REGISTERED NURSES AND OTHERS FROM LIABILITY

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to relieve medical practitioners, registered nurses and others from liability in respect of voluntary first aid and medical services.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, this bill is similar to one introduced earlier in this House but differs in that it protects not just doctors but all good Samaritans from legal action.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Prime Minister has a statement.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. McKeough) is in the Lakehead, meeting with the municipal councils of the cities of Fort William and Port Arthur and the adjoining townships of Neebing and Shuniah. The purpose of his visit it to announce the intention of the government to present legislation during this session of the Legislature for the amalgamation of the two cities and parts of the townships of Shuniah and Neebing into one municipality.

It is the conclusion of the government that the immediate and, of perhaps greater importance, the long-term interests of the Lakehead community will be best served through the policies and administration of a single municipal jurisdiction.

The decision in favour of amalgamation is the culmination of a series of studies and deliberations which followed the completion of a local government review in March of this year. The research findings of the review, together with the briefs submitted by local municipal councils, organizations and individuals have been given extensive analysis by the staff of The Department of Municipal Affairs and other departments and agencies of the government affected by the recommendations.

During the weeks ahead, further consideration will be given to the matter of precise boundaries, finances, and the organization and structure for representation and municipal services. In this connection, the Minister of Municipal Affairs will look to the inter-municipal committee established last spring to maintain a continuing liaison with the Lakehead and district municipalities. The inter-municipal committee represents the Lakehead municipalities and the district of Thunder Bay, and has performed a most important function as liaison with the government. I should like to express the appreciation of the government for the dedication and hard work of the members of this committee. Their continued co-operation ensures that the more detailed aspects of the proposal for amalgamation will be resolved in a manner which will meet the needs of the people of the Lakehead area.

Mr. Speaker, as you are aware, the local government review also proposed a "district municipality", which would be a regional government consisting of the proposed Lakehead city and the district of Thunder Bay. The government does not plan the immediate establishment of a full scale regional government for this district. Rather, any steps to implement this recommendation, would have implications for all of the districts which make up the northern part of our province. Accordingly, on September 12, during the tour of northern Ontario by members of the Legislature, I announced the appointment of an inter-departmental committee to examine government at the district level in northern Ontario. This committee will report in mid-1969 on the application of the recommendations contained in the Lakehead local government review, to the municipalities and unorganized territories within the districts of Ontario.

Any action to bring about a regional government for the Thunder Bay district will be determined, at least in part, by the findings of the inter-departmental committee.

I might add that this committee will schedule meetings in several locations in northern Ontario so that the elected municipal officials in the districts will be able to meet with the committee to discuss the proposed regional organization and the special interests of the people of the districts.

Mr. Speaker: Did the hon. member have a question?

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): No, Mr. Speaker, this is with reference to introduction of bills.

I have a question of you, Mr. Speaker. I have just received from the Clerk a copy of a bill by the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. Deans), and I have one in exactly the same form, word for word. Is there any procedure whereby I could dispense with the usual notice and have it put in now?

Mr. Speaker: Not only do we usually need the notice, but the order has been closed and I would suggest that the hon. member's purpose would be equally well served by introducing it tomorrow and they will be printed for consideration—may I just check with the Clerk?

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): The hon. member is following more closely, but he is still following.

Mr. Speaker: The Clerk also advises me of something that should have been patent to me; that if it is word for word then it is out of order because we cannot have two bills which are word for word.

I am afraid the hon. member was not on his feet quickly enough. The hon. Minister of Justice.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, on November 21, the hon. member for Sarnia (Mr. Bullbrook) asked a question in three parts. I answered the first two and I promised him an answer to the third part which had to do with the qualifications of Mr. Bruce Goulet in connection with his appointment as a member of the board of police commissioners for the city of North Bay.

I am advised, Mr. Speaker, that Mr. Goulet is president of the United Nations Association of North Bay; is past president of the North Bay Chamber of Commerce; for many years was chairman of the public affairs committee of that chamber and in this capacity he has worked closely with the municipal council and has been keenly interested in provincial and federal affairs. He is a member of the department of industry of North Bay, which is a committee of the council and is interested in the industrial development of the North Bay area.

He is chairman of the Dominion Day committee as well as chairman of the Centennial committee for that city. He is at present a member of the Rotary club and chairman of the crippled children's committee, which as we all know is one of the main programmes of Rotary International. He is also a member of the Canadian Legion.

In 1967, Mr. Goulet was selected "Man of the Year" for North Bay. This is an honour which is not always conferred annually but only when there is someone deserving of such recognition.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): How many votes did he lose by last fall? Was he beaten badly?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Surely the hon. member is not suggesting that he should not have involvement in public affairs?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the hon. Minister of Social and Family Services. Is the Minister investigating the role played by the Metropolitan Toronto Catholic children's aid society in the case of Theresa MacIntosh, who died October 10?

Hon. J. Yaremko (Minister of Social and Family Services): Mr. Speaker, we are naturally concerned about this case. But it is still before a coroners' jury and, as you know, the inquest will resume Wednesday. It would be unfair to comment in any way while the jury is discharging its very serious responsibilities.

Mr. Speaker, may I ask your indulgence to have the other two questions put to me by hon. members of the House? The member for Thunder Bay?

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) would agree; I believe the Minister has to leave to keep an appointment. The hon. member for Thunder Bay.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): Mr. Speaker, I do have a question for the Minister of Social and Family Services. Has the Minister received a request for a capital grant from the Lakehead Association for the Mentally Retarded sheltered workshop?

Is the Minister prepared to consider their request?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Speaker, I do have such a request and it is presently being considered.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for High Park (Mr. Shulman) is not in his seat so his question will not be answered. The hon. leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. What arrangements will be made to celebrate the 150th anniversary of the birth of the Hon. George Brown, that great Liberal?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well, Mr. Speaker, as the hon. members are doubtless aware, this centenary is on Friday of this week.

Mr. Nixon: That would not be centenary. It is sesquicentennial.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: At one stage of the game we had hoped to have a dinner, but through a whole series of circumstances that became impossible. I might say I invited the Prime Minister of Canada to that dinner, but he could not make it. I thought he could attend to represent the Liberal Party of Canada.

I will have a full rundown on some ceremonies that we plan to conduct here and outside the buildings. If hon. members will be patient I will announce these to the House after I have had an opportunity to discuss them, Mr. Speaker, with the leader of the Opposition and the leader of the New Democratic Party. We will probably be able to do that before the House sits tomorrow and then we will be able to lay the full programme out before the members.

We intend to honour the birth date of this great Canadian in as auspicious a way as possible.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Premier would agree that the time is growing quite short and perhaps we ought to have undertaken some planning at an earlier date.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: We undertook a lot of planning at an earlier date but there have just been a whole series of events that conflict; you know sometimes you run into these situations. However, Friday is the actual anniversary day and I will tell hon. members all about it when we get the final "i's" dotted and "t's" crossed and then we will announce the programme in the House.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, I was informed some two weeks ago, or thereabouts, that there was going to be such a celebration on November 29, so I do not feel that I have been left out of the picture.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): The Prime Minister does not seem to know about it—or very little about it.

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): Maybe the hon. member knows more than he does.

Mr. MacDonald: Maybe it is the Secretary of the Cabinet who is pursuing the details.

Mr. Trotter: Maybe the civil servants tell him.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I am quite certain the leader of the Opposition has heard about this too.

Mr. MacDonald: I have two questions, Mr. Speaker.

The first one is held over from Friday—to the Minister of Health. Was the government informed of the recent decision to increase doctors' fees before it was publicly announced? What further outlay from the public Treasury, through OMSIP expenditures, will result from this fee increase? Does the Minister feel that such an increase can henceforth be made unilaterally without consultation or negotiation?

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Speaker, I received a letter from the OMA on October 18 of this year indicating that an increase in fees of approximately ten per cent would be implemented April, 1969.

The answer to the second part, it is not possible to answer this question until we know the detailed changes which are being proposed.

The third part. I am still hopeful that arrangements can be made with the profession to agree on a fee schedule that machinery for negotiation can be established to our mutual satisfaction.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough West. The Minister of Labour (Mr. Bales) is not present at the moment.

Mr. T. Reid (Scarborough East): Scarborough East or Scarborough West?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough East, yes!

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Education. What safety specifications, if any, for school buses does the Minister of Education require before school children can be transported in those buses to and from school?

The second part of the question: What physical health and fitness standards, if any, does the Minister of Education set for bus drivers who transport children to and from school?

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member for Peterborough would place his question at the same time. They are not related but they have to do with the same subject matter.

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In view of the recent traffic deaths of two Peterborough students, would the Minister consider an investigation of school bus routes in each school jurisdiction to ensure that these buses are making use of the safest as well as the most direct routes?

Hon. W. G. Davis (Minister of Education): Mr. Speaker, to answer that part for the member for Scarborough East first: The question of specifications for school bus transportation fall within the jurisdiction of The Department of Transport. I regret I did not see this question until just a very few minutes before the House sat so I was not able to contact the Minister of Transport (Mr. Haskett) so that he might be able to give the hon. members this material; and of course this applies to the second part of the question as well.

With respect to the question from the member for Peterborough. One of the basic responsibilities of the new divisional boards when they commence their operations within a very few weeks will, of course, be to review bus routes. The boards have always taken the question of school safety and safety of the children with respect to bus routes, as one of their very prime considerations and I fully expect that they will do this when the new divisional boards are created.

I think we all regret, Mr. Speaker, the very unfortunate occurrence, the tragedy of last week. I can only say that as far as the boards are concerned generally, we have had a very excellent safety record in this province. I am very satisfied that they make a very conscious effort to see to the safety of the young people. Really these questions are their prime considerations.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member for Scarborough East would allow me to transfer the question to the Minister of Transport so that it may be answered.

Mr. T. Reid: On your ruling, sir!

I have just asked the Minister of Education if he does not feel that he should have been making recommendations to the other department of this government; that he should not have been sitting on his seat for so long in this regard; that he has a direct responsibility to offer some leadership in this area.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, with great respect to the member for Scarborough East there are specifications. They are there within The Department of Transport right now and if the hon. member would perhaps just have the patience, and to a degree the courtesy, to transfer the question to the appropriate Minister, I am sure he would get an appropriate and courteous answer.

Mr. T. Reid: And meanwhile, two more children—

Mr. Speaker: Order!

A supplementary from the other member who placed a question.

Mr. Pitman: A supplementary question. I was wondering whether the Minister might consider grants to local school boards for carrying on investigations of this sort. It would appear to me that as these larger jurisdictions are organized, a great deal of education is going to be achieved by bussing students back and forth.

I investigated this particular accident—

Mr. Speaker: Order: Perhaps the hon. Minister might investigate just simply railroad crossings—could there be a special grant to investigate railroad crossings as they affect school buses in local jurisdictions?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I do not purport to be knowledgeable in the whole question of transportation, but I would suggest that it should not, surely, require a special grant to investigate any hazard or questionable part of a school bus route; that the board must automatically consider this and make every effort to ensure that buses are taking the safest possible route. I do not see where any special grant would really reveal anything that they do not presently know.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sudbury.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Provincial Secretary.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sudbury has the floor.

Mr. Sopha: Thank you, sir. Would the Provincial Secretary inform the House, in a general way, if specific figures are not available of the nature of the increase in revenue over the same period last year to the liquor control board of Ontario during the Quebec liquor strike? If possible, could the House have an indication of the increase in profits during the same period?

Hon. R. S. Welch (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, I will have to take this question as notice.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member for High Park would care to ask the question of the Minister of Social and Family Services, who advised me he was leaving the House at 3.05, the floor is now his.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, will the Minister institute a comfort allowance for those disabled persons with no income who are confined to Ontario's hospitals for the chronically ill?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Speaker, our programmes and their application to persons such as the chronically ill are always under review and they are presently.

Mr. Shulman: Will the Minister give more information?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sandwich-Riverside has two questions from last week. Perhaps, he would place them now.

Mr. F. A. Burr (Sandwich-Riverside): Mr. Speaker, a question of the Prime Minister: Has the government given consideration to a November 4 letter from Windsor city council stating its firm opposition to a provincial tax on drugs?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I am quite certain that letter has been given consideration. I do not recall whether it came to my desk or not, but certainly we give full consideration to all such recommendations and the hon. member can be assured that this opinion of the Windsor city council will be given every consideration.

Mr. Burr: Thank you, sir. A question for the Minister of Health: Does the Minister share the opinion of Doctor J. Z. Sullivan of The Department of National Health and Welfare that motor vehicle exhaust pollution is not a health problem in Canada and is unlikely ever to become one?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, the answer is "no", I do not share the opinion and as evidence of that, the government of Ontario has already got legislation on the statute book and regulations in effect requiring that all motor vehicles sold in Ontario, in this present model year, must be equipped with the air pollution control equipment as recommended and approved by the United States government.

I would advise the House and the industry now, through this means, sir, that in 1970 the regulations will be even more stringent.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Dovercourt has a question from last week.

Mr. D. M. De Monte (Dovercourt): Yes, Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Health.

What is the percentage of the provincial contribution of the capital cost of new construction of hospitals? And a second question: what is the percentage of the provincial contribution of the maintenance cost of hospitals?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, the answer to this question is much longer than the question.

The province accepts responsibility for two-thirds of the approved capital construction costs. And now, since the federal government is no longer paying anything towards capital construction of hospitals, the province must find this entire two-thirds.

In the case of northern Ontario hospitals, because of their location and their responsibilities, an additional grant was paid over and above the usual two-thirds and this grant amounts to $2,000 per active treatment bed or bed equivalent and $1,000 for each chronic or convalescent bed or bed equivalent in municipalities of 12,000 and under and $500 and $250 respectively in municipalities over 12,000.

In the case of teaching hospitals the total cost is provided and, of course, this is subject to whatever grants we are able to squeeze out of the federal health resources fund.

In the case of hospitals that serve two purposes; that of teaching and community service as well, the two-thirds approved cost applies in respect of the area dedicated to community service; and 50 per cent grant is applied to that part of the hospital used for its teaching function.

The other 50 per cent hopefully, was to come from the federal health resources fund but in light of the decision made recently, which represented a direct change in the rules made in 1965, we can hardly tell what percentage will come from the federal government. We are quite convinced and quite certain now, of course, that it will be much less than 50 per cent, and therefore the provincial share will be much higher than 50 per cent.

In the case of regional rehabilitation hospitals, the full approved cost is paid.

In the case of ambulance facilities—that is, facilities in connection with a hospital to house an ambulance—the full approved cost is paid.

The province's contribution to the cost of hospital maintenance is 32.5 per cent of the whole.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Wentworth.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might be permitted a brief comment on the remarks of the hon. member for Humber before I ask my question.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has the floor for the purpose of asking a question. This is not the appropriate time to comment on speeches or remarks by other hon. members.

Mr. Deans: Fine. I will ask only the second part of my question to the Minister of Highways.

Will the Minister consider, in the interest of minimizing traffic fatalities, re-applying to the Ontario municipal board for immediate emergency permission to effect the closing of Murray Avenue to Queen Elizabeth Highway?

Hon. G. E. Gomme (Minister of Highways): Mr. Speaker, I answered the hon. member's question. He left out the first part this time and I can say again that we are proceeding with all possible speed on the engineering, the plans and specifications to live up to what the board has asked us to do.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, if I may ask a supplementary question?

The question I asked was, "Would you reapply to the board in order to hasten the closing"—the board gave permission some ten years ago—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Deans: It has taken that long—

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member has placed his supplementary question. Now the Minister has the opportunity, if he wishes, to answer it.

Hon. Mr. Gomme: Mr. Speaker, we do not think that is necessary at the present time because we are proceeding as fast as possible.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the hon. Minister of Transport.

1. Would the Minister advise the House when the 45-mile-per-hour "construction" speed limit will be removed from completed portions of the Queen Elizabeth Way east of the Highway 27 interchange?

2. Would the Minister agree that the maintenance of the 45-mile-per-hour speed limit is inconsistent with his statement to the House on April 7, 1967? Hansard, p. 1183.

3. With respect to construction speed zones generally, why is the same speed limit maintained at all times, whether or not construction is in progress, instead of being adjusted to actual conditions, particularly at week-ends when construction work ceases?

Hon. I. Haskett (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in that we must rely, I am sure the hon. member understands, on The Department of Highways for information in applying construction zone speed limits. I find it necessary to defer the answer until tomorrow.

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member a supplementary question?

Mr. Young: No, I am sorry, I had another question for the Attorney General, but I will ask that tomorrow.

Mr. Speaker: Yes, the Attorney General is not here.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Health: It is in three parts:

1. Are staff members at the Penetang Ontario Hospital allowed to employ patients as domestics and for staff home labour?

2. What pay are the patients given for this work?

3. Is it the policy of The Department of Health to allow staff an extra perquisite in the form of cheap labour?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, I do not understand what the hon. member means by the first part of his question. If he wants to clarify it, I shall try to get the answer.

The second part: Patients can be placed in homes of staff as part of the industrial therapy programme. Staff asking use of such services are charged at a rate that is based on a comparison for work the individual is able to do with the outside labour market. This amount is paid to the industrial therapy fund out of which all patients involved in the programme receive incentive payments. The answer to the third part of the question is no.

Mr. Shulman: Will the Minister allow a supplementary question?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Yes.

Mr. Shulman: Do I misunderstand the Minister? Is his answer that the money is all paid into one fund and then is divided among all the patients and that none of the money goes directly to the patient doing the work?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: It is paid into the industrial therapy fund, sir, and divided among the patients who qualify for withdrawals from this fund.

Mr. Shulman: In the form of a second supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, can the Minister—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister said that he would not accept a further supplementary question. The member might perhaps go on to his other question.

Mr. Shulman: A question to the Minister of Correctional Services.

When is Mr. William Lumley to be transferred from Sarnia jail to a reformatory, as promised in a letter from The Department of Correctional Services of October 31, 1968?

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. member's question; the decision to transfer this man from the Lambton county jail to a reformatory, was made by the classification committee on October 31, 1968. Arrangements were made for his transfer to take place on the next routine trip to this area made by the departmental bailiffs.

For security reasons, it is not deemed advisable to give publicly the exact date of the transfer, but if the hon. member so wishes, I am prepared to provide him with this information on a strictly confidential basis. In the interest, Mr. Speaker, of the rehabilitation of persons concerned, I would again appeal to the hon. member to please continue the practice followed by the hon. members of this House during the last session of not publicly identifying inmates by name.

Mr. Stokes: Is the Minister aware of the hazardous driving conditions that prevail on highway 585, which runs from Nipigon to Pine Portage? When will the Minister instruct his department to start on a programme of reconstruction of highway 585 as promised during the last session?

Hon. Mr. Gomme: Mr. Speaker, I just received this question as I came into the House and I will have to take it as notice and supply the answer.

Mr. N. Whitney (Prince Edward-Lennox): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of privilege relating to the statements in the Toronto Globe and Mail last Friday, also in the Belleville Intelligencer of the same day, as stated by the hon. leader of the NDP, following their return from a visit to Picton. It is my opinion that certain statements were made which were derogatory in their nature to certain of the people I represent, some named, some not named. I would like to quote first from the Globe and Mail statement, and then briefly from the Intelligencer statement.

Mr. Lewis: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, for clarification: When a statement of privilege is made in the House, sir, must it not relate directly to the member as he is affected rather than those he represents? Would the member not have appropriate time in the Throne debate to raise this kind of thing?

Mr. Speaker: My understanding of the hon. member's opening preamble with respect to this point of privilege was that it affected not only the people he represented but himself as their representative. So far as I am concerned, as long as he brings himself within my interpretation of what he has said, I think he is in order. But he is not in order merely to comment upon newspaper statements about things in his riding.

Mr. Whitney: Mr. Speaker, in order to supply the background, I will quote briefly from what appeared in the Globe and Mail:

New Democratic Party leader Donald MacDonald yesterday described Mayor Harvey J. McFarland of Picton as a millionaire contractor made wealthy from public funds and leading a "Tory-dominated establishment" against striking workers at Proctor-Silex Canada Ltd.

In the early hours of yesterday's session of the Legislature, the 20 NDP seats were empty as Mr. MacDonald led 18 caucus members to the strike site. In a press conference after he returned, he described the trip as an attempt to dramatize a situation the NDP will fight to the end.

The MPPs joined picketing at the plant, obeying a court injunction limiting pickets to six at a time.

Mr. MacDonald described Mr. McFarland as owner of the company's land and building and said he collects $58,000 a year in rent.

"Mr. McFarland made his wealth from the public purse," Mr. MacDonald said, referring to highways contracts Mr. McFarland has bid on and carried out for the government. "He is a source of funds for Tory candidates in the area. He is a well-known Tory and a source of slush funds.

"Both old parties traditionally produce highways millionaires when they are in power."

Mr. MacDonald said he did not talk to—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is going far too long in his quotation. If he has a point of privilege, he will now bring himself to it and cease reading from a report which I am sure all members have read.

Mr. Whitney: I question the statement "Tory-dominated establishment". Constituents of mine are being made to appear as a coerced people, which they are not. In Picton and Prince Edward county we have our political organizations and municipal councils regularly elected, our service clubs and other organizations dedicated to public service.

Among all of the people in the area we know of no group of any kind which has been organized on behalf of the company. On the other hand, outside organizers of the international union of electrical workers aided and abetted, it would seem, by the NDP, have and are attempting by every means at their disposal to organize and influence public opinion on behalf of the union.

In the absence of organized opposition of any kind, these people by their own statements and actions have been defeating their own purposes. The truth is that the people of Prince Edward have not and will not be coerced by anyone and I resent any implication to the contrary as expressed by the NDP leader.

Secondly, there was a reference made to Dr. Dockrill, a constituent with whom I may not always agree. But I regret to hear a statement was made in the Globe and Mail that his bank had cut off his credit or was threatening to cut off his credit because of his alleged—in his riding. If he can relate this to personal privilege as far as he is concerned, as their representative there, then he is in order. Otherwise, he is not.

Mr. Whitney: Well, I feel that it is in the nature of a personal privilege that when a man's personal financial condition is told to the world, through a newspaper announcement by someone who briefly visited there, and who—the quoted party—denies in another place that he made exactly that statement. I feel it is a matter of privilege to divulge what he said following that statement in the press.

Mr. Speaker: Now the hon. member has stated his reasons for rising on that point of privilege. I disagree with him. It is not a point of privilege as far as the hon. member is concerned—the matter he is now discussing.

Mr. Whitney: Well, in conclusion, I would say that as far as the statements which were made regarding public funds and so on, I am simply going to briefly state that at times local Conservatives are annoyed because the gentleman in question contributes to the Liberals. Sometimes Liberals are annoyed because he contributes to the Conservatives.

He does work for the federal government. He has done work for many governments. He has done work practically all over Canada. In fact I would ask the hon. member for High Park if he knows that sometimes he may even have contributed to the CCF government in Saskatchewan, under T. C. Douglas, sometime in the past.

Consequently, I object to such statements.

Mr. Speaker: Did the hon. member for Scarborough West have a point of order or privilege?

Mr. Lewis: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to revert to a matter of such banality. I missed the Minister of Health's earlier reply. I wonder if he would indicate to the House—did he say in his answer to the question, that the Ontario Medical Association fee schedule was now a fait accompli for April 1 1969? The Legislature could have no effect on that decision, is that his answer?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, my answer is in Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Essex-Kent.

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw to the attention of the House the efforts of a young man in my riding. A 16-year-old 4-H club member scored a major upset in the seed grain show at the Royal winter fair last week when he won the reserve ear corn championship with a sample of Ontario-grown corn. The Royal winter fair seed show officials said that never in the long and colourful history of the Royal has Ontario corn placed as high in the show against the powerful high-quality entrants from the United States.

This was a first championship ever, of any sort, for Canadian corn at the Royal. The high-placing Ontario corn was grown and entered by Robert Baillargeon of Stoney Point in the township of Tilbury North, in Ontario's southwestern corn belt. The entry stood first in the 4-H ear corn class and then went on to runner-up for the world championship ear corn. This is the first time Bob Baillargeon has exhibited at the Royal. His brother Raymond, 18, showed at the Royal last year, and this year took second to his brother's winning entry in the 4-H club.

Both boys are members of the Tilbury 4-H corn and soya bean club. They are the sons of George and Cecile Baillargeon who own and operate a cash crop farm. The Baillargeon family grow corn, wheat, oats, soy beans, tomatoes and cucumbers.

Mr. Speaker: I would like to say to the hon. members and to the hon. member who has just given us this account of excellence in young farmers that I think the House is glad to hear these things, but I think that they can be dealt with much more expeditiously than by reading a newspaper report on it, and I would ask the hon. members to cooperate with me in the future. I will be glad to allow them the opportunity of making us aware of and praising the achievements of their people but I would ask that they keep it to a reasonable statement of what has happened without the family and other background, which is totally unnecessary.

Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The first order, resuming the adjourned debate on the motion for an address in reply to the speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor at the opening of the session.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin by once again offering my compliments to you, sir, and to say that I am very glad that the leader of the government has taken the decision to reconvene Parliament in the autumn of the year so that our business, I hope, can be carried on in a more efficient manner and with the possibility that we might complete it before we get into the warm months next July.

I would suggest to you, sir, that if the business of the province does require a longer period of time for our perusal and discussion—as I personally believe it does—we ought to look for a more efficient and even longer session in the autumn of the year.

I have felt for some time, that there are two things wrong with the ordering of our business; number one, we are here too long, and number two, we are away from the Legislature too long. When the business is compacted into one session beginning in February and extending until the completion of the business, there is a tendency for spirits to flag and for our connection with our own areas to get a bit thin as we are away week after week and particularly with very lengthy night sessions as a part of our responsibility.

I have felt myself, Mr. Speaker, that there is a lack of urgency even in this particular fall session and that we should be undertaking a more careful discussion particularly, of the financial affairs of Ontario rather than the rather lackadaisical approach that has been evident in the first few days. My colleagues, particularly those from out of town, would support a move to resume night sessions at least two nights a week very early in the fall session so that they might—having come some distance to partake of their duties here—be able to work at them more diligently and more steadily so that the business can be accomplished in a shorter period of time and in a more orderly way.

I know that those members who come a shorter distance from home would not support any particular efforts on our part to have night sessions resumed. Nevertheless, if we are going to carry out the business efficiently and to make good use of the members who have come long distances in order to represent their areas I would suggest that night sessions might very well become a part of our order in the near future.

Now, the speech itself, that we are discussing this afternoon and I expect we will be discussing for some days, touches all the basis of safety as far as the administration is concerned. But there is one area that I would like to read to you, sir. It is found on page three where we are assured that the province will place and I quote, “renewed emphasis on efficiency and economy in every branch and agency of the Ontario government”. While this, of course, is much to be desired I hope you would agree with me, sir, that it is something that we would expect on the day-to-day ordering of provincial business and not entered into on rare occasions by the Premier (Mr. Robarts) and his Cabinet in order to relieve tax difficulties that they themselves are responsible for.

So, if this is, in fact, to be an economy session, a tax session, a budget session, then surely, while there are other areas of business presented to us in the House even today, we should be turning our attention to an examination of the budget and to the spending programmes of the government.

Before I get into that in too much detail, I want to extend my congratulations to the member for London South, the new Minister of Revenue (Mr. White). Frankly, I was convinced when the new portfolio was set up that it was not necessary to have a separate individual exercise the responsibility. The Treasurer has been able to balance both of these areas of responsibility for many years, since Confederation as a matter of fact, and it appeared to me that the new member of the Cabinet was very much of a supernumerary and his appointment smacked of the political pay-off for the fact that he has been conducting those Monday night sessions in London on behalf of his colleague from London North, and that really friendship was coming through and the London establishment needed something to strengthen it.

I now feel that there is some usefulness in his appointment, small though that may be: the example he is setting to his spendthrift colleagues and confreres, chief among them the Prime Minister himself.

I was really gratified to read in the Globe and Mail last week that he is going to travel on GO transit as long as possible and then when the pressures of his duties require him to have an automobile and a driver, it will be a stripped-down standard Chev and that he, unlike his colleagues, is going to second one of his clerks from his office to drive him. Surely this is the kind of example that the other members of the Cabinet would be glad to receive. It is in these small areas—these rather picayune approaches to savings—that I suppose the funds will be gathered that are going to be significant in this, one of the tightest financial situations Ontario has experienced since Confederation—probably the worst one. So if there is some use for this new Minister, this may be it. But once this example has been set I would tell you, sir, that his usefulness diminishes once again to zero, and we could very well, on the road to economy, dispense with his services and pick up a little bit of indemnity that could be added to that fund that he is so concerned with.

You know it is interesting, in reading about the accounts of the peregrinations of the Premier and his white-lipped and trembling colleague, the Treasurer (Mr. MacNaughton), who is not with us today, that when they go to Ottawa to confront the government of Canada with the tremendous needs for more fiscal abatement, the Premier and Treasurer travel in our own provincial plane with an executive configuration, and they are driven in those large black cars with the flags flying to meet the Minister of Finance and his colleagues in Ottawa, who, I suppose, go by cab to the meeting. I would not dream for a moment of reverting to that old argument that was so effective in depression times—when my predecessor as leader of the Liberal Party undertook to turn back the gross expenditures of the Conservative administration that he had displaced, by auctioning off the government cars—because really I feel that the government members have to be moved about the province and I have no particular objection to this. They are a rather fearful lot, though. They covet the big black Cadillacs with the snapping flags on the fenders but they—

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): We do not buy Cadillacs.

Mr. Nixon: That is right, there are no Cadillacs and I think this is significant. They set their sights down just a little bit and the Minister of Highways (Mr. Gomme) is able to make do with a nice black Buick Electra. Beside the license plate on the back there is the coat of arms of Ontario. It just makes your blood heat up a bit to see that moving down the road—with the double lamps in the back so that he can read state papers.

I do not know whether he has followed the example of the Minister of Education (Mr. Davis), who has a hot line in the back seat of the automobile—I do not know who answers him when he pushes the button—but I think there are two phones there. It is significant, though, that the Minister of Revenue is setting the kind of example that I think would do the whole administration good if they were to examine it carefully and follow it, if they could bring themselves in all humility to do so. This is something, of course, of some concern, because we are looking for $300 million, we are told by the hon. Treasurer, and unless we make up this particular amount, then we are facing the kind of fiscal nightmare that both the Treasurer and the Premier have described in such a lurid detail across the province.

I would like to ask you, Mr. Speaker, and my colleagues along with you and the other members of the House, to cast your minds back to the election campaign last October in which our friends opposite were so successful in returning to the seats of the administration with 69 members. I can well recall the barrage of propaganda that was put before the people of the province during the spring and summer months at their own expense, and for a few weeks during the election campaign from the swollen slush funds of the Conservative Party itself. We were told in great detail about the high administrative quality of the Premier and his administration. We were told that Ontario was not only a place to stand and a place to grow, but that good government deserved our support, and that we, in Ontario, were very fortunate to have the services of the Premier and his colleagues, who were giving us the best government of anywhere in Canada or in North America.

It seems strange to believe that that silver-haired fox who travelled across the province in the steps of Leslie Frost, who was reassuring those who were having some doubts about the administrative capabilities of this administration that all was well, when less than eleven months later this same man and his chief lieutenant, the Treasurer, had the temerity to state publicly that we in Ontario faced a "fiscal nightmare".

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Nixon: Now if I was to use a phrase like that, that same man would have accused me of broadcasting doom and gloom and you may well recall his urgings to me, as the leader of the Opposition, and my colleagues, to give up the predictions of difficulty that we were making a year ago and to go along with the Conservatives to a greater and more prosperous co-prosperity sphere or whatever it was that he called it. Now we find ourselves in the difficulties that the Premier and Treasurer and probably the best fiscal advisors in the civil service of any province in Canada cannot find means to solve.

It is on this topic that I would like to spend a few moments this afternoon, because we are approaching two important conferences: the constitutional conference, the dates for which have been set, and a financial conference immediately after that. I think it is necessary that we examine the difficulties the Premier has led the province into and that we look at some of the alternatives that he must research himself if, in fact, the government of Canada is going to be taken at its word and that they are not to increase the abatement beyond the 28.3 per cent which is now available to this province.

I would like you to remember, sir, that the policies of the government of Canada have been unchanged for two years. I will remember the return of the Premier from the last fiscal conference when he had been told by the then Minister of Finance that the government in Ottawa was not prepared to recommend further abatement, unless it was accompanied by specific further responsibilities.

Whether we support this or not—and I will get to that in a moment—it seems incredible that the Premier would come back two years ago from a conference of this type, and you may remember the anger with which he expressed his understanding of the rigid position the government of Canada took then, and how quickly this anger was lost in the forthcoming election campaign when he had to give the continuing impression that all was well in Ontario.

One of the significant political facts in this province is that for many years the largest single source of income has been the abatement from the government of Canada—$650 million this year alone. It accounts for a large measure of the public services extended to our citizens and taxpayers as if through the generosity of this administration alone. It is an old fashioned, but applicable rule of modern democracy, that the administration which provides these services should have the responsibility for taxing for them as well. Yet the Minister of Revenue who is sitting back there in smug complacency, saying that he is going to drive a stripped-down Chev, gets his largest cheque from the government of Canada—$650 million this year alone.

Mr. Speaker, we know that within the next two months it may very well be that the leader of the government will send the Treasurer and the new Minister down to Ottawa to intercede for Ontario and on behalf of the difficulties that we are now encountering in paying our bills.

Imagine Ontario in a situation where we are running at what the former Treasurer might have called a $300 million shortfall which, in fact, must be made up if we are going to withstand even the debt limits—and they are large debt limits—set by the Royal commission on taxation, which said we must not allow our debts to go beyond nine per cent of our gross provincial product.

I have already suggested that a part of these negotiations should be based on a valiant attempt to get a share of the two per cent surtax that has been imposed by the government of Canada in such a way that we now cannot share in it. My calculations are that this, in fact, would add $40 to $50 million to the amount that is presently available under present abatement agreements.

I personally have some misgivings about the need for the imposition of the tax in the way that the Minister of Finance saw fit to do it three weeks ago in the budget that he brought down. And I am not prepared, as the people opposite seem to expect, to defend them chapter and verse in every one of these decisions.

I suppose we must take for granted that the government of Canada, faced with a $700 million deficit, feels that they are hard-pressed to put their own house in order and they expect other governments across Canada to accept the same responsibility.

We have been treated in recent months to the 25th anniversary of the Conservative Party in power in Ontario. We have been embarrassed at their attempts to get sort of a monkey gland transfusion three weeks ago down in the Royal York. With the help of John Bassett, they were able to turn out a few very attractive young people indeed, but still in the back rows there was Erskine Johnston picking a fight with the new president and there was the rumour that the London establishment was not in favour of Mr. Eagleson becoming the president and the fact that the Premier had supported Wallace McCutcheon for the leadership last year.

It does not indicate to me that the leader of the government is much of a swinger. I do not think we are looking for a swinger, we are looking for somebody who is prepared to accept provincial responsibilities, prepared to accept blame along with the responsibility, when it is his to accept. I cannot help but recall the campaign a year ago when either the Premier was ill advised by those who must have known the difficulties that were approaching in the financial situation in Ontario or he was so innocent that he felt that in all good time this would be worked out. The federal policy was rigid—in my view too rigid — but still was expressed two years ago and there is no indication of any change as far as I can see, although I have not been present at the negotiations undertaken by the Treasurer and the Premier in recent weeks.

I hope and I trust that I will be able to hear some of these negotiations as they take place in the next two months. And I would say to you, sir, that I received a very kind letter from the Prime Minister of Ontario this morning saying that he would do his best to see that at least I and other representatives of the Opposition would be able to attend the constitutional conference. But the government sitting opposite here has reduced itself to a search for threats that can be used to force from the government of Canada further fiscal equivalents without additional responsibility.

First, there is the comment that maybe we would tax fuel for Air Canada. You may remember when the tax was imposed last year, we on this side felt that it was too small and it could, in fact, become a source of revenue more than it had at that time been considered.

The other threat, the one that I felt was quite unconscionable, was that the administration, the Premier of Ontario, was prepared to opt out of constitutional negotiations unless, in fact, fiscal matters were settled more to his liking. I do not believe that the constitution of our country should come up for that sort of negotiation. I believe that Ontario has taken the lead in years gone by—and it was just a year ago now that the Confederation of Tomorrow Conference was being held—and surely it is a very crass and unacceptable approach to fiscal negotiations that either the Premier or his white-lipped and trembling friend, the Treasurer, who has just joined us, would stoop to the level of trying to extract from the government of Canada any sort of an agreement on that basis. Surely it is very difficult for us on this side to support the government if they are going to take that sort of a stand; it is simply intolerable, their position has been unnecessarily rigid and they have been unable to accept the responsibility which is surely theirs.

I do not want to take time on this occasion to list for you, sir, the areas where cost-cutting should really be a factor. We believe that the Centennial museum is one of those areas which has grown through the unnecessarily enthusiastic approach of the Minister of Education and the Minister of Tourism (Mr. Auld). It has gestated well beyond the Centennial year into 1969 and 1970, and swelled well beyond its original concept in price to something in excess of $30 million.

In an effort to economize last year the Treasurer announced with fanfare a centralized purchasing agency and this was rigorously criticized by the Financial Post a few weeks ago in which they went so far as to say the centralized purchaser was nothing but a straw man because he was not being supported by either the Treasurer or the other departments of government. These are areas of concern that do not fit in with the statement made by the Treasurer—at least we assume it was written by the Treasurer—when he promised renewed emphasis on efficiency and economy in every branch and agency of the Ontario government. After 25 years of Tory government, we would expect that to be a part of his everyday responsibility and nothing that he is going to take on just as a special occasion.

Mr. Speaker, there are areas in which surely the government must take specific action and I would like, sir, to list for you those areas which we as Liberals would support. First, there must be a full external assessment of provincial spending programmes to eliminate waste. Where practical, direct cost-cutting programmes can be inaugurated. We will support them, but the elimination of waste is something that we do not feel this government has undertaken in any practical and forthright way. We would say, Mr. Speaker, that the example of an external examination can be found in the records of your own administration.

It was in 1956 that the former Premier, Leslie Frost, began to be fearful of the direction in which the open-ended programmes that he and his predecessors had begun and which have been added to by the present administration were taking the province of Ontario. Those were buoyant times, and being the far-sighted gentleman that he was on occasion, he went down into the financial community of Toronto and there found a person who in his view and the view of the former Provincial Treasurer, the member for Haldimand-Norfolk (Mr. Allan), was best equipped to survey objectively the business of government and give the recommendations which might make it operate more efficiently. Downtown he found Walter Gordon who was then a non-political activist, who had the credentials that would permit such a survey and review.

The Gordon report still stands on the desk in my office and it is interesting to read excerpts from it where he indicates ways in which the efficiency of government could be improved. I know that book sat on the shelves of the government opposite for many years without the implementation of any significant part of these recommendations. But the time has surely come when a similar external review is required. After all, since 1962 we have had a Royal commission on taxation, and the select committee, chaired by the new Minister of Revenue, which reported just a few weeks ago.

Both of these had, as the emphasis to their terms of reference, means of increasing the tax income of the province. There was no survey of the programmes or the efficiency of government and we on this side are tired of hearing the Ministers one by one say, "Trust us, we will do the best that can be done."

I believe that the Treasurer should welcome this external survey and assessment, not only of our programmes but of the business of government. I believe it is in this area that cuts can be made, that efficiencies can be achieved which the entrenched government opposite is unwilling to undertake. After all, the programmes that would have to be cut are their own pet projects. The means of doing business are those which have evolved down through the years and they cannot remember a time when they were done any other way. But after 25 years of Tory patronage they are deeply entrenched in each community with those people who are their supporters and who do not want any change in the business of government. That is why an external assessment must be made and why the only real solution will be the defeat of this government and its replacement by a Liberal one.

Now, if the first point is a full external assessment of provincial spending programmes, the second one must be a reversal of the present rejection of an estimates committee of the Legislature. Such a committee is absolutely necessary to allow the people's elected representatives a more realistic opportunity to examine the 1969-1970 Budget. It is incredible to me that we are not supported in this project by the other Opposition party. The leader of the NDP, seeing hidden difficulties, looks into the future and is afraid that an estimates committee might be tied into a package deal with a reduction of the rights of the members of this House.

I can assure you, sir, that we in Opposition will never countenance a reduction of the free right to debate these matters in the Legislature. We put forward the estimates committee as a sincere alternative, a proposal, which would give us an opportunity to question those people who advise the Ministers in just the way that the leader of the NDP described it himself, with this particular amendment to the committee motion which was before the House two or three days ago. This is the sort of approach that surely the Opposition should undertake together. There is no room for a narrow partisan approach which has been characteristic of the NDP approach in these matters in the past.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, you will recall that our amendment last year undertook to set up a committee to examine the rules of the House, and the supporters of the NDP leader have been most vocal, and very able, in indicating that an examination of these rules was necessary, but under those circumstances they did not support us again. Believe me, sir, I do not associate myself with the kind of confrontation politics that the NDP are advocating. Those politics are simply grandstand politics. If you think of what they have done in the last few days; of the 20 seats empty during the question period of the House last Thursday, when they went down to walk on the picket line of Proctor-Silex.

Now I would say to you sir, that this is a matter of some concern, because this particular strike has been on since July 17. I remember it well. It happened on my birthday. I sat there reading the newspaper over breakfast. The report came through about Proctor-Silex, and it was not until—what date—November 23-24 that the House was greeted by the empty seats on the NDP side, now if that is not grandstanding, what is?

A more responsible approach I would say is the one that was taken by the official Opposition. We sent our representatives down to a union meeting. The member for Scarborough East (Mr. T. Reid) represented the Liberal Party at that meeting. He was in contact with labour leaders. Leaders of the community. He came back with a report that led us as Liberals to support the strikers in this particular negotiation. There is no doubt, Mr. Speaker, that the way it was undertaken by the NDP, is an indication of the scare that was thrown into that leader, by the threat to his leadership, by the hon. member for Riverdale (Mr. J. Renwick).

When this confrontation, Mr. Speaker, first came to light I thought at once that it was a put-up job. The NDP was sitting around the back room saying "what are we going to do to make our annual meeting go".

"We are going to have it in a roller rink somewhere up in Kitchener, and have a little excitement."

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Brantford has a point of order.

Mr. M. Makarchuk (Brantford): The leader of the Opposition is, Mr. Speaker, misleading the House. The representative from the Liberal Party was not at that meeting.

Mr. Nixon: Now Mr. Speaker, I want to make it clear that the representative of the Liberal Party went down to the strike situation, questioned those on the union side who had their information put before us, and he has reported that to the caucus. We have taken a stand on that particular matter, it is a caucus and a public stand, Mr. Speaker, in which we support the strikers in their fight to get a fair deal from Proctor-Silex—

Since the deputy leader of the NDP has interjected, I would say that the interesting thing is that I thought his challenge was a put-up job, but somehow went around the bend. He had delusions of grandeur. He thought, maybe this is a real chance to take over the party, because really, his statements during the campaign were most surprising indeed. Some of them have been read into the record already. He accused that the big-wigs of organized labour had been told that they had to support Donald otherwise the party was going to fall on evil days. The hon. leader of the NDP replied to this by saying it was an outright lie. I do not know whether he was responding to the member for Brantford (Mr. Makarchuk), or the member for Riverdale (Mr. J. Renwick), but one of those, and then—

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): And then he called him "Hitler". Yes. The leader called his deputy "Hitler".

Mr. Nixon: I think the significant statement, Mr. Speaker, was that he called him "Messiah". I do not know which he intended to be worse.

Mr. Speaker, I think the significance was up there in the intense excitement and drama of the roller rink in Kitchener. The deputy leader came to the microphone and said the choice was with the delegates, they would take one fork in the road towards a confrontation politics and success at the polls in 1971, because only he had the aura of victory, or they could take the other fork which led to the dissolution of the party, and its foundering on the rocks of—what was the word—ordinariness I think—and this was the choice that the NDP took. They took the fork that went with Donald MacDonald. The man who cannot win. And that is why I say, Mr. Speaker, that the leader of the NDP was frightened out of his sense of responsibility. He is prepared to leave those seats vacant, and I can say to you sir, that members of the Liberal Party will occupy not only those, but many others when we form the government in 1971—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Nixon: So to get back to point number two, Mr. Speaker, it is incredible that the NDP would not support the official Opposition in our proper request, that we have a committee on estimates, and I would say that the Premier himself must surely be considering this alternative.

Third: There must be an assumption of full provincial responsibility for the present federal-provincial programmes of hospitalization, welfare and health which would be balanced by a further 17 per cent tax abatement from Ottawa together with safeguards against increasing costs. The Premier himself has said he wants to control Ontario's priorities, putting these responsibilities within our jurisdiction would allow Ontario to control its expansion effectively over a wide spectrum of programmes. Now this too is an offer that was made two years ago, and if I read the quotes from the Treasurer's speech correctly, surely we must be considering this very carefully.

I feel that the Minister of Finance has gone out of his way to re-assure provincial jurisdiction. Not only will there be a transference of the 17 per cent but there will be an accompanying flexibility in the grant which will see to it that the province cannot be out of pocket over a reasonable period of time, probably five years, in assuming the full control of this programme. The only thing that occurs to me that may be a bit of Yankee trading on one side or the other, is that our medical costs are going to grow tremendously as we see fair rates of pay extended to those people working in the medical field. I am not at this time talking particularly about the medical doctors who seem to still be able to unilaterally impose their decisions on the Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond), and this government. I am talking about those people working in Ontario Hospitals and hospital facilities across the province, whose salary levels, I submit, are far below what they will have to be within three to five years.

It is this area, where the costs of this particular programme are to grow tremendously and I believe they must grow tremendously. We cannot continue to have trained people working for an unfair salary, unfair wage in this province.

We have to realize there is a further 17 per cent transference with accompanying responsibilities in these matters to the 28 per cent transference that we already have. Then we will be approaching one half of the—that is, we will be approaching 50 per cent in our share of the income tax abatement from the federal level.

Fourth, there must be an effective workable centralized purchasing policy for the entire Ontario government operation with forced co-operation from all departments. I do not want to say much more about that, we debated it for three years. All I can say is that the Treasurer's implementation of this programme so far has been a sham, that the utilization of centralized purchasing has been a waste of his time in the way he has approached this. It simply has to be imposed on his colleagues in the Cabinet so that they will tear apart their purchasing empires and we can accomplish the savings that have been predicted by all who have studied the matter.

Fifth: There must be negotiations with Ottawa to improve our situation particularly in sharing the recently announced two per cent social development tax. I have already indicated that my calculation would indicate that this would give an additional $40 million. The Treasurer might comment on that himself—$40 million—if it were put on as an ordinary part of the income tax scale and abated at the 28 per cent level. I think that the abatement is a bit bigger than 28 per cent since the change is in Manitoba and Quebec.

Sixth: Ontario should negotiate the right to influence the broadening of the federal income tax base. The establishment of a more progressive system as outlined in the Carter report is just as much Ontario's responsibility as it is that of the federal government and this must be made abundantly clear to Ottawa.

I want to say a word about that. The rigidities in the negotiations exist on both sides. The government of the province finds itself completely hamstrung by the growth of its programmes and the lack of growth, of comparable growth, in our income.

But the rigidity that we take in the provincial government—in saying—that the only answer is for a larger abatement is inadmissible, it is inadmissible!

On the other hand, the rigidity in Ottawa, which says that 28 per cent is the end of the line, and that the government in Ottawa must retain 100 per cent control of the tax base, is equally too rigid.

If we are going to have access in the near future to at least 50 per cent of the income taxes collected in this province, then I believe this must carry with it a similar responsibility, and in fact a right, to negotiate what that tax base would be. We have the right now to impose any tax base we choose, but I would agree with those who say that Ontario cannot stand a second level of income taxation. We do not want the bureaucracy that this would entail. We can work out, on a co-operative basis surely, the sort of approach which would put a common tax base for the collection of these income taxes from our province as our share in the abatement grows along the lines that I have suggested.

Seventh: Regardless of the success attending the base-sharing dialogue, Ontario must immediately accept the $160 million federal rebate available for Medicare.

I do not think there is any doubt that those people who accuse the Minister of Finance in Ottawa of levying a Medicare premium tax are very close to the truth, that the two per cent surtax is designed to cover the expected federal responsibilities for the payment of half of the cost of federal medical insurance.

Now this money is being taxed from Ontario and we have heard the objection stated by the government opposite for many years. It is not sufficient to say that it is the law of the land, although I would say that it should soon be accepted by those who have the responsibility in Ontario that in fact there will be no changes to this, and that before July 1 next year, it is incumbent on us to accept our share of this programme and see that Medicare becomes a reality in the province of Ontario.

The statement by the Prime Minister of Canada some weeks ago, that five years from now there would be a renegotiation of the financing of this plan, deeply shocked and surprised the Treasurer who sits opposite. Whether or not he is unaware of the wording in the bill that calls for a five-year reassessment I do not know, but I am convinced, sir, that the very purpose of this reassessment is so that as these programmes, such as Medicare, become an established and accepted fact, that it is possible for the government of Canada, with the abatement of the equivalent points of the tax system, to move out of shared responsibility and on to new areas which are needed for the unification of Canada and the provision of equality of opportunity.

Actually what this will do, Mr. Speaker, is once again leave us with the priorities in our own hands which we can assess as we see fit. The big problem is one that is expressed so frequently from the other side, and that is that federal initiative in fact, removes from the province of Ontario and any other provinces the right to opt out of these programmes. I would say we do not have the right to opt out of Medicare. We must get into it. The fiscal requirements are there. This is not the reason I believe we should, but it is a fact that faces the Treasurer and there is no doubt in my mind that Ontario will be a part of federal Medicare with the $160 million that this would entail this year, before the end of the fiscal year. I sincerely hope that this is a part of our programme. The government, by continuing to reject Medicare, is neglecting possible income tax sources which already exist, because it would rather forego them, apparently, than appear to lose face to the federal government. But it has a more urgent obligation and that is to the people of our province. At the same time the government cannot face the fact that the dream is over, and in our own words the nightmare has begun. It cannot bring itself to slice into its entrenched costs. It cannot accept the idea of a true day of fiscal reckoning. Now I think back to a speech made on the Budget of 1962 by the former member for Bruce, Ross Whicher, now member of Parliament, in which he extrapolated the spending programmes for the then Treasurer, the member for Haldimand-Norfolk. There were a lot of catcalls on that day as well, when it was indicated that the Budget critic for the official Opposition had been exaggerating the position. And yet, if you were to look up the speech, you would find his predictions on the cost of education, our highways programmes, the programmes for economic development of the province, and some programmes that were not even thought of at that time, have far exceeded even Mr. Whicher's pessimistic predictions. We find ourselves in a fiscal nightmare of the government's own making.

It is no longer acceptable that the blame be put on another jurisdiction. The responsibility rests here, and we in this House must take the steps to correct it. We cannot possibly go through this next session without the far-reaching changes that the Treasurer himself has said will be needed unless some great uncle in another jurisdiction is prepared to rebate an extra $300 million. It does not appear that this money is going to be forthcoming. The responsibility is here. The decision is here. We in Ontario must set our own House in order.

Mr. Speaker, a few moments ago we were discussing the matter of the strike in Picton. Among the many reports received by the government and the members of the Legislature over the past few months, the Rand report might have been the most valuable. We believe that labour legislation in Ontario has been inadequate and backward. The Tilco Plastics strike, which was the event that triggered the naming of the Royal commission and the retention by the government of the ex-parte injunction in labour disputes, followed more recently by the incredible situation at Picton and the strike at the Peterborough Examiner, continue to point up the inadequate and archaic approach that government policy has taken in Ontario for 25 years.

Because of this, we look forward to Mr. Rand's report eagerly. No doubt some of his recommendations may find application, but the general and specific approach of Mr. Rand is completely unacceptable in Ontario. This is an age of dwindling freedoms; yet the report of this distinguished jurist has a strange ring of authoritarianism about it.

What I want to do today is underline that Mr. Justice Rand's preoccupation with imposing settlements upon union and management is as much at variance with Liberal philosophy as it is in practice, unworkable.

In our view, settlements cannot be imposed or they will not endure. They must be negotiated by the parties concerned with as little outside interference as possible and then only in those rare conditions of last resort when the total public interest becomes paramount.

The tribunal, the heart of the recommendations of the report, is a wrong and, I would say, illiberal concept. It epitomizes the legalistic that it is possible and desirable to impose settlements. To implement this recommendation would be an undesirable delegation of the powers which must be retained by this Legislature. Furthermore, it would bring the law into widespread disrespect.

Our view is that Justice Rand has underrated the quality and effectiveness of the Ontario Labour Relations Board, whose approach has been to try to create an atmosphere in which agreement might most easily be reached. Its tripartite nature makes its decisions more palatable and generally acceptable than those of a Rand tribunal could ever be.

The Ontario Labour Relations Board should remain the main regulating body in the labour field. The board, however, can be upgraded with more modern procedures and a new approach to expressing the public interest in these matters. There will always be emergency situations from time to time, that require the authority of this Legislature to settle in the public interest. This power must be guarded carefully and used only as a last resort when the public welfare obviously must be considered ahead of normal labour-management affairs. Strikes are, of course, seriously expensive to the public and to all concerned, but that is part of the price we pay for living in a free society, and the alternative would be much worse. On page 7 of the report, Mr. Justice Rand ends his summary by stating:

That is the background against which labour relations of today must be viewed and procedures adopted for their adjustment to societies of order.

Mr. Speaker, as Liberals, we have two higher priorities than that of order. These are respectively freedom and justice. Freedom must come first because, without it, justice becomes a mockery, and while order is a desirable attribute of a smoothly functioning society, it must always be subservient to freedom and justice which transcends order on the scale of human values. We have all too often seen that one can have perfect order in the total absence of humanity. When freedom exists, however, humanity is always present, regardless of the material conditions.

This, then, in the most general terms, is the tone of our objection to the Rand report. I do not like to say that we opt for the status quo because that is not so. We believe that the labour relations board can be improved and there is never a session goes by but specific recommendations, associated with procedures of the labour relations board and their improvement, are put before the House and the Minister of Labour by our critic on this side and by those knowledgeable in these matters. The people opposite are always quick to say that I am an apologist for the government of Canada, and yet I believe that the federal Minister of Labour, Mr. Mackasey, has been very useful to the situation across Canada in his statements when he says that free negotiations between labour and management must continue to be the essence of these matters as we approach the end of this particular century with the changes that are a part of it.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want now to move to another matter of provincial concern and bring to your attention that a few days ago we had read by the Clerk a petition from the city of Ottawa asking for permissive legislation pertaining to rent control. Even before the signing of the petitions, however, indications of crisis were clearly evident to all who chose to see. Rent increases triggered by the bumbling way in which the basic shelter exemption was accepted as an election gambit and has since been paid out, have been widespread and unreasonable.

They have exposed avarice, particularly in Toronto, where very few of the 40 per cent of the residents who are tenants have escaped chilling and inflationary hikes in their accommodation costs. Rent increases have caused people to look for cheaper accommodation rather than their former goal of moving out of the high rise apartments and finding a home for themselves and their families. The traditional dream has gone by the board. It has passed out of reach of a majority of urban population because of the fantastic price increases of lots and houses alike. With vacancy rates at less than 2 per cent for all types of rental accommodation in our major cities, there is no longer a free market in housing. This is the extent of the crisis today.

The government has no plans to solve this problem, that are effective. The Malvern site has laid idle for years and is now progressing at a snail's pace towards development. I can well remember the first announcement in 1954, following at almost indecent intervals—I believe the fifth or sixth by the present Minister who is responsible for housing. The decision to assemble land in the Waterloo area and the manner of its announcement betrayed a lack of overall planning that bodes ill for the success of this project also.

I want to stop at that point in my written comment and just say that it does seem strange that funds which are in such short supply at the present time, would have been funnelled into the programme at Waterloo. It is strange as well that these funds, paid 75 per cent at the federal level, have been put into a kind of land bank, the future of which is very much in doubt. The purchase of the land was entered into without any reference to local planning authorities and it has all the earmarks of those strange decisions that are at times entered into by the government when they have to get some of their friends off the hook. It appears to me that this large area of land in the Waterloo area is going to lie idle for many years until, I suppose, there is some specific need, or need for a press release on the part of the Minister. It is a strange matter, indeed, that when housing and serviced lots—more public housing in the big areas particularly is so desperately needed—the Minister would choose this as one of his top priorities in the expenditure of these public funds.

The selling of HOME lots at a profit rather than at current cost after servicing, betrays a real road block to this programme which is that the maintenance of a profitable private market in real estate is considered more important than the ready provision of homes. The government has neglected municipal tax reform and it is this more than any other factor that has distorted the orderly development of the residential communities in our municipalities. The Smith committee began its work in 1962, but it is now evident that 1968 will pass before any action is taken on the report or the select committee's work on tax reform.

No doubt the Minister himself, like most of us in the House, has talked to those municipal officials in urban areas and in rural areas who have indicated that the cost of education is the reason that makes most of them cut their regulations in such a way that the advancement of urban development has been curtailed. It is this area of tax reform that is pressing more than any other.

We have also had broad hints that the Treasurer's lack of success in Ottawa will mean that he will not relieve the municipalities of the cost of education even to the 60 per cent level recommended by Smith. The uncontrolled costs of education, costs which have hitherto been treated as one lump sum instead of 30 or 40 different priorities, have been loaded on to the municipalities and on to the regressive property tax structure paralyzing orderly growth and development and creating such ridiculous minimum assessment requirements for homes as the $30 thousand minimum now applying in Scarborough and the insistence on two-car garages even when people live directly on the GO line. This is what happens when the wrong kind of tax source is burdened with the costs of education.

Finally it is clear to all that the government has been totally remiss in its encouragement of public housing where this is needed. This inadequacy of housing for those who need it most reflects once more the failure of this government to get its priorities in order. Ontario citizens in 1968 do not have access to a freely operating housing market subject to the checks and balances of supply and demand. Today Ontario has a totally artificial market in which the government by its negligence and its irresponsibilities in the matter of priorities, has already interfered ineffectually. The effect of that existing interference by the provincial government has been to distort the market completely. The supply of homes has been cut off because it has proved uneconomic to build in a rational manner.

The demand has soared, particularly in certain areas, because the urban magnet has changed the population distribution and created unreasonable pressures on demand. It is clear that, while many rural areas are not experiencing a serious housing problem, the crisis is of nightmare proportions in Toronto, in Ottawa which has brought forward a petition for a permissive rent control statute, in Hamilton and many other densely populated centres across the province.

In these circumstances, we recognize that emergency action is now necessary to meet the extraordinary situation that has arisen through the negligence of this government; through its not providing services to relieve existing land prices; through not providing sufficient commuter rapid transit to take the pressure away from the urban car; through not balancing industrial and residential assessment and through causing rental inflation through the basic shelter exemption method.

Our answer to the problem is to approach the immediate crisis on a localized basis. We believe the remedy lies with the municipalities themselves and that this Legislature can effect short-term enabling legislation to ease the present problem. We believe that if all the factors distorting the market are dealt with as they should be, then the immediate urgency may have diminished within a three-year period. We therefore propose permissive and localized rent control legislation with a two-year life span, subject to renewal only if the government has failed to come up with the answers that will restore the market to its former free state.

In these circumstances, any move by this government to extend a life of such legislation, will be a clear admission of its failure to deal with the situation on a longer range basis in the interim. As Liberals, we look forward to the day when the government-initiated circumstances in which a rent control measure has become necessary will be counteracted. We find this proposal unpalatable and we have not entered into it lightly, but only after the most careful caucus deliberation. We see it as a stop-gap measure and not as a Liberal idea but to many of us it is the only answer to the situation that we now find. The step must be taken now because there is no alternative after what the government has failed to do. Our aim, as always, is for a free market in shelter and the removal of all the factors that prevent such a market from operating for the benefit of all.

We therefore propose to set specifically: number one, rent control legislation as a stop-gap to meet the crisis in certain areas. The measures must be permissive, the decision to seek powers coming from the affected municipalities themselves. The legislation will feature one-year renewal of its local application and renewal of the measure in each locality will be tied to vacancy rate and rent index limits.

Second, a tenant's bill of rights. This measure is detailed on the order paper already in the name of the deputy leader of the Liberal Party, the hon. member for Downsview. It would include provision for a standard form of lease. It would limit advanced rent payments to two months ahead. It would outlaw security deposits against damage completely. It would make illegal those clauses in contracts by which a tenant waives any or all of his legal rights and to that I might add, the right to a complete contract prior to signature. Clauses typed in after the signing would be invalid. It would enact and enforce safety regulations and health laws to protect tenants. The day of erratic and uninspected elevators and other devices being put into service would end. The day of choked refuse disposal chutes polluting the air with odour and disease would be brought to a conclusion by a forceful clause in the new Act.

It would outlaw exclusive agreements between the landlord and suppliers of goods and services, as being an infringement of a tenant's basic right to free access. It would forbid a landlord to levy extra charges on tenants unless these have been specifically contracted for, to begin with, and it would establish a tenants' appeal board to hear complaints against the injustices that even then would remain in the unreal and unconscionable circumstances of the distorted shelter market existing in our cities today.

Number three, Liberals see a tenants' bill of rights as the transition from the immediate and emergency rent control phase to a more logical and effective long-term solution to the housing problem. The cornerstone of this approach must be municipal tax reform, as I have already said. We are still convinced that the municipalities must be relieved of their education cost burden to the extent of 80 per cent of the local level. Only in this way will balance, growth and development, and a proper provision for needed services, emerge. Alongside this must come a source of second mortgage money from the province to supplement NHA first mortgages. Even at present high prices, many people are ready to become home owners and are prepared and able to carry the monthly payments. It is the initial deposit, enormous because of the lack of an adequate second mortgage, that keeps many enterprising and would-be home owners out of the rental market or, I should say, on the rental market.

Every tenant who becomes a home owner takes some pressure off the overheated rental market and it helps bring supply and demand into line. We would see to it that otherwise good risks were not prevented from becoming home owners merely by not being able to accumulate the $4,000 or $5,000 now needed to move into a house of their own. This would be a programme involving investment in the people of our province. It is a programme that has been needed for many years.

Number five, there must be an overall plan for the land use and economic development of Ontario. Present policy loses its effectiveness when a tenant is placed in the priorities that such a plan must dictate for the selection of urban growth points, the preservation of our best agricultural resources and the expansion of recreation facilities all correlated by rapid transit highways and services.

And lastly, in a programme to meet the housing difficulties on a long range basis, we believe that the Ontario Water Resources Commission is ready for far reaching reform. This would be necessary in order to create one of the effective means of implementing the overall provincial plan that I have been urging on the administration.

Mr. Speaker, I do not want to leave the recommendation for an overall plan without one or two further remarks. We have been treated by the Minister of Trade and Development for some years to the expectation that the economic regions of the province would have such a detailed plan of their own areas: their prospects, economic and otherwise available for a general provincial plan. He has had this responsibility taken from him and it now resides in The Department of the Treasury. Now we are still awaiting at least some glimmer of the regional development plan that could, in fact, be upgraded so that it would be a plan for the province.

I live in a rural area of the province and I know that the responsibilities that local governments, reeves and mayors take upon themselves in order to carry out the planning requirements placed on their shoulders by The Department of Municipal Affairs which are very heavy and politically onerous. When decisions are made to restrict the free whole rights of any land owner, that land owner turns sometimes rather vehemently on those elected officials or those elected people who are prepared to tamper with these rights in the interest of the greater good of the community.

This is what has been happening in Ontario for some years and there are still many areas which have not yet acceded to the pressure placed upon them by The Department of Municipal Affairs to bring about such a plan. In the interim, the province of Ontario has gone scot free in accepting its share of these tough political decisions. There has been no approach towards setting some delineations to the large and growing metropolitan areas, to stop them staining out over the rural areas of the province without any plan or modern consideration. A good case in point is the decision made by Ontario Hydro to build one of the largest thermal plants in the world on the shores of Lake Erie and right beside this enormous centre of power, the Steel Company of Canada has not optioned, but bought, 7,000 acres for a new industrial development. The province has had little or no effect on the general plan of the greater community around that particular centre which must obviously in the next 20 years, become a new city in the province.

The two counties involved, Haldimand and Norfolk have embarked on joint planning responsibilities. But this is not enough. There are many towns outside those counties themselves which expect to share in the expansion. They expect to have new industrial and urban subdivisions but there has been no plan by the economic council of the area nor by the government of Ontario to assist them in this matter.

The time has come surely, when the decisions must be made for the major growing areas of the province, at least on the general areas for growth where the new transit lines will be constructed and just what the meaning will be for our citizens of the next 20 years. It is not enough for any Minister of the Crown to turn to what has been done in the past. I think this last spring we were treated with much fanfare to the report of the MTARTS study which after I believe four years and $2 million presented four alternatives of what the community around Toronto might be in the future.

They were presented to the municipal officials as four alternatives, none of them with a price tag, just the expectation that any one of them would be terribly expensive. But surely these particular suggestions and alternatives have to be considered by the government of Ontario before they are considered by any individual municipality or growing economic area.

It is the decision of this administration to improve the quality of life—a phrase that the Premier uses more and more frequently—in the years that remain in this century. It is only through the implementation of a plan of this type that we can, in fact, look for any effective means of improvement of this quality of life that all of us are concerned with.

Now I stated as the last point in the general development of solving the housing difficulty, a new approach to the responsibilities of the Ontario Water Resources Commission. I want to deal with that in some detail.

The water resources commission has two major functions that are not always compatible. The first, as the major water pollution control agency, gives it great and growing powers to disallow development in communities with inadequate facilities and, in fact, to close industry and stop development.

An example of this last is the closing of the Canada Glue plant in Brantford with the consequent laying off of 75 men; most of them over the age of 50, making readjustment particularly difficult. Now we support antipollution regulations with teeth in them, but in this case if the OWRC had had a subsidized loan fund, so that $250,000—that is all, $250,000—had been available to the company, the necessary antipollution measures could have been implemented and the industry retained.

A word of further explanation: This is a fairly old company, that dumps its refuse into the Grand River, and the refuse from an operation of this type is a particularly disagreeable source of pollution. There have been many complaints from the citizens locally and the OWRC finally—after several warnings—took the action—and it was a proper action under their present terms of reference—to close down the plant since the pollution was not abated and the company was not prepared to undertake this abatement.

I think it is interesting to note that the company had been bought out—some years ago—by American interests, and the head office indicated that they were quite prepared to do the manufacturing operations in other localities and ship the finished product into Ontario. This of course brings forward many arguments about decisions made outside of our own boundaries that affect us so greatly and on a day-to-day basis.

But the difficult part is this, that for $250,000, we are told, that the antipollution measures could have been effected. Yet the Ontario Water Resources Commission does not have access to such a fund to accomplish this particular procedure in such a way that the company could be forced to do that rather than close down under these circumstances.

I believe it is the height of folly to hand out grants by one department of $500,000 under the equalization of industrial opportunity programmes to bolster employment with one hand, while a short-sighted approach to OWRC negates the first effort.

All of the people in any community benefit from antipollution regulations, so that justification for such loans is apparent.

The second major responsibility of OWRC is to provide the water and sewage facilities for municipalities where the commission itself decides they are needed. A case in point, and I would like to dwell on it for a moment, is that of St. Thomas where the commission decided in 1966 that the city should accept water from a commission pipeline for 50 cents per thousand gallons, even though St. Thomas had an adequate system delivering water at 10 cents per thousand gallons with proved resources to cope for expansion into the foreseeable future.

The OWRC decision was prompted by their commitment to provide pipeline water to the new Ford plant near St. Thomas and their effort to spread the cost over the nearest population centre. Now in order to force the city to accept an obviously bad deal the water resources commission stopped approving subdivision plans in St. Thomas in March 1967. This freeze on development was based on the commission's statement that the city was grossly polluting nearby Kettle Creek.

St. Thomas has been negotiating since that time with the commission and is approaching a settlement in which the freeze on development is like a gun to its head. This freeze was lifted in October 1968—about a month ago—by a statement by the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin (Mr. Root), the vice-chairman of the commission, even though no significant change had taken place with the situation involving Kettle Creek.

This story has significance across Ontario, because sooner or later all our municipalities must come under the patronizing direction of OWRC. There is no doubt that a water grid and joint sewage facilities for large areas of southern Ontario must be undertaken in the next 20 years. This present policy of sticking the users for the full cost results in impossible burdens, and we must look for fair solutions.

Surely, it is grossly unfair for a government agency to turn on a nearby municipality which has properly looked after its own requirements and is even prepared to share those requirements with a reasonable surrounding territory and population. It is unfair that the commission should turn on them to increase their water cost by factors of three, sometimes five times, in order to implement the decisions taken by the commission with an entirely different motivation.

It is interesting to note comparable pipeline offers in other centres. Compared with St. Thomas, London—which is not too far away—has a pipeline, not from Lake Erie, but from Lake Huron with its terminus at Arva, near London. Before the pipeline installation, the London water price was eight cents per thousand gallons. They calculated that if they were to build the pipeline themselves they could supply their own water from Lake Huron for something like 15 cents per thousand, but were persuaded by the Ontario government that, in fact, the government should build the pipeline and sell them the water. So as a result, the deal was that the price would be very similar, very similar to that which it would have been if London had provided their own pipeline. But there was a clause, of course, associated with escalating costs, and London gets its water—not for 15 cents per thousand but 17.6 cents per thousand, delivered at Arva.

So I believe that this reflects the influence that the London family compact, all of it, can have on government deals.

I will be interested, Mr. Speaker, to hear the justification of the Premier or even the vice-chairman of the OWRC, who is not here today, in comparing these deals.

The third one, and I want to bring it to your attention, was discussed in the Legislature a few days ago. It involves the city of Sarnia, represented by my hon. friend and supporter. I understand that the water system in Sarnia now produces high quality water for the citizens of that city on a flat rate of $24 per year. This has been calculated, with all things being considered, to be about 12 cents per thousand gallons—in the same ambit as that which was provided by St. Thomas and London and other centres that I will talk about in a moment. Sarnia realized that they had to undertake expansion of this plant. Having a very effective local administration over a number of years they were able to contemplate a $4 million expansion without going to the OWRC for any significant assistance except perhaps for some engineering advice and they then believed that they could provide high quality water into the foreseeable future for their own citizens at $48 per year or about 20 to 24 cents per thousand. This had an expansion that was large enough to permit them to offer treated water to the surrounding municipalities within reason. It was at this stage that the Ontario water resources commission intruded and it is their plan to enlarge the Sarnia facilities by that same $4 million that Sarnia itself was prepared to undertake but not to provide water for citizens of Sarnia at $48 a year but at $72.96 per year. Now, can you blame the citizens of Sarnia for objecting to the role in which they are being placed by a commission of this government, a role which gives to them the responsibility for paying for the needed expansion of these facilities into a significant and large area of western Ontario?

I come now to the city of Brantford where there has been as yet no direct confrontation with OWRC but simply the proposition stated that Brantford can have access to water from Lake Erie for 25 cents per thousand gallons even though they now distribute water at a base rate of 10 cents per thousand, two and a half times increase in price. It has been proposed by the water commission that this pipeline come up the Grand Valley and allow those cities, which now use the Grand River as their primary source of municipal water supply, to cut into the pipeline and get the water from Lake Erie rather than directly from the river. The difference in quality is not negligible but I would say insignificant. In any case the water that is provided by Brantford and other municipalities is of a high enough quality and with the projections that they will continue to be of effective quality and supply.

The last case in point is of the town of Brampton, I believe they call it the Peel-Brampton pipeline, which reached an agreement in March of 1968 for pipeline water at 21.5 cents per thousand gallons after an original price of 31 cents per thousand for the first month and a half's supply each year. These pipeline plans can and must be one of the most important arms for the implementation of a provincial plan. There is no doubt if the decision is taken by the government of Ontario that certain areas, some of them now towns in existence, and some of them now just open country, will be centres for new municipal growth. The pipelines which would provide water to those centres would, in fact, command the growth at that point and be extremely important in reducing the cost of serviced lots in those areas. I believe that the pipelines cannot be totally charged against the users in a small area if we are going to be fair in the financing of such a provincial plan. Decisions to provide water and sewage facilities will designate growth points around present urban centres and reduce cost of serviced land to have real impact on the cost and availability of housing. The programme must be financed on a broad provincial basis if it is going to work.

With these things in mind, Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw to your attention six specific points that I believe should form a basis for new terms of reference for the water resources commission:

1. Specific long-range plans for a water pipeline grid over a large area of Ontario must be drawn up and made public, to accompany a plan for our province.

2. This overall plan, with accompanying sewage disposal facilities, where applicable, should have a tentative time schedule associated with it.

3. The programme must be the operative part of a general provincial plan so that the pipeline and sewage treatment locations will be the deciding factors in growth points across the province and greatly reduce costs for serviced land.

4. The costs in the early part of the servicing programme are too high to charge directly back to the relatively small number of users. OWRC must have access to, and use, of the credit of the province like Ontario Hydro does to plan and install these facilities on their own debentures. The financing must be accepted partially as a direct government charge so that the needed facilities can be installed in time to allow many communities now caught between the Ontario municipal board's fears for their solvency and the OWRC demand for services before subdivision approval, to find a way out of the bureaucratic dilemma.

5. OWRC must be specifically forbidden to use ancillary powers such as holding up subdivision approvals as a club to force agreement from municipalities to accede to their proposals until the new service policy is in operation.

6. Subsidized loans to industries for anti-pollution installations must be a part of a fair and effective anti-pollution programme.

Mr. Speaker, I have some comments to make in addition on two other areas that were mentioned in the Speech from the Throne but since it is my understanding that you wish now to proceed to a discussion of a private member's resolution, with your permission I will move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. Nixon moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

NOTICE OF MOTION

Clerk of the House: Notice of motion No. 15 by Mr. Snow.

RESOLUTION: That all government of Ontario buildings in the province should be constructed in accordance with the modular co-ordinated principle.

Mr. J. W. Snow (Halton East): I move, seconded by the member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. J. R. Smith), Resolution No. 15, standing in my name, which has just been read.

Mr. Speaker, in introducing this resolution I am calling for the adoption by the government of Ontario, of the modular dimensional system for the design and construction of buildings which are constructed by the various departments of the government of Ontario, or are subsidized with provincial funds. It is my desire today, to bring to the attention of the government, and of the hon. members of this House, the efficiencies and cost reducing benefits which can be derived from the adoption of this system, and the institution of the BEAM programme which has been developed by The Department of Industry in Ottawa.

Mr. Speaker, the adoption of the modular co-ordinated system of building, together with the implementation of my previous resolution of March 4, earlier this year, calling for a standard building code within the province of Ontario, would provide an excellent base for improvements in construction efficiency, and productivity, in the manufacture, design and use of building equipment, accessories and materials. Moreover, a climate for the development of new technology in construction would be rendered more favourable as a result.

Many of the hon. members here today may ask: what is modular co-ordination? Modular dimensional standardization or modular co-ordination, are synonymous terms given to procedures simplifying the manufacture of building equipment, accessories, materials, and the assembly of these for the construction of buildings.

Such standardization and co-ordination are effective ways of resolving basic difficulties of design and application caused by unrelated dimensions of various building components, that we have today.

The aim is the development of economical systems of buildings in which all materials, components, products and equipment fit rationally and compatibly together simply and easily with a minimum of alteration work required on the job site. Cutting costs of building construction is the target of this programme.

The modular concept has received much study in many countries because of the pressing need for increased productivity and efficiency in building. From the results of these studies, the dimension of four inches or 10 centimetres in the countries using the metric system has emerged as a most satisfactory co-ordinating unit of measurement. The name given to this unit is the standard building module.

The main advantages of module dimensional standardization and co-ordination are as follows:

1. The need for manufacturing and stocking components in more than one standard range of sizes is eliminated, thus inventories are reduced and simplified and inventory costs are reduced.

2. The mass production of building components is greatly facilitated resulting in increased economies of scale of manufacture.

3. Architectural and engineering design is facilitated, mill production time for architectural and engineering drawing is shortened and they are more readily understood. The costly procedures now related to the production and function of shop drawings may be eliminated. Resulting economies in time and cost can enable the design profession to deal with a greater volume of work, thus extending their influence further in the building industry.

4. Estimating and pricing of work is easier and more accurate.

5. Site layout would be simplified.

6. Supervision of construction is more efficient.

7. Workmen understand their assignments better and work is performed with greater ease and despatch.

8. Waste of materials is held to a minimum.

9. Job and site cutting of building materials is reduced entirely in many cases.

10. The orderly and intelligent development of the industrialization of the building processes would be facilitated. The standard building module of four inches was chosen in Canada because of its proximity to that employed in countries using the metric system of measurement of 10 centimetres being equal to 3.937 inches. The two dimensions are sufficiently close to permit the use of working drawings prepared on the four-inch module in the construction of buildings in countries under the metric system and vice versa.

Architects favouring the introduction of the modular system in Canada would like to conform to the 10-centimetre measurement but felt that immediate adoption of the four-inch unit was preferable to awaiting the inauguration of the metric system here and in the United States.

Mr. Speaker, I have referred briefly to the BEAM programme and I would like to explain for a moment the background of this programme. BEAM is made up of the four letters B-E-A-M, meaning building equipment accessories and materials. As industry and government today is more than ever faced with the vital task of increasing its productivity and efficiency and recognizing the vital need for increased efficiency in the industry, contractors, manufacturers and users of building equipment accessories and materials and The Department of Industry have jointly initiated the BEAM programme to assist in achieving this goal. Since its inauguration, considerable progress has been made towards the attainment of the objectives of this programme. The BEAM programme in brief is as follows: In 1967, with the help and cooperation of the construction industry, The Department of Industry introduced this programme to assist in achieving greater productivity and efficiency in the manufacture and use of equipment.

Five objectives are being developed to bring about sufficient advances within the construction industry in Canada. These are as follows:

1. The establishment of a comprehensive construction cataloguing and information system.

2. The adoption of modular dimensional co-ordination of building components.

3. The industrialization of the building process.

4. The adoption of uniform building regulations and standards.

5. The establishment of a design awards programme to improve the design and development of construction materials and processes.

Three advisory committees were appointed, made up of prominent Canadians representing the manufacturing and building industries, architects and engineers and the trade unions, and have held meetings on information systems, modular co-ordination and industrialized building. These committees met on a regular basis and assisted the department in defining the objectives and implementing the programme.

Six conferences were held during 1967, in Halifax, Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, Edmonton and Vancouver with the objectives of acquainting policy makers within the industry with the technology and economic advantages of modular dimensioning. Over 1,200 senior executives of Canada's top manufacturing, contracting, architecture and engineering firms were invited to attend these one-day conferences.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to offer my congratulations to The Department of Industry on the way that they have developed this programme. The objectives of the BEAM programme are of concern to all members of the industry. These, and several specific projects have long been advocated by the Canadian Construction Association and the Canadian Joint Committee on Construction Materials. At no time in our history has the effort to increase productivity and efficiency been of such importance as it is today. I sincerely hope that all concerned will participate in this programme and thereby ensure its success.

Mr. Speaker, I know that many of our Ontario firms of architects and engineers have already adopted the modular system of planning buildings on their own initiative. This, along with the phasing in of the modular programme by the federal Department of Public Works has done a great deal to increase the use of standard modular building products as of this date. I am also aware, Mr. Speaker, that our Ontario Department of Public Works has been investigating the advantages of modular construction and has buildings under construction with the modular system being utilized at this time. My belief is that, if all work of all buildings constructed by the various departments of this government as well as all work and buildings subsidized by the departments were of modular design, then this large volume of construction product added to that portion that is presently using modular co-ordination, would be a sufficiently large percentage of the overall construction volume in Ontario that all the remaining construction volume would be insufficient to maintain the unco-ordinated use of the non-modular components. In a very short time, the modular system would be adopted and used for all construction within our province if not within Canada.

I urge the government to commence the drafting of legislation to be enacted no later than 1970 which will, without infringing upon the rights of manufacturers to use other systems of dimensioning as well, require all buildings constructed by municipal authorities and/or authorities with provincial financial assistance to utilize the concept of modular design and modular co-ordinated materials.

I feel confident, Mr. Speaker, that our government will give every consideration to my suggestions here today. I was very pleased with the response by the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. McKeough) to my previous resolution regarding building codes and know that at this time the committees of knowledgeable gentlemen set up by him are making considerable progress in further investigating the advisability of a standard building code for Ontario and ways and means in which this code may be implemented with the least possible inconvenience to the building industry and to the municipalities of Ontario.

I was also very pleased to learn that, since the presentation of my building code resolution in this House last March, that a similar resolution has been introduced by a member of the Legislature in the province of British Columbia. Earlier this month, I had correspondence with an hon. member of the Legislative Assembly of the province of Quebec, Mr. Art E. Seguin, who is the member for the riding of Robert Baldwin. Mr.

Seguin is interested in bringing forward similar legislation in the province of Quebec.

This, I believe, further indicated the interest not only in Ontario, but in all of Canada in updating our building codes and in streamlining and improving the industry within our country, which is by far the largest employer and the largest contributor of our gross national product.

Mr. Speaker, it has been my pleasure as a member of this House, and one that has been proudly connected with the construction industry for over 20 years, to bring this resolution forward for the consideration of our hon. members.

Mr. R. Haggerty (Welland South): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the resolution of the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Snow), who sponsored a resolution in the last session that the government of Ontario should adopt a national building code. The hon. member presented this House with a most interesting debate of great importance concerning every municipality, property owner and building contractor in Ontario.

Perhaps one would assume that Resolution 15 is a follow-up on the national building code in hope that his fellow colleagues would support and implement a standard building code in this province of Ontario that would apply to all municipalities and their needs. The present Hellyer task force on housing has been presented with many briefs and summations asking the adoption of a national building code.

The resolution under discussion this afternoon deals with the building of all modern structures of our day. Modern architecture often approaches actual engineering in its mechanical completeness, in its designs, the means used for achieving beauty, art dimensional forms, the relationship of spaces, volumes, planes and masses.

My colleague, the member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. MacKenzie), who, I would say, is more knowledgeable in the design and materials required in the building trades than most members of this House, had presented a lively discussion and debate on this same subject to The Department of Public Works on the adoption of modular co ordination in building materials for the government of Ontario to endorse the federal programme known as BEAM in the last session of Parliament.

As members of the provincial House we look upon this building as a masterpiece of architecture of the Victorian Gothic design—the wonderful wood carvings of this Chamber. But how many tradesmen are there in Ontario that can be masters in hand wood-carving today—I think very few. Time is also an important factor since a building is usually comprehended in a succession of experiences. We are living in a world being reshaped by science, industry and speed. Elements are employed in architecture, urgent experimentation directed toward answering the needs of a specific way of life—climate, methods of labour, available materials and economy of means, each of the greater styles of today, by discovery of a new structural method.

In the 20th century new forms of building have been devised with the use of reinforced concrete, the development of light material with reinforced structures, plastics, steel and other metal alloys, and adhesives. One should not forget bricks, and cement blocks for the latter are used in large quantities in construction of our schools and homes in Ontario. Today modern architecture has produced some of the most exciting structures in history, and the search for adequate, new structural and artistic formulas. Most architects prefer a standard dimension that people will recognize, and one in particular is the unit dimension known as the four-inch modular. Why the unit dimension of four? One can summarize by saying it would take the guess-work out of designing of buildings. It would take away many lost man-hours in revision of drawings in the steps of fabrication of the material required.

The market in Ontario for building products consists of many components, all of variation in size. One cannot change the design or dimensions of a building to suit the needs of every manufacturer in Ontario or Canada. Never before has there been a concerted effort by architects, engineers and contractors to get manufacturers to supply building materials with dimensions of the same multiple, the unit-four dimension.

What is needed in Ontario is the adoption of modular co-ordination in building materials. The government of Ontario does not have a planned building programme. They do not in fact know where they are going. This government has not kept pace with the social change, our technology change and a change to uniformity design and materials. Different people have different standards for building materials, such items as bricks, cement blocks, pre-cast cement, molded plastics. This creates many difficulties in the planning and construction of buildings. One example is our schools that are being constructed today. One school board can build a 10-room school for approximately 40 per cent less than the adjoining school board for the same size school. When one looks at Queen's University and their latest construction at Queen's, one can see where it blends in with the old construction. Thus I think we have harmony, and in many cases this is lacking in the present government buildings.

Mr. Speaker, commencing early in 1969 the federal Department of Public Works is going to accept the principle that their buildings are fabricated from modular size components, and I hope that this will give enough incentive to bring order to the chaotic conditions existing. Where is the leadership in Ontario? Surely this government of 25 years in office can provide direction to initiate a programme in Ontario where it costs nothing, but will be in the long run a saving in dollars for the new Minister of Revenue—by the adoption of this resolution, “that all government of Ontario buildings in the province should be constructed in accordance with the modular panel principle.”

It would ensure that the projects are in the realm of reasonableness that would apply to hospitals, schools, colleges and universities by encouraging improvements in the manufacture and assembly of materials. Many of the building projects fall short of the desired qualities. A great deal of the manufacturing process of building components approaches the custom method of fabrication and production as opposed to automatic or semi-automatic production-line basis. It is much easier working with standardized unit dimensions where all fabrication of steel, metal alloys, pre-cast cement and plastics can be jiggled in assembly lines for fabrication in increasing the efficiency of manufacturing. A far greater need is in uniform codes and regulations adopted for building, for safety, heating and plumbing and electrical components.

Mr. Speaker, I concur and endorse the resolution. It has merits, but I go one step more, and adopt the federal programme known as BEAM. It is being endorsed by the federal Department of Public Works. They accepted this programme of necessity for increased efficiency in the building industry, efficiency in more accurate estimates. We in Canada are becoming more mobile, moving from one province to another. Architects, engineers and tradesmen are constructing new buildings everywhere in Canada. It is time now for the province of Ontario, for this government to get on the BEAM programme, to come in loud and clear and to get in step with the rest of Canada, in step with our present and future needs.

Mr. Speaker, I endorse the resolution.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Mr. Speaker, it hardly behooves me at this stage to say again what has already been said twice. We are in favour of progress in the building industry and so I do not expect to take as much time as the other speakers have taken.

But it is an interesting thing that when people talk, as we have talked so much about competition in all fields—and that competition has brought a plethora of standards, sizes, types of building materials and all the rest of it—then, we come to the conclusion that it is just too costly to put up with that kind of competition in the whole building field. Then we start to look for standards; for a way to cut down the costs of this kind of duplication. Inventory, for example, is an expensive business. We used to have, in this province, if my figures are accurate, about 498 different sizes, types, specifications of blocks, building blocks.

Just imagine the expense of maintaining inventory of this kind. The expense of setting up the manufacturing equipment for all these different kinds of building blocks. We began to get some sense and began to move toward co-ordination, modular co-ordination; the kind of co-ordination which makes just plain commonsense in the building industry. So today, we have not 498 different specifications for building blocks, but 12.

This simplifies the problem in a dramatic way, and gives to us a new perspective in the whole building field. Here in the metropolitan area, the school board, I understand, has undertaken to build 31 schools and an office building by the early 70's under this kind of method where the specifications are laid down; where the different types of materials and gadgets that fit into the building are so planned that they fit together and they make one coherent whole. It limits the amount of work that has to be done on the building site. The old craft method of putting together a home or a building there, bringing in all the piles of lumber, the different materials that have to be assembled, is done away with in large measure. The inter-relating systems in this programme which Metro is now undertaking, the Metro school board, means that 75 per cent of the total building package is brought in and assembled in this way. The finishing has to be done by the crafts but 75 per cent of this can be done through modular co-ordination.

I watched in some of the social democratic countries in Europe where this kind of process is going on. Great apartment blocks and great office blocks going up with the cranes simply fitting into place these articles, these parts of a building built to this kind of specification.

So we understand and we support this kind of modular co-ordination which is now becoming widespread. But we think this. Not only should we be using it but we should have the kind of legislation which makes it easier. Perhaps revising the national building code, as I suggested last year, will help in this whole field. Certainly, standards set by this government for its own building will be of great assistance. As soon as we begin to tie in the public building with the private sector, and all together, start to move with the modular co-ordination plan, then I am certain that the cut in building costs, the cut in the time factor, will be dramatic.

I have the figures here which the authorities in this field say are accurate. This kind of construction will result in 10 to 15 per cent cut in the cost. It is much better quality, a far, far speedier construction and more than that, the architects say that it lends itself to far more exciting concepts of building.

So, Mr. Speaker, I simply say today that we support this whole concept. We support this idea. We support this resolution. It is another illustration of how the Tory mind is gradually coming toward the road to what has been called, across the floor of this House, socialism. More co-ordination, more co-operation, more socialism in the whole field which once used to be a jungle of capitalism.

So we congratulate the member for moving in this direction, for moving closer to the ideas which we have had for a long time and we ask this government to get with it and start to move in this direction.

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will continue with the Throne Debate.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

---

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 26, 1968

The House met at 2.30 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: Today, in our galleries we have visitors from several schools. In the east gallery from Orchard Park High School in Hamilton; Tabor Park Vocational School in Scarborough; and Sunningdale Public School, Oakville; and in the west gallery, Glenview Senior Public School, Toronto, and from Upper Canada College in Toronto.

Later this afternoon, we will be joined by students from Port Perry High School in Port Perry and from Ryerson Polytechnic School in Toronto.

We welcome these young people here.

Petitions.

Presenting reports.

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to table the report of the inquiry re Magistrate Frederick J. Bannon and Magistrate George W. Gardhouse.

This is pursuant to the requirement of section 3, subsection 4, of The Magistrates Act which requires the report to be tabled within 15 days of the opening of the Legislature.

With the report, Mr. Speaker, I table the six volumes which comprise a transcript of evidence and correspondence relating to the resignation and dismissal of Magistrate Bannon and the Orders-in-Council having to do with that same matter.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves, seconded by Mr. Nixon, that Mr. A. E. Reuter, member for the electoral district of Waterloo South, be appointed chairman of the committee of the whole House for the present session.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Before you put the motion, Mr. Speaker, I would just like to take this occasion to express the thanks and appreciation of this side of the House for the way in which the hon. member discharged his duties last year.

We do not always agree with his ruling, sir, any more than we always agree with yours, but we always find him to be so eminently fair that we accept them, even if we do not agree with them.

I felt that, last year, these duties were discharged well and efficiently, and I look forward to the same performance, if I may put it that way, and the same high standard of excellence in the months that lie ahead.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to be asked to second the motion which has been put and to say that we, too, have confidence in the fair judgment of the hon. member in carrying out his duties for another year.

Sometimes I feel he is the hardest working person, not only in government or in Opposition, but in the whole of the Legislature since he has to spend so many hours directing our deliberations on the estimates. It is not possible for him to let his attention wander on brief occasions, as it is possible, perhaps, on both sides of the House, because he never knows when precisely he is going to be called upon to settle some small flare-up.

He does work extremely hard in this particular job and I can say from this side that we appreciate it very greatly. And I hope that he can give me the assurances that he will not use the gratitude and compliments that have been expressed on this side of the House so frequently in his election pamphlets next time.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, I can only echo the comments of both the Prime Minister and the leader of the Opposition. Indeed, I want to congratulate the Prime Minister because I think this is, in my experience, an unprecedented event. We have had traditions in the past that, no matter how good or—dare I add—how bad persons have been in this position, they have had one term of office only and there was no opportunity to carry on good work.

In this instance, I think it is highly commendable that the government is giving the hon. member for Waterloo South an opportunity to carry on in this capacity. I was confident, when he was appointed last year, that he would be about as fair a person as ever sat in that chair—and events prove that to be the case. As with the Prime Minister, I will say that on occasion I did not agree with his ruling but, again, with the Prime Minister, I always thought that he was making them honestly and they were eminently fair. Perhaps, in retrospect, I was even persuaded he was right.

Mr. Speaker: If I may, I will join the leaders of the parties and say that I, too, am exceedingly pleased at this motion of the House and I know it will add to the efficiency and good work of the members.

Motion agreed to.

Introduction of bills.

THE PUBLIC UTILITIES ACT

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Public Utilities Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to prohibit the collection of security deposits for the supplying of public utilities.

THE CORONERS ACT

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Coroners Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, this bill embodies the recommendation made by Chief Justice McRuer that affected persons be allowed to examine witnesses at an inquest either in person or through counsel.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Attorney General.

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I should like to make a brief statement with respect to The Provincial Courts Act and the proclamation thereof.

I wish to advise the hon. members that the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council has, by his proclamation, named Monday, December 2, 1968, as the day upon which The Provincial Courts Act, 1968, shall come into force in our province. The existing members of the magisterial and juvenile and family court benches have now been appointed as judges of the provincial court, providing a full time complement of 130 judges.

I should also mention, Mr. Speaker, that 12 men have been appointed as part time judges with appointments expiring on April 30, 1969, in order that we may have an orderly transition to a complete and full time bench over a period of time. The county court judges who have provided valuable service in the juvenile and family courts have now retired.

As hon. members know, Mr. Speaker, the Act provides for a provincial court made up of a criminal division and a family division, with courts of record sitting for each division in every county and district. The provincial court of the county or district will sit in such parts of the area as may be necessary to meet the needs of the people, and initially in the same location as previously served by the courts now replaced.

All of the steps have been taken for the orderly establishment of the new court, Mr. Speaker, and we look forward to the improvements and developments that we are sure will be realized under the new system. The Judicial Council with the new procedural provision in the court, will, I am sure, enable us to deal more effectively with the responsibility that is placed upon ourselves and the judges of the provincial courts.

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member a question of the Minister? The hon. leader of the Opposition always has the first question.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Health, who is not in his seat today, so I will forego that privilege.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York South.

Mr. MacDonald: I have a number of questions; the first one is a carryover from yesterday to the Minister of Labour.

In view of the lack of enforcement of safety regulations for tunnel workers, as acknowledged by the Deputy Minister of Labour and the chief officer of the construction safety branch on last Sunday night's "W-5" programme on the CTV network, what steps has the Minister taken to assure that henceforth regulations will be enforced?

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Speaker, the member for Dovercourt (Mr. De Monte) had a question somewhat similar in context. He is not able to be here today and he asked me if I would pose the question for him. I do not know whether the Minister of Labour wants to answer them both at once or—

Mr. Speaker: I think it might be well if the hon. member would place the question of the member for Dovercourt now.

Mr. Singer: The question is this, Mr. Speaker:

(1) Has the Minister looked into the new system of medical examinations now required by the State of California for men working under pressure in tunnels?

(2) What medical requirements are now set down by his department for men working under pressure?

(3) In view of the fact that most or part of the Yonge Street subway extension will be constructed by the tunnel method under pressure, is the Minister considering a review of the medical requirements for men working under pressure?

(4) Does his department inspect the projects where men are working under pressure?

(5) Is there a medical inspector who does a medical inspection on the job site?

(6) How many inspectors are there?

Hon. D. A. Bales (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I will deal with the questions separately, if I may.

In reply to the question from the hon. member for York South, I have been assured by my officials that no such acknowledgment was made and it is not correct to say that there is a lack of enforcement of safety regulations for tunnel workers. Certain claims were made on the programme by members of Local 183 of the Labourers' Union and these are now being vigorously investigated.

With reference to the question placed by the hon. member for Downsview as initially submitted by the hon. member for Dovercourt, I will deal with the answers to the questions as raised:

In answer to the first part: I am aware of the California system and the officials of my department, together with our medical consultants, are looking into it.

The second part: I would refer the member to the sections 106 to 114 inclusive of regulations 100/63 made under The Department of Labour Act. In addition, supplementary information and advice are supplied by medical consultants in the health department to project physicians.

The third part is that a review is currently under way in reference to this matter.

The fourth part, the answer is yes.

The fifth: The regulations require a physician to be appointed to carry out all necessary medical functions on every compressed air project. The project physicians are responsible for all the medical aspects of each project and under, in effect, medical inspectors.

The last part: The number of compressed air projects have averaged about nine in a year and there are four inspectors of caissons who regularly inspect them.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might ask the Minister a supplementary question? Without getting into an argument with him as to whether or not there were violations admitted on Sunday night, it was conceded that there was not an extensive health examination at the beginning. There was never any examination midway through the day's work. There was never a full examination at the end.

Is it the obligation of the union to bring to the attention of the government such failure to live up to the regulations, or does the department assume responsibility for enforcing its own regulations?

Hon. Mr. Bales: Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the transcript from that programme nor did I see the programme itself, but I have ordered a transcript. The department takes an active part in this and there are certain matters that have come to light since yesterday in reference to claims that were made and I would prefer to wait until I have had a full investigation made.

Mr. MacDonald: My question, Mr. Speaker, is to the Minister of Trade and Development in four parts:

1. When was a forgiveness loan extended to Matthews Conveyer Company in Port Hope?

2. For what amount was the loan?

3. Is the Minister aware that since receiving the loan the company has laid off 50 workers and further lay-offs are currently under way?

4. Do the conditions of the forgiveness loan permit cut backs in the work force?

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Trade and Development): Mr. Speaker, I received that question a few minutes ago. I am getting information and I will pass it on to the hon. member tomorrow perhaps.

Mr. Speaker: There are from last week two questions of the Minister of Agriculture and Food, one by the hon. member for Huron-Bruce. Does he wish to place that question?

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I have had the information given to me privately. I will withdraw the question.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Kent.

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister of Agriculture and Food:

Is the Minister prepared to extend the adverse weather loan one more year to those farmers who are finding it impossible to meet the loan payments because of low agriculture prices and adverse weather conditions?

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food): Mr. Speaker, I find some difficulty in accepting this request. The adverse weather loan was provided, as you will recall, two years ago and again last year. The government of Ontario provided the interest payment in its entirety for the first year, and 50 per cent of the interest payment for the second year. The farmers were required on the second year to make a percentage payment—I believe it was ten per cent of their obligation, if my memory serves me correctly—and 50 per cent of the total interest on the loan for that year.

I sympathize with farmers who have had crop losses this year, but I frankly do not believe they were very extensive. There were individual cases but it certainly was not on the widespread basis that had pertained in other years. We have taken the position that the loans are guaranteed by the government to the banks. We expect the banks to use all normal means of collection that they usually pursue in such matters. I would feel that we had better let things stand as they are, because crop insurance is being provided and I have grave doubts about extending adverse weather loans assistance when crop insurance is available on most crops now.

Mr. Spence: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Minister would permit a supplementary question?

Is the Minister aware that some farmers have approached the banks for an extension of this money and that they refuse to do anything for them, or refuse to write to you, Mr. Minister, for an extension to carry them over till next year?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: No, I was not aware of it.

Mr. Speaker: Yesterday there was a question by the hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. T. Reid) of the Minister of Education. It was transferred to the Minister of Transport. The member for Scarborough East, being absent today, has requested that the answer be given so that it may be on record and available to the public. I wonder if the Minister of Transport has that; it is question No. 92 with respect to school buses?

Hon. I. Haskett (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the question asked by the hon. member for Scarborough East yesterday of the Minister of Education and referred now to me comes in two parts dealing respectively with the vehicle and the driver.

First as to the equipment required on school buses. The Highway Traffic Act requires departmental approval for all safety glass, head lamps and reflectors used on all motor vehicles. In addition, on school buses, the special signalling lamps that are required for stopping when picking up or discharging pupils must be approved.

There are other requirements for school buses in particular. These vehicles must be equipped with such items as rear emergency door; push-out windows; tire chains or snow tires on each driving wheel that is not of a dual type, whenever highway conditions require their use; interior view mirrors and exterior rear view mirrors; insulated floors; windshield wipers and defrosters; interior lighting; fire extinguishers and emergency tools.

I will now deal with how these requirements are enforced. Regulations made under The Highway Traffic Act require that school buses having a seating capacity of ten or more, and may not be operated unless a certificate of mechanical fitness is filed with the department, on or before August 31 and December 31 of each year. Certificates required under this regulation are thus required immediately prior to the beginning of the school year, and again at a point in the year when the vehicles will be subject to the most severe winter driving conditions. The inspection must be carried out by a certified class A motor mechanic.

Our control file of these certificates is so devised that the department is aware immediately of any dereliction on the part of the operator. An inspector then investigates to determine why a certificate has not been filed, and in the course of the investigation, he inspects the vehicle, orders an in-depth inspection by a mechanic, and recommends the laying of charges if the circumstances warrant it. In addition to the inspection I have mentioned, every school bus is seen by our inspectors at least twice annually—once normally during September or October and again in February or March. The second part of the question relates to the school bus driver. An application to pass a driver's licence requires the applicant to file at the time of his first application, a satisfactory medical certificate, and to pass comprehensive tests of vision, sign recognition, knowledge of the rules of the road, bus equipment, safety and passenger control as well as driving ability. The road test must be taken in a school bus. The vision standards for school bus drivers are more vigorous than those for other drivers and are uniform across Canada. They now require a rating of 20-30-90 per cent—in the better eye, and 20-50-76 per cent—in the weaker eye. Field vision must be 120 degrees in each eye, and colour recognition is tested to ensure the ability to distinguish between red and green.

School bus drivers, 65 years of age and over, are required to pass a certificate of physical fitness, signed by a medical practitioner, and to pass the complete test I have mentioned each year. Those under 65 years of age are required to file a certificate of physical fitness, and to pass tests of vision and knowledge of the rules of the road every three years. If the medical certificate indicates any chronic ailment in the given list, the opinion of my medical advisers is obtained as to the competence of the person to operate a school bus.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York Centre was on his feet a moment ago to ask a question on behalf of the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Knight).

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): I have a question for the Prime Minister from the hon. member for Port Arthur.

Pourquoi l'adresse au commencement de la deuxième session, mardi, n'a pas été en français aussi bien que en anglais. Et pourquoi, la traduction ne tient pas sur nos bureaux ici aujourd'hui?

Why was the Throne Speech opening the second session on Tuesday not read in the French language, and why is a copy of the French translation not on the desks of the members in this House today?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should say that the speech was not completed in time to have it translated quite as rapidly as we would have liked. In any event, the translation was completed on Wednesday, and the French copies were distributed to some members of this assembly—I do not know whether they were distributed to all members. They were distributed to all French newspapers and periodicals on our complete French mailing list. There are copies available for any of the members who would like to have them.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Wentworth.

Mr. Deans: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have two questions for the hon. Minister of Trade and Development.

Would the Minister inform the House of the year that the Bellwood Orchard property was purchased by the Ontario Housing Corporation, and how much money has been expended by the government in purchase and development of this land?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. member, the Bellwood Orchard property in Hamilton was acquired under the provision of the land acquisition holding agreement dated February 1, 1954, between the federal and provincial governments.

Secondly, the Ontario Housing Corporation is continually in the market for land, and uses its best endeavours to obtain the most favourable prices. At the moment, we have options on land in many areas of the province and we do not believe, as I have stated previously, that it would be in the public interest to disclose prices at which this land had been purchased.

Thirdly, the development cost to date of the Bellwood Orchard property amounts to $1,043,481. This is being developed in phases of: the first 97.5 acres in two plans of subdivision; another 241.5 acres now under planned development, and the remaining 504 acres to be developed as quickly as services can be provided.

In this regard, the Ontario Housing Corporation has already indicated its willingness to advance funds required towards service costs if they are needed.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, on a point of clarification, does that figure include the purchase price?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, that is just services; the member asked for development costs.

Mr. Deans: Well?

Hon. Mr. Randall: We are not disclosing the purchase prices.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I did not intend that they be separated. I was quite happy to get them both lumped together.

A second question for the—

Mr. MacDonald: Secret conduct of public business!

Hon. Mr. Randall: What does the member want us to do; go out and advertise that the government is coming into buy land, hit them with the brass band?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Would everybody raise—

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member will place his second question.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, a second question. Will the Minister explain the sale price of $16,000 per unit for the homes which are being offered for sale in the Guelph Green Meadows subdivision?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Speaker, the homes in the Guelph Green Meadows subdivision were appraised by OHC in relation to the current prices being paid for comparable houses in the same general area. However, as the hon. member well knows, the market price for a house is determined, among other things, by the financing arrangements which are available.

For example, a small down payment with favourable interest rates of a long term mortgage on the balance commands a higher price than all cash.

The actual cost to the tenants in Guelph is $14,000 as this is the figure on which principal and interest payments are calculated. The additional $2,000 or a portion of it will not become payable unless the tenant or purchaser subsequently disposes of the property within a five-year period from the date of purchase. At the end of five years, the additional $2,000 is forgiven.

This is a built in discipline which is felt to be preferable to a "buy back" provision to eliminate speculation which, after all, is not the purpose of the tenant purchase plan.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, would the Minister accept a supplementary question? Is it the intent of the Ontario Housing Corporation to follow this practice into other communities and, in particular, into Hamilton?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Speaker, there are other questions here. Perhaps, when I get through, I will have the answer for you. The answer is that we are going to look at every project in all communities and see how best we can work out an arrangement.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Humber.

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): Mr. Speaker, I have a question also of the hon. Minister of Trade and Development. What are the names of the two lending institutions which refused to grant loans to each of the following companies, in order that they might qualify for a loan when locating in areas of the province designated as slow growth areas by the Ontario Development Corporation? The companies are: Union Carbide, Kraft Foods, Allied Chemical, Campbell Soups and Moore Corporation.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Speaker, it is a good question. I am glad I have got the answers. The companies mentioned did not apply for a conventional loan. The companies mentioned got a forgiveness loan which, if they stay in the area for six years, will be written off completely.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question—and that is do any of these companies that I named go into a new area to erect a plant, as distinguished from either extending an existing plant or buying new equipment?

Hon. Mr. Randall: The answer is "yes". Some went in to build a new plant in a new area.

You asked me initially: Did these companies go to other financial institutions and were turned down? The answer is "no"; they did not have to go to other financial institutions. They got a forgiveness loan.

Mr. Ben: My supplementary question was this: Which of these companies actually constructed a new building in a new location, as distinguished from merely putting on an addition to an existing plant or just bringing in new equipment?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Speaker, I would say—Union Carbide, Kraft Foods, Allied Chemical, Moore Corporation and Campbell Soups.

Mr. Ben: I cannot answer the Minister but I have another question.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is on his feet at this moment to ask questions, not to answer them.

Mr. Ben: That is right. I still have a—

Hon. Mr. Randall: If the hon. member is going to answer them, I will sit down.

Mr. Ben: I have another question of the same Minister. How many evictions have there been from the Ontario Housing complex at Thistle town during the past two years?

I have another question. Do you want me to read it now?

Mr. Speaker: Yes, I think the hon. member should place his question.

Mr. Ben: What was the cost of maintenance at Thistle town during 1967?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Speaker, the Thistle town complex was built in two separate stages. The first, comprising 309 units, was taken over progressively from September 30, 1966 to August 3, 1967. The second phase of 245 units was taken under management again progressively, between November 13, 1967 and March 21, 1968, and during the past two years the leases of 29 tenants have been terminated by OHC for cause. Of these, 28 families located voluntarily and in only one case was it necessary for the corporation to obtain vacant possession through the courts.

The answer to the second question is that the maintenance cost at Thistle town during 1967 amounted to $34,962 inclusive of labour and material, broken down as follows:

Building exteriors $23,156, building interiors $772, internal painting $8,090, mechanical and electrical systems $1,882, appliances $248, grounds $249, fire and wind damage $825, sundry $254; for a total of $35,476 less recoveries from tenants $514 to a net of $34,962.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Speaker, I have a question—

Mr. Speaker: I believe the other Ministers are all absent if the hon. member has a—Oh, the Minister of Municipal Affairs has returned.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister of Municipal Affairs, notice of which has been given, is:

When will the province—and here Mr. Speaker we should have added, other than in due course or in the fullness of time or eventually—when will the province compel all municipalities to adopt a national building code?

Hon. W. D. McKeough (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. member's question, I would first like to refer to a survey carried out by the associate committee on the national building code. It was made in the year 1966 and pertains to the use of the national building code by municipalities in Canada.

In this province, it is reported that 87.5 per cent of the population live in municipalities that have adopted the national building code, or have used it as a base for building by-laws. As I have done on two previous occasions in this House, I again state my support for the principle of uniform building standards throughout the province of Ontario.

Much correspondence has been addressed to me on this subject and I have spoken with people representing the various interests of the professions—the building construction industry, local municipalities and building material manufacturers.

There are many different points of view among supporters of uniform building standards about how, by whom and to what extent uniformity can be realized. It was because of their fundamental differences that it was decided to appoint a committee, as I reported to this House at the last session. On September 12, the appointment of committee members was announced, chaired by Mr. Carruthers, the brother of the hon. member for Durham.

Meetings are underway currently and the committee will shortly be inviting written submissions so that it may determine possible courses of action and the means whereby they may be carried out.

It is obvious, Mr. Speaker, that the mandatory adoption of uniform building standards cannot be considered before the committee report is received, and they hope to report to me by July 1, next.

Mr. Ben: Will the hon. Minister entertain a supplementary question?

May I ask the hon. Minister, what percentage of the population of this province is encompassed by the 87 per cent of municipalities mentioned by the hon. Minister?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: No, it is 87.5 per cent of the population.

Mr. Ben: Another supplementary question. Is the Minister aware that one-third of the population of this province, roughly one-third, is in the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto and it has not adopted the national building code?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I do not like to disagree with the hon. member but I think he will find that four of the boroughs have adopted a common code; the city of Toronto is about to adopt that same code and the remaining borough, which I think is York, is also. The six municipalities in Metropolitan Toronto either have or will, within the next few weeks, have one code, as you have correctly pointed out, covering roughly one-third of the population of the province.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Would the Minister answer a supplementary question?

Mr. Speaker: Only from the member who asked the question.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Humboldt has finished his question; if the hon. member wishes now to ask his questions, he may start off with that one.

Mr. Sargent: I was wondering if he could answer, it is supplementary, Mr. Speaker, but—

Mr. Speaker: Start off by asking the hon. Minister the question.

Mr. Sargent: Will the Minister advise what steps have been taken to bring about the modernization of construction regulations under a new building code to save millions of dollars in construction costs? Will he advise if a new code, being introduced in New York and which will cut building costs by 10 per cent, would have the same effect here? When was the present code—we do now have one, I find—dated? If a new code is under way who is drafting it, how much will the draft cost? Will the techniques be designed to bring construction savings, including stronger suspension structures, reduced fire-resistant ratings, reduced elevator equipment requirements; and more realistically will they include safety provisions for structural materials? And, finally, will there be revisions of the administrative procedures for the expediting of issuance of building permits, speedy inspection and faster approval of new materials?

My supplementary question—do I take it, Mr. Speaker, that this new committee, through their report, will give the Minister a provincial building code?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Does the member want me to answer the question which he asked six days ago or are we after—

Mr. Sargent: This is the first time I have asked it.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: This question, of course, Mr. Speaker, which I drew to your attention on Friday, was placed before me on Wednesday last and I have been carrying it back and forth since. I am glad it has been finally asked, and I thank the hon. member for being—

Mr. Sargent: Well, the Minister should have the answer now.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: In answering the questions:

1. To my knowledge there has not been an estimate prepared anywhere about the effect of uniform building standards on building costs. The only saving we have heard about related to houses and the amount estimated for houses is $500. The full benefit for all types of buildings cannot be measured at this time. The potential for new building techniques, new building materials, increased productivity and reduced inventories, is inherent in any system of uniform standards. All of these have an effect on building costs.

Presumably, as to the second part of the question the member is referring to the national building code of Canada. If he is not, then I cannot answer the question without clarification. The national building code of Canada is under constant examination. Amendments are endorsed by the associate committee on the code. Amending revision slips are forwarded to all those with a copy of the code and every five years there is a revision made of the code. The 1970 consolidation is in preparation now.

The third part of the question: If this question refers to the national building code, the answer to question 2 applies. As to cost, copies of the code are available at a nominal cost of $5. The short form is free, except in bulk, when a nominal charge is made.

If the question does not refer to the national building code then I would need some further clarification.

The fourth part: A very desirable feature of the national building code is that it is a performance type code, that is to say, instead of specifying exactly how buildings are to be constructed, minimum standards of structural and fire safety performances are set down. Any material, combination of materials, building techniques, and so on, capable of meeting required performance ratings is permissible.

Finally, to all three parts of the fifth question, the answer is that these are desirable goals and we are exerting much effort to achieve them. These efforts were so well enunciated, I would remind members of the House, as well as the goals were so well enunciated by the member for Halton East in this House.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Grey-Bruce has, with Mr. Speaker, three questions which are unasked and almost a week old. I ask that he either ask them today or withdraw them.

Mr. Sargent: You will be happy to hear, Mr. Speaker, I do not have my questions with me. I do not think I should have to withdraw them.

Mr. Speaker: I would be delighted to hand the questions to the hon. member and he may then ask them.

Mr. Sargent: Will the Prime Minister advise why all rapid transit systems installed in all areas of America were voted upon by the people who provide the tax money, and, where has he the authority to spend millions of dollars from the Ontario Treasury to service one area of the people without the vote of the people? Now there is a good one for you.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I have no idea whether what the hon. member says is factually correct or not, therefore I cannot express an opinion on it. I would point out to him that this government spends many, many hundreds of millions of dollars in this province, in providing all forms of transportation for people in various parts of the province.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: The Prime Minister has stated he will not accept a supplementary question, so the hon. member will please proceed to his next question.

Mr. Sargent: Another question to the Prime Minister: Will the government agree to an immediate audit, outside audit, to determine the exact financial position of the financial affairs of the Ontario government because of the financial nightmare facing the province? He said "no" before.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Why ask me again?

Mr. Sargent: By the Speaker's order.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member had an alternative, he could have withdrawn the question.

Mr. Sargent: We take all the advantage we can get here.

I have a question of the Minister of Transport: What steps have been taken to require passenger cars and multi-purpose passenger vehicles to be equipped to combat the hazard of the one-eyed vehicle?

Hon. Mr. Haskett: Mr. Speaker, in the equipment portion, that would be part 5 of The Highway Traffic Act, section 33 spells out the offence of operating a motor vehicle without two headlights showing white light to the front at any time when lights are required. There are two approaches being developed to take care of this headlamp failure problem. One approach is by way of wiring in the parking light system with the headlight system so that in the event of one of the headlights burning out, the parking lights will indicate the width and location of the vehicle.

Another approach is being taken by the manufacturers of headlamps in providing a secondary filament with a low light output so that when the regular primary high or low beam filament burns out, the headlamp will continue to glow and in that way identify to an oncoming vehicle the width and the location of the vehicle.

Mr. Speaker: the hon. member for Yorkview has a question of the Attorney General of yesterday's date, which he may wish to place today.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Attorney General is this: According to a story in yesterday's Globe and Mail, a peace treaty has been arranged between two Mafia factions whereby what are called "lucrative interests in Eastern Canada" were transferred from the Bonanno faction to that of another leader.

Is the Minister satisfied that the term "Eastern Canada" used here does not include the province of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, the article to which the hon. member refers is a purely speculative article with the headline "New York". There is nothing I have in the way of information to indicate that there is any reference to Ontario. The information which the police commission have, through their intelligence, leads them to believe that the reference is to the Montreal area, but I would point out again that the only reference in what I think is a very speculative article says: "according to one federal official"—and that "federal" refers to a federal official in the United States—"the Bonanno faction will lose lucrative interests in Eastern Canada under the peace treaty".

We have no reason to believe it refers to Ontario.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Etobicoke.

Mr. L. A. Braithwaite (Etobicoke): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Trade and Development which is quite similar to the question put earlier by the member for Wentworth.

What plans does the Minister have to extend, to Metro Toronto residents in Ontario housing, the same home ownership opportunities that have been given to residents of Guelph?

The second part of the question, Mr. Speaker: In the interests of fairness to Ontario Housing Corporation apartment dwellers, is the Minister considering a similar plan whereby they might eventually achieve home ownership for themselves?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Speaker, the tenant purchase plan which has just been introduced in Guelph as a pilot project applies only in the Green Meadows subdivision of that city. This subdivision was developed under the old federal-provincial partnership arrangement whereby the federal government holds title to the property and has a direct 75 per cent financial interest.

In accordance with existing legislation at present the tenant purchase plan can only be introduced in developments financed under that arrangement. To extend its provisions to housing developed directly by OHC, wherein 90 per cent of the capital costs are loaned by the federal government, will require an amendment of The National Housing Act.

I have had discussions on this point with the federal Minister responsible for housing and his predecessors, and I have been given to understand that the federal government does intend to introduce the necessary amendment. Until such time as the federal legislation is changed, however, the hon. member will understand that the tenant-purchase aspect of the HOME programme can only be applied to federal-provincial projects.

In Metropolitan Toronto, to which the hon. member's question is specifically addressed, there are only five such developments. It is our intention to analyze very carefully the Guelph pilot project and this analysis will assist in determining the other areas where this scheme can be introduced in consultation with Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. CMHA approval is necessarily required because of their 75 per cent financial involvement.

Where apartment units are concerned—which, of course, involves the use by tenants of certain common facilities—this would necessitate a condominium arrangement, rather than the techniques which have been applied to the single detached homes in Guelph, and this government has already indicated that it will be actively pursuing the condominium concept.

Mr. Braithwaite: Would the Minister permit a supplementary question? Under the existing situation does the Minister see any obstacles to the residents in the Thistletown project being able to purchase their own homes?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Not particularly, as soon as the amendment to The National Housing Act goes through. I think then we can enter into negotiations.

Mr. Braithwaite: Thank you.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Kitchener.

Mr. J. R. Breithaupt (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy and Resources Management, notice of which has been given. Can the Minister advise the House as to the cost to the government of Ontario through the Ontario Water Resources Commission, of the mailing on August 22, 1968, of a news release regarding the Root family reunion, the covering letter for which was on the letterhead of the commission over the signature of the vice-chairman of the commission?

Secondly, can the Minister advise further how this release has advanced the work of the commission?

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): Mr. Speaker, as the member for Wellington-Dufferin (Mr. Root) is out of the city today I am sorry that I am unable to answer the questions. However, I will see that he gets a copy of the questions. I am sure he would like to answer them himself in this House.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Oshawa.

Mr. C. G. Pilkey (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, a question for the hon. Minister of Labour. Is The Department of Labour involved in any manner in an attempt to resolve the Proctor-Silex dispute in Picton?

Hon. Mr. Bales: Mr. Speaker, I always welcome questions from the hon. members and as the hon. member has been in touch with my officials on a number of occasions in reference to this matter, I am sure he is aware that we have been involved in this dispute for some time.

For example, yesterday my chief conciliation officer was in touch with the union leadership and today he expects to be talking to the company representatives so that we can assess again how we may best help the parties to resolve this matter.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Peterborough.

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of Trade and Development. In view of the statements of Eric Hardy Consulting Limited that the town of Trenton has been giving assessment advantages or granting bonuses in order to attract industries, has the Minister reviewed this municipality's designation under the Equalization of Industrial Opportunity programme?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Speaker, the Hardy report has not been available to either my department or that of the Minister of Municipal Affairs. I think this was brought up one day last week. Mr. Hardy was commissioned by the town of Trenton to complete this report for them but to date has not seen fit to make a copy available so that the grants to which he refers to attract industries can be reviewed.

I might mention that irrespective of the Hardy report, the directors of Ontario Development Corporation are reviewing the designation of Trenton under the Equalization of Industrial Opportunity programme, and as in the case of other towns or other cities that we believe may have secured sufficient industry to solve their needs for the present, the Ontario Development Corporation will be making recommendations accordingly.

Mr. Pitman: Might I ask a supplementary question? In view of the Minister's recent trip to Trenton and his announcement that $1.5 million of public money is being placed in this municipality, if this has been done as a result of illegal practices on the part of the municipality rather than because of the Equalization of Industrial Opportunity programme, would the Minister not regard it as incumbent to immediately remove the designation until this thing has been resolved?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I would have to look at the Hardy report before I answer the questions.

Mr. Pitman: Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the Prime Minister? Has the government of Ontario received a request from the civil service association based on a resolution passed unanimously at a recent convention that a commission made up of representatives of the civil service association and the government, exclusive of any representative of The Department of Correctional Services, investigate staff conditions at Millbrook Reformatory?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: The answer is "no", Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Pitman: Would the Prime Minister accept a supplementary question?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I do not know what supplementary you could ask to an answer like that.

Mr. Pitman: Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, I might try. If such a request was forwarded to the Prime Minister would he be sympathetic to such a request?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, it is surely hypothetical. I would have to see what the request is and see what, in fact, they were asking before I could say whether I would be sympathetic or unsympathetic. I mean I am dealing in something of which I have no knowledge and which has not even been formulated in the minds of the asker, so how could I say how I would feel about it?

Mr. Pitman: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, it could not have been more clearly in the mind of the asker. Apparently it is the government which is having difficulty in this matter.

I would ask a question of the Minister of Correctional Services.

1. Did a serious attack take place on a guard, a Mr. Carmen Bell, at Millbrook Reformatory on the evening of November 18?

2. Was there any provocation for the attack?

3. By whom was a charge of assault laid and why were those most concerned with the attack not informed of the case before the courts were—I think that was in Cobourg on November 20?

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. member's question, first of all I would like to say I welcome very much the interest of the members opposite in the problems which a correctional officer—

Some hon. members: Answer the question.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member, without being given permission by you—

An hon. member: Answer the question.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —without being given permission by you, made some comment in answer to the Prime Minister's answer to his question—

An hon. member: Answer the question.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —about the situation at Millbrook. I will answer—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. Minister is using that leeway which the Chair has always given to members and which the hon. member for Peterborough certainly used.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I have been trying, sir, for five years to recruit their concern for the correctional officers, and for five years I have been attempting to defend the correctional officers against the charges of brutality against inmates. I am very pleased the hon. member has asked this question and all I can tell him is that as soon as the superintendent learned of the sentence of 30 days—I think it was, and I am speaking from memory—he took it up with our head office, asking that an appeal be instituted against this short sentence. Our head office has taken it up with The Attorney General's Department, and in view of the fact that an appeal is now being considered I can hardly make any further comment on it, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Pitman: Mr. Speaker, a part of the answer of the Minister of Correctional Services will, I think, perhaps answer my question to the Attorney General which was:

1. Did an inmate of Millbrook Reformatory appear before Magistrate Baxter in Cobourg on November 20?

2. On what charge was the prisoner brought before the courts?

3. Why were prosecution witnesses not called and what was the sentence given to that individual?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that we have been requested by The Department of Correctional Services to appeal the sentence imposed on this conviction, I am precluded to some extent from answering. But I am not going to curtail my answer insofar as it is possible to answer the question.

The prisoner was brought before the magistrate. The charge was assaulting a police officer. No witnesses were called. He pleaded guilty. The sentence was 30 days consecutive to the sentence he was already serving.

I am proceeding to review the matter. In any event we are proceeding to consider the question as to appeal. Also, I may say that I am not satisfied with the way it was disposed of. I understand that an assistant Crown attorney was in charge of the case and was not aware and was not informed of the facts when the plea of guilty was entered and the case was proceeded with.

So I would simply answer the hon. member: I am reviewing it. We are considering the matter of appeal.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sandwich-Riverside.

Mr. F. A. Burr (Sandwich-Riverside): Mr. Speaker, a question for the Prime Minister.

What was the cost of producing and printing the "Confederation of Tomorrow" booklet? How many copies were published in English? How many many copies were published in French?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, $70,574.99; 50,000 English copies and 27,000 French copies.

Mr. Burr: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. Is the Prime Minister aware that about 70,000 copies are sitting in the hall on the fourth floor?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: No, Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of that and I very much doubt that it is so.

Mr. Burr: Would the Prime Minister check on it please?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Indeed, I will.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has a further question of the Minister of Trade and Development which he would place please.

Mr. Burr: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Trade and Development. Can the Minister advise the House when homes in the Fontainebleu housing development in Windsor will be offered for sale to the present tenants?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Speaker, the question concerning the Fontainebleu development in Windsor is on a similar subject to that raised by the hon. member for Etobicoke.

These particular homes were developed directly by OHC and, therefore, as I have already indicated, the tenant purchase plan cannot apply until the federal legislation is changed.

These particular families are aware of this fact as I had the pleasure of meeting with a delegation from Fontainebleu some time ago and this was followed up by the general meeting in Windsor between the tenants and senior officials of OHC.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Essex-Kent.

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex - Kent): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Provincial Treasurer. Will the Minister consider a revision of the gas tax refund regulation to allow farmers doing custom work for their neighbours the same rebate as if it were done on their own farm?

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Provincial Treasurer): Yes, Mr. Speaker, the answer is that without commitment the matter will be considered.

Mr. Ruston: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the hon. Minister of Correctional Services. Is it the policy of the department to provide compensation for property damage caused by individuals who are wards of the province in training schools?

Will there be compensation for tractor damage, the destroying of antiques and other valuables at the Harper residence north of Cobourg as a result of the escape of nine residents of Brookside School on August 28?

Has any disciplinary action been taken with regard to the conduct of the Brookside supervisor who said to one of the nine Brookside boys who was apprehended with a bleeding hand, "Let the little bugger bleed to death", as reported in the Cobourg Sentinel-Star of September 4?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, Mr. Speaker, I could answer a portion of this from memory but I would rather not trust my memory on some of the details. Of course, I cannot answer a portion of it because it refers to a news report which I have not seen.

I am sure too, Mr. Speaker, that on thinking it over the hon. member would feel that the third part of his question, which reads: "Has any disciplinary action been taken with respect to the conduct of the Brookside supervisor who said to one of the nine boys"—that in all fairness it should read, "who, it is 'alleged', said to one of the boys", because the hon. member is referring to a press report and this has not been established as a fact yet.

I will take the question as notice and get as much information as I can for the hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the hon. Minister of Trade and Development. Have any formal proposals been submitted by OHC to CMHC for the sale of the homes in the Bridgeview subdivision in Windsor? If not, when will these formal proposals be submitted?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Speaker, no formal proposals have been submitted by the Ontario Housing Corporation to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, regarding the purchase by tenants of homes in the Bridgeview subdivision in Windsor, but officials of the corporations have had a number of discussions concerning this particular development.

As the hon. member knows, this development is on a fixed rental rather than a rent-to-income basis and, as such, is different to the Guelph Green Meadows subdivision.

I have already indicated that the Guelph project will be studied very carefully and the results of this study will, undoubtedly, influence further extension of the tenant purchase plan into other municipalities in Ontario.

The hon. member can be assured that, in consultation with Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, the tenant purchase plan will be implemented wherever it is considered to be practical in relation to the circumstances which apply to any given municipality.

Perhaps I can enlarge on that and say that, as you recognize, there are different circumstances in all municipalities, the reference of shortage of public housing, so forth and so on. We want to make sure when we make a deal that we make it in the interest of the tenants and the municipality.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question of the Minister. Does this Bridgeview project qualify under the tenant purchase plan, as is without any amendments to the federal Act?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, in a way it would. The only thing is, as I said, that they are on a fixed rental. A number of those people have been living there at a very low rent for many years and their income has gone up—but they have not been put on a rent-to-gear-income basis. This brings in some complications because they should be able to now go out and buy in another development, such as in the HOME programme.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Speaker, if I may, for a point of clarification. It then qualifies under the tenant purchase plan without any amendments to the federal Act?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I would say so at the moment. Yes.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Speaker, may I ask of the Minister a second supplementary and that is, is the Minister aware of the necessity for major repairs in some of these homes as a result of the indecision on the sale of the homes?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, I am aware of that but I think you are also aware that some of those people living there are earning $8,000, $10,000, $12,000, $13,000 a year. If they have let the places run down while they have a subsidized rent, I think also they have a responsibility to fix the places up.

However, I might say that under the agreement we have in Green Meadows, we state that we will go in and make an estimate of what repairs are required to put the houses in good order without having to rebuild them, and I think we would do the same thing in Windsor if we sold the property.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for High Park.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs. Does the Minister intend to order that a hearing be held to determine if the Allstate Company should be allowed to continue to sell health insurance in this province, as requested by me during the Minister's estimates?

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): Mr. Speaker, my intention, as is now the case, is to have the superintendent of insurance continue his surveillance of this entire area.

As I have already informed the hon. member in the past, the superintendent of insurance has been directed to review in detail this type of policy, and to establish whether such policies are in fact in the public interest.

Mr. Shulman: Would the Minister accept a supplementary question? Inasmuch as it was some months ago that the Minister gave such instructions to the superintendent of insurance, has the superintendent of insurance as yet found the time to make this review, and if so, what has he decided?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The superintendent has not been idle since the House adjourned towards the end of July. As a matter of fact, early in September, this matter was raised and discussed with the superintendents of insurance at their annual meeting here in Toronto, and has been the subject of investigations and study by the superintendent, not only in this jurisdiction but in other jurisdictions in Canada as well.

Mr. Shulman: Well what is the decision?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I wonder, Mr. Speaker, if I may raise a point of order to obtain some information from you. Is it fair to ask you, sir, as to whether these questions are asked in numerical order?

The reason I say that is because I have two questions before me, the first which has been answered, numbered 101, and the second numbered 116. Does that simply mean that as far as this Minister is concerned, or any other Minister that may similarly be involved, there is a waiting period of 15 questions between the first question he is asked to reply to and the second question? I say there are certain normal comforts involved in situations of this kind that confront all of us from time to time; it is just a matter of knowing where we stand, sir, if I may.

Mr. Speaker: I would be delighted to answer that. The hon. Minister, of course, and all members of the Treasury bench, are expected to be in their places in this House when the House is sitting. The number on the question shows the order in which the question was received in the Speaker's office and entered. It has nothing to do with the order in which they were called here.

I would find it very difficult indeed to arrange to have the questions of any Minister asked by all the members at the same time. It would be bedlam.

At the moment, we have proceeded fairly reasonably by confining it to all questions by one member at the same time. In fact, it has greatly improved on the original set up earlier in the last session when we did not do that.

I have no objection whatsoever, and the hon. Minister of Social and Family Services arranged it as such yesterday; if I know that a Minister has to leave or a member has to leave, and would be most pleased to juggle the questions in my hands and the order of the members who pop up, to give precedence—

Mr. Nixon: Or he can always raise his hand.

Mr. Speaker:—so far as I am concerned—within reason. First of all the leader of the Opposition places all his questions first and then the leader of the New Democratic Party, and if there are questions left from another day, they are asked.

Then, within reason, and particularly when the beginning of the Throne Debate is not on and the Prime Minister is usually here, I endeavour to have the Prime Minister's questions asked. After that, it is as the members catch the Speaker's eye, whose gaze wanders almost automatically from one of the Opposition parties to the other so that they may have a fair split of the time for questions.

I trust that answers the hon. Treasurer's inquiry and the next member to have the floor of the House—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Speaker, if I may, just pursue it again: Say that I am quite confident that most Ministers want to be in their seats to pursue the questions and the question period. I do suggest, though—

Mr. Sargent: He is out of order, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: No, I do not think I am out of order in addressing Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister is speaking on a point of order.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I just simply want to suggest to you, sir, and to the members of the House, that there are certain Ministers involved in other work on behalf of the government of the people of the province. I have reference to Treasury board, which requires a small quorum before the work of Treasury board could be proceeded with. I just simply want, if I may, sir, in pursuance of this matter to suggest to you that I am delighted to hear you say that there may be certain priority given to the answers to questions. I will be pleased to take this up with your honour personally, if I may.

Mr. Speaker: I would like to point out to the hon. Minister that the most important part of the legislative assembly of Ontario is this House sitting here and not the Treasury board. I, however, do realize that the hon. Minister has a good point, because we all realize that these other matters have to be dealt with. I will do my best, Mr. Treasurer, to endeavour to arrange for those Ministers who must be elsewhere, and those members who must be elsewhere, to have their questions asked, but you will understand with some 38 questions today and some ten left from yesterday, the question period must be long and there either must be a limit on the number of questions, a limit on the time, or else we have to accept the problems which we have here.

Has the hon. member for High Park completed his supplementary questions?

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Treasurer rose on a point of order as I was putting my supplementary question and the Minister did not have an opportunity to reply. The question was: What was the decision, Mr. Minister?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: A decision has not been made. The point I am advancing to the hon. member for High Park is that on an examination of this question of health insurance I think that the question involved in this specific matter really involves a consideration of the large variety of so-called health insurance policies and whether or not they indeed are in the public interest.

Mr. Shulman: When can we expect a decision, Mr. Minister?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: At the earliest possible time.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member for Hamilton East would now place his question? Perhaps the first one might be to the Treasurer.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): Yes, Mr. Speaker, a question of the Treasurer. How many Ontario government employees are considered eligible to be members of the Civil Service Association of Ontario, and how many are at present paying dues to the CSAO?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Speaker, the answer to part one of the hon. member's question is 47,168; and to part two, slightly in excess of 36,000.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has a further question of the Minister of Lands and Forests?

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Might we suspend proceedings while the Treasurer leaves?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Hamilton East has another question?

Mr. Gisborn: For the Minister of Lands and Forests:

What progress is being made to acquire lands to establish the Fifty Point Park in Saltfleet township?

Hon. R. Brunelle (Minister of Lands and Forests): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the member for Hamilton East, negotiations are still proceeding with reference to this property.

Mr. Gisborn: May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker?

Has it been six or seven years since the government first promised action on this park, and is it correct that the price per acre has risen from $1,500 to $7,000 at the present time?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: As I mentioned, Mr. Speaker, this matter is still active. We are still proceeding with negotiations and the matter is coming up at the next meeting of the Parks Integration Board. It is quite true that the price has risen considerably from the original price.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Rainy River.

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture and Food.

Will the Minister provide any assistance, perhaps in the form of an extension of the adverse weather assistance programme, to the farmers of the Rainy River district due to the extraordinarily heavy rainfall in that area this year?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, I have every sympathy for the farmers of the Rainy River district. During the second week of September, on the members' tour of northern Ontario, I availed myself of the opportunity to visit many of the farmers in that area and I found that most of their crops were still in the field. As a matter of fact those few good days that pertained during our visit to northern Ontario allowed them to get some of the crops harvested.

There has been considerable loss in some areas, particularly in the flat or low lying areas or the undrained areas. Others have been fairly well harvested. We have been in constant touch with our agricultural representative in that area since that time and he tells me that about 50 per cent of the crop seems to have been harvested in those poorer areas and most of the crop harvested in the well-drained areas.

Because crop insurance was available last year up there and some farmers did take crop insurance, I find it very difficult to justify making assistance available, or recommending to the government that adverse weather assistance be made available, to the farmers who did not buy crop insurance when it was available to them.

Mr. T. P. Reid: May I ask the Minister a supplementary question?

Is the Minister aware that this has been an extraordinarily heavy rainfall this year and even those areas that are usually well drained have not been cleared of the water? Is the Minister aware that the crop insurance plan, being a new concept to the Rainy River district farmers, was not well publicized and well understood and therefore most of the farmers did not take advantage of the crop insurance this year?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, I cannot answer as to whether or not the crop insurance programme was understood, but it was well advertised. It was advertised in all of the local papers; it was advertised on radio; every promotional aspect that could be entertained was entertained in promoting crop insurance in that area. If farmers decide in their own best interests not to buy crop insurance, it is not the government's prerogative to force it on them, and I feel that under the circumstances it is difficult to expand and provide a crop insurance programme for farmers if they do not buy it themselves.

Mr. Nixon: It sounds as if that insurance programme is more use to the government than it is to the farmers.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: It is not more use to me and I take exception to that because there are farmers—

Mr. Nixon: That is the second time you have leaned on that weak reed.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: In one part of that area up there there was one farmer who was getting $1,000 in payment. Do you say that we should go out and pay the other farmers—

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. Minister will take his seat. The hon. member for Rainy River has a further question of the Minister of Lands and Forests.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I must say I disagree with the Minister of Agriculture on that last statement.

I have a question for the Minister of Lands and Forests. Will the Minister extend the dates for hearings on the future of Algonquin Park due to the delay in sending reports of the multi-purpose study of the area?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. member for Rainy River, in view of the importance of Algonquin Park and the interest of the public in it, we want to allow the fullest possible time, and we will receive submissions up until the end of this year, December 31.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Would the Minister accept a supplementary question? People have written to the department asking for this multi-purpose study and have not yet received it. Is the Minister aware of this going on in his office, that these people have not been able to receive their copies of this study?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, is the member referring to this probational master plan?

Mr. T. P. Reid: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: We have copies available and if people will write to us and enclose $1 we will be pleased to submit one.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sarnia.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): Thank you, sir. Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport.

Would the Minister advise whether, in reply to the question of the member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. B. Newman) on Thursday, November 21, relative to amendment of The Highway Traffic Act to permit discretionary powers in magistrates to grant intermittent licence suspension, the Minister was advising this House that he had no legal power to propose such legislation relative to charges instituted pursuant to The Criminal Code of Canada?

Hon. Mr. Haskett: Mr. Speaker, the answer is "no," and I did not so state. I intimated to the hon. member at that time that I understood the conviction was under the Criminal Code and that the action taken by the magistrate was under appeal. For my part, I prefer to await the outcome of that appeal before contemplating any action.

Mr. Bullbrook: Would the Minister entertain a supplementary question?

Do I correctly assume then, notwithstanding the words that the Minister gave the other day and the obvious inference from those words, that he is now waiting an appeal? Has the appeal been instituted?

Hon. Mr. Haskett: Mr. Speaker, I intimated I understood it had been taken.

Mr. Bullbrook: Can the Minister assure us it has been instituted? His answer is that he is waiting for an appeal that has not yet been instituted.

Hon. Mr. Haskett: I stand corrected if I said it has been taken; I said I understood it had been, and I think if it has not been, it will be.

Mr. Bullbrook: The Minister can now assure that it is going to be appealed?

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Attorney General, which perhaps has been partly answered by his announcement at the commencement of this period.

"When The Provincial Judges Act is proclaimed on December 8," my question said, but it appears it is going to be proclaimed on December 2:

(a) How many magistrates, deputy magistrates and juvenile court judges will become provincial judges?

(b) How many will not become provincial judges?

(c) What are the names of those who will not be appointed?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I think a good many of these items were answered in the statement. The Act is The Provincial Courts Act, if I may draw attention to the title, and has been proclaimed as of December 2; this was done some days ago. The statement I made today was just to draw attention of the public, and members of the House too, to the proclamation of the Act and some of the consequences of its being brought into effect.

To answer specifically, The Provincial Courts Act, 1968, as I have said, comes into effect on December 2. One hundred and thirty of the present bench will become full-time members of the court, and 12 present part-time magistrates and juvenile and family court judges will become part-time judges of the provincial court for a period which will end on April 30 of next year.

I would like to expand a little bit on that. We are doing this arrangement with the part-time judges simply as a transitional device to get over the period until we can get fully equipped with judges who will serve full-time both on the criminal side and the family side of the court. We have a number of excellent magistrates—not too many—who have served on a part-time basis over a period of years, and I have been doing my best to persuade those who are left to go full-time, or go back full-time to law practice. But after this transitional period, I think we can work it out by April 30 next year, we hope we will have full-time judges completely.

Questions (b) and (c): Eight county court judges, who have been judges in the juvenile and family courts, will not be appointed to the provincial court. They are judges now, of course. These judges are Judges Fuller, Anderson, Leach, Cavers, Smith, Richardson, Darby and Brickenden.

Mr. Singer: By way of a supplementary, do I understand from the Minister's answer that all of the present magistrates, deputy magistrates and juvenile court judges except the ones he has named are being reappointed?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, the part-time ones only on that basis up to April 30, when we will either ask them in that period to leave the bench; if they and we do not agree, or where we can work it out we will keep them full-time. This is a transitional feature.

Mr. Singer: Does this apply, again by way of a supplementary, to those deputy magistrates who are serving in the county of York and perhaps in other places as well?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, I think that is correct.

Mr. Singer: They are now going to be provincial judges?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes.

Mr. Singer: Again by way of supplementary, have these appointments been referred to the Judicial Council? Have they been consulted in the making of these appointments?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, we have not; it was not our intention that they should be. We have refrained so far as possible from making any recent appointments consistent with keeping the administration of justice up to the mark. But any appointments from December 2 on will be referred to the Judicial Council.

Surely the hon. member is not suggesting that the magistrates who have served on the bench—I think we discussed this in our debate on the Act—should now be relieved of the magistrate's position by reference to the Judicial Council.

Mr. Singer: No, I was not suggesting that, but I was suggesting that the Minister had an ideal opportunity to do some house-cleaning which apparently he has missed.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is just what the member is suggesting then, that magistrates who have served on the bench for some time, by reference to the Judicial Council, could be dispensed with. I thought we debated this. In any event, if we were to debate it now, I would not accept it.

Mr. Singer: This is probably not the right time for debate, Mr. Speaker. I would like to pursue it, and I will, at a later time.

I have a second question: I have some difficulty with this one, Mr. Speaker, because you edited it and you took out part 1, and without part 1, part 2 by itself does not make too much sense.

Mr. Speaker: I would think that it makes sense. Part 1 was quite improper in my view.

Mr. Singer: We will try it in any event, as the member for Riverdale (Mr. J. Renwick) suggests.

Does the Attorney General approve of the procedure in the case against Garry H. Perly, now being heard by Magistrate Tupper S. Bigelow, which in accordance with the magistrate's order is being conducted in this manner? And the manner was referred to in part 1 which has been deleted, but hopefully the Attorney General knows the manner that I was referring to.

Part 2: Does the Attorney General intend to take any action to prevent such occurrences in the future? If so, what action will be taken?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I would like to answer it this way: I would prefer not to discuss very fully at this moment a case which is still before the court. Of course, I am fully aware of what is going on. The magistrate has found in this particular case—which apparently is going to take a very long time with a very difficult person before him—that to hear it, to devote all the energies of the court and time of the court to it, would delay a great many very important cases which are before him. He has taken the procedure of hearing it—

Mr. Singer: Half an hour a week.

Hon. Mr. Wishart:—in portions.

Mr. Ben: How about the 45 to 50 days that the Smith Brothers took?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Just a moment. The member will have my full answer in a moment.

As I say, I would rather not go into detail in discussing the case now. I think when that case is concluded, if it goes very long before it is concluded, it will be reviewed by the chief magistrate there, and if necessary by my office. The magistrate, in the conduct of his court, has a certain discretion with which I do not lightly interfere.

Mr. Singer: By way of a supplementary, while I can appreciate that, surely the Attorney General will agree that this kind of procedure is punishing an accused in advance.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Without getting into an argument, I am not sure that the punishment is perhaps all being imposed on one side of this case.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member for Nipissing, who has been very patient.

Mr. R. S. Smith (Nipissing): I have a question for the Minister of Highways:

1. What progress has been made on the 4.2-mile Gravenhurst bypass project under project numbers 245-60-2; 246-60-1 and 2; and 247-60-1 and 2?

2. What contracts have been made under this project?

3. Will this construction be completed during this fiscal year as announced last spring?

Hon. G. E. Gomme (Minister of Highways): Mr. Speaker, had I known it would be 4 o'clock when I got up to answer this question I could have had the answer, but I will have to take it as notice now.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, there is a question of the hon. Minister of Transport if he has an answer for me.

Hon. Mr. Haskett: Mr. Speaker, construction zone speed limits are applied to meet the needs of The Department of Highways, and the signing approved by order in council in each case is done by The Department of Highways in accordance with The Highway Traffic Act, section 59, subsection 11 (a) and 11 (b).

With respect to the second part of the member's question, the answer is "no."

Part 3: The specific construction zone speed limits and the duration of enforcement in each case is likewise the responsibility of The Department of Highways, and I understand that my colleague the Minister of Highways is prepared to provide the further specific information requested.

Hon. Mr. Gomme: Mr. Speaker, construction work on the Queen Elizabeth Way in the vicinity of the new interchanges at Kipling Avenue and Islington Avenue will be completed in approximately one month's time, and the 45-mile-per-hour speed limit signs will be removed on this section. However, in the immediate vicinity of the QEW-Highway 27 interchange, where work is still in progress, the construction speed limit signs will remain in force. Our practice is not inconsistent with the statement made by my colleague to the House on April 7. The hon. member asks:

Why is the same speed limit maintained at all times whether or not construction is in progress instead of being adjusted to actual conditions, particularly at weekends when construction work ceases?

Because of the ever-changing location of the construction areas, it is most difficult to maintain at all times construction speed zone signs consistent with road conditions on all construction contracts. A concerted effort is being made to ensure that construction speed zoning is realistic, and when conditions warrant, to have the speed zone signs removed at nights and on weekends.

Mr. Speaker, I have the answer to question 89 asked by the member for Thunder Bay yesterday. It is:

In my letter of July 17, 1968, I informed the hon. member that we would go ahead with the pre-engineering for the prospective reconstruction of the road, which had been programmed. I explained that I was unable to be specific, but that we would arrange schedules of construction consistent with comparative priorities and available funds. During 1964 to 1967 inclusive, 16 accidents occurred on the road, giving an accident rate of 1.0 per million vehicle miles of travel over that period. This corresponds with an average of 2.6 for all King's Highways in the province; 3.6 for all secondary highways, and 5.8 for all of Ontario's roads and streets. Evidently Highway 585 was just about as safe a road as could be driven on during 1964 to 1967.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day yesterday we were discussing the celebration of the 150th anniversary of the birth of George Brown, which will be on Friday next. In the intervening hours I have had an opportunity to meet with the leader of the Opposition and the leader of the New Democratic Party, and we have come to an agreement, and perhaps I can tell the House how we would like to observe this, the 150th anniversary of the birth of this very famous Canadian Parliamentarian.

In the Toronto Necropolis and Cemetery at 200 Winchester Street, Toronto, where George Brown is buried, there will be a short memorial service and wreath laying ceremony at 9 o'clock on Friday, November 29. In attendance there will be myself, the leader of the Opposition and the leader of the New Democratic Party, some officials and students from the George Brown College of Applied Arts and Technology. Any members of this House and the public who would like to join us will be very welcome on that occasion.

At 10 o'clock this House will meet and there will be addresses in recognition of Mr. Brown by myself, by the leader of the Opposition, by the leader of the New Democratic Party, and by any other members of the House who would like to observe this occasion.

Following that, and with the approval of the House, it is planned that we will then adjourn and go to the platform erected at the front steps of the building and close by there is a statue of George Brown. We would hope to be out there by 11 o'clock on Friday morning. There will be the regimental bands of the Lorne Scots, a good Scottish regiment; a guard of honour to be inspected will be commanded by Captain I. Kirkwood; the regimental band will be conducted by Captain E. Corlett. The pipes and drums will also be in attendance. The civil service choir will lead the singing and perform numbers. The Ontario Provincial Police will provide a detail under the command of Inspector Donald Atam. They will escort a group from the platform to the monument of George Brown where a wreath will be placed on behalf of the legislative assembly. Representatives of the student body of George Brown College of Applied Arts and Technology will deposit a wreath. Rev. Dr. Ross K. Cameron, a former moderator of the Presbyterian Church in Canada will be the officiating clergyman. There will be some 1,500 to 2,500 students from the George Brown College and pupils from schools in the immediate vicinity, and such other members of the public who may wish to come. We hope that the people will attend this ceremony. Certainly they are all more than welcome as we will gather to do honour to a very famous Canadian statesman.

Mr. W. M. McIntyre, Secretary of the Cabinet, has been co-ordinating this entire programme, assisted by various persons working under his direction, including Mr. John Cozens, the leader of the civil service choir.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Sir, may I beg the indulgence of the House. I would like to call the third order, which is second reading of Bill 2, an Act to amend The Municipal Act. This bill is a technical one involving the municipal elections which will be held early next month. If it can be given second reading this afternoon in committee of the whole, and third reading, then I would hope that it will receive Royal Assent this week in order that we may make the necessary arrangements with the municipalities.

THE MUNICIPAL ACT

Hon. W. D. McKeough (Minister of Municipal Affairs) moves second reading of Bill 2, An Act to amend The Municipal Act.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): With the assurance of the Premier of the rather specific requirements of this particular statute, I feel that any comments that we might want to make on changes in the election procedures at the municipal level might be made on another occasion, and we have no objection to it being put without notice.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

Clerk of the House: The third order; House in committee of the whole, Mr. A. E. Reuter in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Hon. members, before I assume the chair, may I just take a few moments to express my thanks to all hon. members for their support in returning me to this position. I want to say a special word of thanks to the hon. Prime Minister, to the hon. leader of the Opposition and to the hon. member for York South, leader of the New Democratic Party, for their very kind words.

During those words, I thought of some of the occasions during the first session on which I was called upon to make some rulings. I must say that on those occasions, after numerous of them, I am very, very surprised to find myself in this position again because I do realize full well that there was some dissatisfaction on both sides of the House with some of those rulings.

However, it seems to me that Parliament, being as old as it is, going back to the year 1295, that a great deal has evolved over those years. It seems to me that the purpose of Parliament is for reasonable people, men and women, to gather together to resolve their problems in a responsible and dignified manner.

The committee of the whole House was founded, I think, approximately in the year 1607, and I found it very interesting to note the reason why the committee of the whole House procedure was adopted.

It seems that in the early days of Parliament, Mr. Speaker was regarded as a direct representative of the monarchy and to some extent, this restrained the members of the Commons from free discussion. Therefore, the committee of the whole was developed in order that there could be a member of the Commons appointed to chair the committee.

Now, with that thought in mind, it has always been my belief that there should be freer discussion in committee and that while we do have rules that have been built up and taken from Westminster, it seems to me that particularly in Ontario, those rules have not been revised for a long while but it seems, in committee, that we can afford to judge the circumstances as they arise.

If it is necessary to bend those rules just a little to suit those circumstances I think this would tend to a much more dignified and orderly procedure while we are in committee.

In any event, I am very grateful to be here again, to work with my good friends, Mr. Lewis, Mr. Common and Mr. Young and I am sure I will find it pleasurable again to work with Mr. Speaker, as his deputy.

Again, I want to express my sincere gratitude for your support in returning me to this chair.

THE MUNICIPAL ACT

House in committee on Bill 2, An Act to amend The Municipal Act.

Section 1 to 4, inclusive, agreed to.

Preamble agreed to.

Hon. W. D. McKeough (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Mr. Chairman, I just wanted to say that section 1 of the bill really has nothing to do with section 2.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): We have carried it.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: You have carried it. You should understand what you are doing. I am not sure that I do. I think you have to have—

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): That is not our problem.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: It is not your problem; you are not interested, I will not tell you. It is just technical.

Bill 2 reported.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves that the committee of the whole House rise and report one bill without amendment.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of the whole House begs to report one bill without amendment and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

THIRD READING

The following bill was given third reading upon motion:

Bill 2, An Act to amend The Municipal Act.

Clerk of the House: The first order, resuming the adjourned debate on the motion for an address in reply to the speech of the hon. the Lieutenant-Governor at the opening of the session.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I was surprised at the energetic objection taken by the Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. Stewart) a few moments ago during the question period when I interjected a comment in his answer. He was being questioned about the possibility of government assistance to those farmers in two areas of the province that have suffered unnatural weather hindrance and damage during the recent crop season.

His reason for not going ahead with the recommendation to the Cabinet for such assistance in both cases was that the farmers had crop insurance available, and, therefore, he did not see fit to recommend the assistance that had been forthcoming in years gone by under these similar circumstances.

I interjected that I felt the crop insurance programme was, therefore, more useful to the government than to the farmers because surely the Minister himself knows that in most areas of the province less than 5 per cent of the farmers concerned have, for reasons that surely they find good and sufficient, availed themselves of the coverage that is available under the provincial-federal joint crop insurance programme.

It could be that it is too expensive; that it has not been properly put for their consideration and, in fact, that they are prepared to take the risks as long as they feel that the representatives of the Legislature, in matters and circumstances of great catastrophe, are prepared to take the steps that have been taken in years gone by, to provide the reasonable assistance that has been forthcoming.

I remember very well, when the bill that implemented crop insurance was discussed, saying that I expected the Minister would use this as a crutch for getting out of the responsibilities that had been governmental for so many years. We now find that this is precisely the purpose of The Crop Insurance Act as it is administered in the province of Ontario.

It appears to be one the serious shortcomings in the attitude taken by the Minister and his chief, the Premier, who is good enough to indicate his views on the whole matter—that he feels the farmers are properly served.

Now surely it is most worthy when we see that this crop insurance programme is quite heavily subsidized at the federal level; that the government of Ontario has not seen fit to match that subsidy; that it still is an expensive proposition for the farmers; and that they have not seen fit to avail themselves of the limited protection that is forthcoming.

Mr. Speaker, I had an opportunity last night to be present at the opening of a new school in a town in my constituency. It was a very uplifting experience with a good number of young people taking part.

I had an opportunity to talk to those present, not only the young people but some others, and to be much impressed with a broader, let us say reaction, to provincial, national and world affairs than perhaps I have been subjected to in former circumstances.

I cannot help but think that it has been the coverage of the news media on certain events in recent months that has brought forward this sort of reaction, particularly from young people.

You may recall, sir, a news clip that was carried on almost every television station that is available to us in this part of Ontario, showing the summary execution of a North Vietnamese soldier—a young man who was simply put to death by his captor pointing a pistol at the top of his head and blowing it off. This was carried on news programmes repeatedly and had a tremendous impact, I think, on public opinion as to the events that had been taking place there—perhaps without the same involvement of public conscience up until that time.

I do not want to spend time on that other than as an example of one of these conscience stirring events which got to the masses, as citizens of Ontario, in this way.

Probably the second event that had as big or even bigger impact was the pictures carried of the starving children in Biafra, which do not have to be described, I am sure, for every member to conjure up the image in his own mind.

Once again, the conscience of us all, as citizens of the province, was deeply stirred and there was a very personal feeling that, as individuals, something had to be done to counteract this terrible and inhumane situation. In my view, not enough has been done, but we, in the province of Ontario, through the government, are contributing, I understand, $70,000 towards the relief of the situation, and citizens have had an opportunity to take part themselves.

This should be dealt with at greater length, there is no doubt about it. It appears that part of the stirring of the conscience of the individuals is followed by the settling out of the conscience in rather short order when what may have been a very immediate concern to the individual is replaced by something else a few days later—and the heat is off those with responsibility to take action.

I think this is something we must be aware of, and we must see that our reactions are humane and based on our conscience, but are responsible and continuing, so that we simply have a greater part to play in the affairs as they come in. The last item of this nature, one that was brought to me as the local representative last night by two or three young people, were pictures carried in the press and on television of the unfortunate little girl who died on October 10, allegedly as a result of a fall, but which is suspected as being the result of perhaps some other circumstances.

I am sure you can all recall the picture of the smiling young face with the bruise. Once again, our conscience was stirred; it was difficult to know what should be done, but the fact remains. These things and the background associated with them, are a part of life, not in the world at large as a global village, as Marshall McLuhan described it, but in our own backyard, and the realization that inhumanity among our own neighbours, among ourselves, is a real part of even the enlightened modern life.

The last thing I want is to attribute responsibility for any of these cases to individuals here, but really in following up and examining the events of last week and the role of The Department of Social and Family Services, in the care of young children, I had reached some conclusions that I now wish to place before you.

I want to speak briefly about The Department of Social and Family Services in connection with child welfare, and stress the need to improve the services in this area. We have seen how, in the last year, the department refused for most of the year to agree to the budget of the children's aid societies and how by its action forced these societies into a desperate position. With the exception of I believe two of the province's societies, the province and the children's aid societies disagreed on the operating budget and in these cases, the societies had to cut down on what they needed.

Let us see what these cuts mean to Ontario's children. First, let me say that the research on this subject was done with great hardship, because the Minister's office or the people under his direction, have warned societies that they are not to discuss programmes financed by the government without clearing such discussions with the department. This is an unheard of abuse by the department and it is sheer hypocrisy for the members opposite, to deliberately spike any investigation of the use of government money.

My hon. friends across the aisle may not believe it, but they do not own this province, and the money they spend is given them in trust for the people of this province. Therefore, I submit they have an obligation to ensure that programmes under their care are closely scrutinized, in fact, they should welcome such scrutiny. I warn them that they are playing a serious game.

The taxpayers of Ontario will not allow nervous Ministers to use the Legislature in this manner and we will not tolerate such high-handedness. Furthermore, they will have to face up to the fact that this is not a police state. There are in Ontario men and women who will speak when and as they see fit, in the public interest, no matter what threats are made by the department.

The children's aid societies, in the past three years, have come to a new understanding of the nature of the children in their care. They realize that these are not children who have lost their home and parents and come out magically unscathed. They are children who have suffered, sometimes over long periods of time, from inadequate physical and emotional nourishment. When many of them come to the attention of the children's aid societies they are badly damaged, frequently emotionally disturbed. Therefore, the old concept that a run-of-the-mill foster home would give them what they need is becoming out of date.

It is now understood that foster homes must be picked with more care than was formerly the case and that most of all, they must be supported, not with more money to the parents necessarily, but with more and better services that cost real money.

Good foster parents are not content with having an unskilled aid drop in on them once every three months, to find out how things are. They expect that they will be treated as part of the treatment team, that there will be a treatment team to give the child all kinds of care from straightening teeth to psychotherapy. In addition to the children who can use carefully chosen and supervised foster care, there are other arrangements being made, various types of group homes for example.

Finally, there are children who need institutional care, and in this regard it is interesting to note that the Health Minister's grandiose plan, presented here nearly two years ago with such flourish, is probably most noted for its silent demise. The societies can term only Brown Camps for the facilities, on a private basis, that must be part of provincial services.

Another responsibility which the province give the children's aid societies, is for the care of unwed mothers and their children. The province handsomely pays the cost of the care of the child, but makes almost no provision for the emotional care of the mother, and this at a time when the illegitimacy rates, particularly among young mothers, are on the increase, nor does it make provision for her after-care whether or not she keeps the child. The department sloughs off its responsibility to the mother to a network of church homes, and in every important respect, leaves the young mother,

Thirdly, children's aid societies are responsible for protection of children who are being malnourished either physically or mentally by their parents. Every person sitting here today has read with agony, the experience of battered children, yet much of this suffering can be alleviated by societies with adequate staff and facilities to offer families who, for whatever reason, do not properly care for their children.

As the session progresses, I can assure the Minister, that we here will be expanding on what I have said. In spite of whatever attempts he may make to stifle investigations on the department in its working, we will be watching both closely. Let me just say this for now, the province is starving societies who are trying to do a good job. There is no agency in this province that is getting from the provincial government, the money it needs to do the job it should be doing.

Furthermore, it is under constant harassment by the Minister and his department, first, with the threat of further cuts in money, and secondly with the threat of a provincial take-over, the possibility which can only lead to worse service if one is to judge by the department records to date.

The Minister is not present, but I would like to put a few questions on the record for his perusal. First, are the budgets of children's aid societies to be cut in the coming year, so that the department can pass on the fiscal nightmare and make it the nightmare of others? Secondly, what does the Minister plan to do so that agencies will learn at the beginning of the year and not near the end, exactly what money will be available? Thirdly, particularly in view of the fact that eight people have left the child welfare branch in the last year, is the Minister considering taking over voluntary children's aid societies?

John Doe, a great educator, once said that what the best and wisest parents want for their own child, the community must want for all its children. If the treatment of children's aid societies by the present government were to be taken as a guide, we would have to conclude that we do not want much for our youngsters.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to conclude my remarks by making some comments on the upcoming constitutional conference. I referred to it earlier in my remarks by chastising the Premier and his advisers for appearing to threaten the government of Canada with opting out of these discussions—it is a fact—opting out of these discussions, unless there were some more reasonable accommodation to the government's other requirements. There is no doubt that this is the attitude taken by the government, at least interpreted in news reports that were available to me and to the citizens of this province.

I would say, Mr. Speaker, that this matter is far too important to be treated as an ancillary project in our effort to gain a larger share of federal abatement. There are some matters of great concern that will be, I am sure, discussed in a responsible way at the conference that is to be held in the middle of December.

At the top of the agenda, must surely be the proposal to entrench a bill of rights in the constitution of our nation, and pass ancillary companion legislation in the provincial Legislature. This is something that I felt was not treated seriously by the Ontario administration when it was proposed by the then Minister of Justice. I hope that we will take another look at the situation, and be prepared to support the proposals from whatever source they may come.

I personally believe that we must take very definite steps to at least set in motion, procedures which will eventually repatriate the constitution of our nation. There are those who are quick to say, that The British North America Act is in fact not a constitution. It makes an interesting argument. We must accept the fact, that legislation from Westminster is what actually assigns the responsibilities to us as members of this House, and those people who are elected to the Parliament of Canada, and the Legislatures of the other provinces.

It seems incomprehensible that we are prepared to permit this state of affairs to go on without at least attempting to bring about a change. I well remember the debate and discussion in this House on the Fulton-Favreau formula for the amendment of the constitution whether or not it was kept in its position as a statute of the government of the United Kingdom.

There is an interesting sidelight to the book that was published recently by Peter Newman, "The Distemper of Our Times," in which he indicated that even as the government of Ontario was leading the discussion which was supported eventually in a vote from all sides of the House, to approve the Fulton-Favreau formula as it might apply to Ontario, there was an emissary from the leader of the Conservative Party in Canada,

Mr. Diefenbaker—I stand corrected on that matter, it was, let us say, supported by a majority of the members of the House and there was an emissary coming from the leader of the Conservative Party in Canada, attempting to stop the government of Ontario from proceeding in this way.

A minute had been provided Mr. Diefenbaker indicating that, in fact, there was little difference in the position taken by Mr. Favreau and Mr. Fulton and that he would be quite in order in supporting the approach at a federal level. But we must assume that for political purposes he saw reason to differ with the formula, as, I suppose, there were other reasons for others in the Legislature here for differing from the formula at that time.

Whatever were the results, what had been the results of some careful research and were put before the Legislatures of a number of provinces bore no fruit, and we are no nearer now to the solution of this knotty problem than we were in 1963 and 1964.

Now I would say that this is something that we must come to grips with. There tends to be a reduction in pressure for the amendment of our constitution, perhaps as a result of the Centennial fading into history, but I think that Ontario should take the lead in providing the alternative that should be considered by the other provinces in repatriating our constitution and providing for a reasonable and fair means of amending it.

I think when you look back at fairly recent history, the former Prime Minister Louis St. Laurent took a very practical approach to dividing the sections of The British North America Act into groups which would have different means of being amended. There were those which had only direct and superficial application that would be amended by simple majority motion of the Parliament of Canada, and there were other, more deeply entrenched in the right of all our people and the provinces themselves, which could only be amended by complete agreement among all the provinces.

I feel that some sort of workmanlike approach of this type would be the answer if, in fact, we are going to maintain our support for The British North America Act as our constitution. There are alternatives, of course. I, for one, believe that we should attempt to have an amendment to the Act passed which would remove it from its present lodging in the Parliament at Westminster and bring it back to Canada but this has proved to be an insurmountable difficulty.

The British North America Act, as our constitution, should be abandoned where it now lies, and be replaced by something that is more in keeping with our national aspirations and needs. There is no doubt that the amendment to the constitution should be accompanied by a fairer distribution of revenues and that it should contain, as well, clear distribution of responsibilities. There is no doubt that continuing expansion of the shared cost programme is going to lead us into greater difficulties as far as federal and provincial budgeting is concerned, because we know that the Treasurer is presently sitting over in the Frost Building chairing a meeting of the Treasury Board.

Let us presume that someone from the Ministry of Social and Family Services is before the Treasury Board and he could very readily say that those men might approve the expenditures he is putting forward since 80 per cent of the cost is being met from another jurisdiction. At the same time, I suppose the Treasury Board in Ottawa has the argument put to them, when certain projects are forthcoming, that a large part of the cost is met by another jurisdiction and in fact they can proceed with their approval without having to bear the cost at 100 cents in a dollar.

The Premier is frequently heard to say that there is only one taxpayer, and he is the person whose welfare really does concern us all, and I believe that the restriction in the shared cost programme is going to be in the best interests of the taxpayers concerned, as well as setting out clearly the lines of responsibility which must accompany modern programmes if they are carefully budgeted.

The last point that I would like to raise in this matter is that as a member of this House interested in these particular matters, I am getting increasingly resentful that the advisory committee on constitutional matters restricts its advice to the Ministry alone. I think that the example set by the Legislature in Quebec should be followed here, and that we, in this House, should constitute a standing committee on constitutional affairs and call before it those people—and very able people they are indeed—who presently restrict their advice to the members of the administration, or the Premier and those who accompany him as our provincial delegation to constitutional conferences.

I think that the more widespread involvement we have in this matter, the better, and that a standing committee of the Legislature would be an ideal vehicle to interest the citizens of our province, as well as the members of this House in what has got to be a matter of great concern and high priority to all of us as members.

Mr. Speaker, I have had an opportunity during my reply to the motion, quite a few days ago, for an address to the hon. the Lieutenant Governor, to cover some matters of great concern in this province. I have felt that the primary importance is our need to come to grips with budgetary difficulties that we are experiencing in great measure in this province.

I have mentioned some other matters as well, and all of these have brought me to the conclusion that the administration which is presently conducting our affairs does not, in fact, command the confidence either of this House or of the people of the province.

A great deal has happened in the 12 months since the election in October 1967, and we have revealed the unfortunate state of affairs that has been put before you in the last few days. And with this in mind, Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by Mr. Singer, the following amendment to the reply to the Speech from the Throne:

That this House regrets that the government

1. Has failed to conduct the province's financial affairs responsibly and neglected to cause an independent and all-embracing study of its programmes and administrative procedures to be made.

2. Has failed to protect tenants' rights and to insure adequate housing for the people of Ontario at a fair price, including a system of permissive rent control.

3. Has neglected the proper development of the northern part of the province of Ontario, and by the lack of a sound policy toward the north and its natural resources, the government has thereby failed to promote the economic well-being and prosperity of all the people of Ontario.

4. Has failed to provide educational opportunity, facilities, and financing to insure that all Ontario students have an equal access to our educational institutions, and has failed to develop an effective policy to meet the unrest on our university campuses.

5. Has failed to provide suitable programmes which would allow our agricultural community to realize their fair share of the benefits available to other segments of our economy.

6. Has, by its inaction, allowed the pollution of air, water, and land to worsen.

7. Has failed to insure equal access to proper medical care for all our people.

8. Has failed to plan for the proper economic development of our province.

9. Has failed to bring about meaningful reform to our ancient and inefficient system of municipal government and, therefore, that your government does not enjoy the confidence of this House.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, on first hearing of that rather comprehensive amendment, I am sure that there are some things that have been missed and after a night's contemplation, I am sure I will discover them. It is in the category of what is sometimes referred to as the "kitchen sink" amendment—everything is in it.

Now, in beginning a Throne Speech, Mr. Speaker, it is traditional to pay tribute to you and to express appreciation for your contribution to the business of this Legislature. I do so with a particular feeling of sympathy for you this year.

I think we have reached a crossroads in the history of this Legislature in terms of the evolution and clarification of the rules of the House. It has become very obvious in recent days, and perhaps never more obvious than today, that, as we seek to restrict and impose balanced rules on the government side of the House—rules which I have suggested to you privately and publicly and, therefore, I am not saying anything new, have already been imposed to a considerable degree on the Opposition—that you are going to face some considerable objections from a government which has traditionally, from my early days in the House, regarded the Speaker as a puppet of their side of the House.

Indeed, I recall very distinctly an occasion when something little short of shock appeared on the face of the then Prime Minister when the Speaker suggested that he was breaching the rules of the House—he did not have the floor and he should sit down. He was literally shocked. No Speaker had ever told him that he should have to live up to the rules of the House.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Who was that?

Mr. MacDonald: Oh, I will leave you to guess. As a matter of fact, we had something approaching the same kind of reaction today from the Provincial Treasurer. He is reaching boiling point in terms of having to live up to the rules of this House, so I repeat, Mr. Speaker—

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): He was teasing you and you did not realize it.

Mr. MacDonald: If the Prime Minister thinks that he was teasing us, the Prime Minister has more trouble on his hands than he realizes, because the hon. gentleman was not teasing anybody; he was about ready to take on anybody, including the Speaker. It started last Thursday or Friday when he was indignant at the thought that some restriction should be imposed on the abuse by the Treasury benches in reply to questions.

I do not want to pursue this any more, Mr. Speaker. You have indicated that you are going to set up a committee to examine the rules. I think—and this is where my expression of sympathy comes—you have on this side of the House a feeling that the situation is nearly intolerable; you have on the other side of the House considerable feeling that if there is any change for an equal application of the rules of the House, it becomes intolerable for them. So all I can say is that your role will have to be something of a Solomon and I wish you well.

Unfortunately, our newest Cabinet Minister is not with us this afternoon and this is really going to take a little of the fun out of the game. Between each session there is the usual game of musical chairs and the Prime Minister has not failed us again this time—he has brought a new man into the Cabinet. He is a man who brings to his new responsibilities undoubted abilities, plus experience as chairman of the taxation committee, which is going to stand not only him but this Legislature in good stead.

But Mr. Speaker, from experience on this side of the House, we have learned that the hon. Minister vacillates unpredictably from being a serious public servant, dealing objectively and rationally with public issues, to a self-appointed hatchet man for the Tory party, resorting to barracking tactics that would make the members of the Chicago gang to his right look like a group of pikers.

In short, the new Minister is a veritable Dr. Jeckyll and Mr. Hyde. For his own sake—and he will read this even if he does not hear it—I hope that he will forsake this hatchet role, for too often his tactics in that capacity have been unworthy of the talent of the man.

However, before I leave this I want to recall one incident of recent vintage that I think is rather pertinent in light of his new responsibilities. In unveiling the report of the select committee on taxation, he was detailing with great enthusiasm the proposal of the extension of the sales tax to include food and then compensation, a very elaborate compensation, by way of a tax rebate—which he argued was going to be in the form of a negative income tax that would open the door to a guaranteed annual income. It was all very fanciful, but it had magnificent propaganda overtones and the hon. gentleman declared triumphantly: "If I were a member of the Opposition, I would be scared to death."

Mr. Speaker, I would just like to report to him that there was nobody on our side of the House, at least in this group, who was scared to death, but what is even more interesting is that subsequent events have revealed just who was scared to death. I will tell you who it was—the members of the Tory party.

The prospect of having to defend the extension of the sales tax to food, along with this very elaborate, and likely unworkable under this government, rebate system, was such that it produced little short of political panic among the Tory back benchers. So much so that the Prime Minister on the eve of this session rescued all his—

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Trade and Development): He did not want to ruin all your speeches for some weeks.

Mr. MacDonald: That is an interesting interjection—"he did not want to ruin all our speeches". I do not know what his objection was in taking this issue out of debate because he certainly got all the Tories off the hook and they came in here with a degree of relaxation, with the exception, of course, of the Provincial Treasurer, who was "white-lipped and quivering".

My final word to the absent Minister is that I hope that his partisan enthusiasms are not going to carry him away in the fashion that they sometimes do. I hope that in his new position he can exercise some of that discipline of which I know he is capable. Has the Prime Minister got something to add?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to interrupt. It is just that it appears to me he has reached you in the last couple of years.

Mr. MacDonald: Oh, he has reached a lot of people. As a matter of fact, his career is rather an interesting one. I can remember the time when he thought he was going to exercise the role of self appointed hatchet man by tackling the former leader of the Opposition following a famous speech on crime. Having tackled him, he then provoked the spectacle of the leader going out and reading the whole speech in the hall so that all the Tory back benchers were embarrassed by the spectacle of what had been produced.

Mr. Nixon: There has not been a fall session since.

Hon. Mr. Randall: We are still here, where is the leader?

Mr. MacDonald: Fine. Now let me proceed to the seconder of the motion, who again is not here. This element of truancy in the House which has become the preoccupation of the government side when some people from the New Democratic Party are not here, is rather interesting—but the absence of government members of the House is something that, presumably, can be overlooked.

The hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Jessiman) spent a great deal of time trying to make political hay out of the recent New Democratic Party leadership convention and, indeed, the leader of the Opposition apparently, at some stages in his speech, had so little else to offer that he too, got in on the game.

Mr. Nixon: Irresistible.

Mr. MacDonald: It obviously was irresistible. The vacuum had to be filled with something. Both of these gentlemen, Mr. Speaker, are obviously exasperated, even infuriated, by the indisputable fact that the New Democratic Party is united and stronger than it ever was before.

Mr. Nixon: That is for local consumption.

Mr. R. M. Johnston (St. Catharines): Just a dreamer.

Mr. MacDonald: All this huffing and puffing is not going to alter that fact. What we had, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): You are getting to him.

Mr. MacDonald: What we had, Mr. Speaker, to quote the Prime Minister—at this point obviously I am getting to them—what we had, Mr. Speaker, in the last session of the Legislature, was a New Democratic Party that was strong enough in the 1967 election to win 290,000 more votes. While the Tory party was going down 30,000 and dropping seven per cent of the total. While the Liberal Party was staying the same, but dropping four per cent of the total, we were picking up that 10 or 11 per cent increase. That was the New Democratic Party, Mr. Speaker, of the last session. I know, Mr. Speaker, that people on that side of the House—

Mr. Nixon: What did you say about filling a vacuum?

Mr. MacDonald: I will tell you, Mr. Speaker, as well as the hon. member for Oxford. I told it to a whole convention including the hon. member for Riverdale and we saw the result—they believed it. So just listen because you should believe it too, if you want to live with the facts.

You see, Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House would like to argue that what happened with the New Democratic Party in the last election was not much of an achievement; that indeed, it was something of a failure. Well, Mr. Speaker, just let me say to anybody who wants advanced that argument—

Mr. Nixon: And who will listen.

Mr. MacDonald: —that a projection of what happened in the last election, the gains and the losses, no more and no less, shows that in the next election the New Democratic Party will emerge as the largest single party in the province—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: The Tories dropped in popular vote from 49 per cent to 42 per cent; a similar drop once again will bring them down to 35 per cent. This is an interesting little numbers game and rather a significant one. The Liberals came down from 35 to 31; a similar drop will bring them down to 27 per cent. The New Democratic Party came up from 16 to 27 and will do it again, to put it at 38 per cent—the largest single party in terms of popular vote. At that level the seats will fall.

However, Mr. Speaker, what I have been talking about is the New Democratic Party you saw in the last session. What you are going to see, Mr. Speaker, in this session, in case it has missed your attention, is a New Democratic Party which has certainly examined its weaknesses and strengths.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Oh, I know that the Tories do not think that they have any weaknesses.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: The hon. member is right.

Mr. MacDonald: Everybody knows the Liberals have weaknesses, but you do not think you have. We have examined our weaknesses and our strengths and our members know exactly what must be done to win the next election. What is more important is that they have gone home to start doing the job right now. This party, Mr. Speaker, has a basic strength and unity such that it can cope with the tensions of a leadership campaign.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Who wrote that, Donald?

Mr. MacDonald: I always write my own speeches. I wish I could say the same for you.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I will get you to write mine the next time.

Mr. MacDonald: Right. We will certainly improve it.

Our differences were one of emphasis. They have been reviewed by our authoritative body, namely the convention. We have now returned to that great area that we hold in common. The leader is back, Mr. Speaker, with a strong renewal of mandate; the deputy leader is back with the unanimous support of the caucus, and I give you fair warning that this government's trusteeship is going to be subjected to the most detailed and revealing analysis that has ever taken place in this Legislature.

An hon. member: Old home week.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, welcome back. The bridge game is over, is it?

Mr. R. M. Johnston: Carry on—

Mr. MacDonald: I would just say, Mr. Speaker, through you to the hon. members on the other side, that if this inflicts upon them too much pain and suffering, they have my permission to leave.

An hon. member: Quit the foolishness, carry on.

Another hon. member: That is the truth.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I want to suggest seriously to the other side of the House that perhaps it is time they began to look at their own problems and not dwell on the problems that they think exist with the New Democratic Party, because this government is crumbling of its own dead weight and old age. Every year it gets more and more out of touch with the people and more insensitive to their needs.

Do not accept my word for it, because I know you will consider my words to be tinged with partisanship, but I have been interested, in the last two or three months, in reading the papers to hear of leading people in the Conservative Party publicly moaning and groaning about the plight of the party and what they have got to do if they are going to avoid catastrophe in the next election.

I remember picking up the Globe and Mail over my cup of coffee one morning and reading some unnamed top official of the party—and I can quite understand why he should be unnamed when he made this sort of a comment—saying that in the next election, with John Robarts as leader of the party, the best they could expect was to come back with a minority government. I reflected on that, and my only reaction was, it was a little optimistic.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Can I do better?

Mr. J. Jessiman (Fort William): Sure he can.

Mr. MacDonald: I will turn to an acknowledged voice of Toryism. The Hamilton Spectator, which has been a regular and faithful exponent of Toryism and supporter of this party down through the years. A few weeks ago—as a matter of fact, on October 18—W. F. Gold, an editorial writer for that paper, had an article under his byline. He came out and identified his authorship with his byline.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Is the member sure he is not NDP?

Mr. MacDonald: I have often been impressed with his intelligence, and was more impressed when I read this. Therefore, what you say, I think, is not an impossibility. However, that is a decision he will have to make. However, let me quote Mr. Gold:

Ontario's powerful Conservative machine is showing signs of running down. If the decline is not halted in the next 18 months it could reach fatal proportions by election time 1971.

People have been making such dire predictions, of course, ever since a rambunctious Col. George Drew re-established Tory rule at Queen's Park by a whisker in 1943. But the government is getting older now and more vulnerable.

Ironically, as is the case with most aging administrations, the fault lies not so much in its conduct of the art of government as such, but in the gradually hardening attitudes, its general frame of mind, and its slowing, calcifying responses to the people.

These latter characteristics were amply and repellingly demonstrated in this region just a few months ago as the government employed every political tactic in the book—short of telling the truth and really coming to grips with the issue—to circumvent, squash, mislead and generally head off an aroused public opinion over the question of the route of the Dundas bypass highway through the beautiful valley wilderness.

This is the calcified approach that manifested itself once again, Mr. Speaker.

Voters from other areas all over the province have similar stories to tell. They have run into arrogance and rigidity whether the point at issue was roads, grants or whatever.

A feeling of general uneasiness is creeping into the party structure as well. Repeated rumours are going the rounds that John Robarts plans to step down within a year. Certainly any man deserves to, after seven years in so rough a job. Yet from the pragmatic political standpoint, his departure may be necessary.

Ontarians may have applauded his statesmanship which led to the Confederation for Tomorrow conference but they are getting a little weary of lectures on public finance which he has begun to deliver in recent months. These speeches have in effect scolded the public for profligacy in its demands, thus missing the point that it was the Conservative government of the day which implemented these spending plans, often without any demand at all. Witness the homeowners' tax exemption which is costing $150 million this year. . . .

And finally, 25 years is a long time. Normal political prudence would have dictated a very modest and almost silent celebration of that anniversary a few months ago. Instead, the assembled faithful pulled out the stops and made an enormous amount of noise, thus succeeding in reminding everyone just exactly how old this somewhat tired government actually is.

Its handling of patronage is becoming steadily more clumsy and capricious, and anachronisms like the dictatorial powers of the liquor board producing increasing resentment, and the signs of a change are too little, too late.

More important is the lack of a coherent policy towards the large cities. Here the problem is basic comprehension, plain and simple.

And if I may interject, it simply does not exist in the government ranks.

The men in the power structure simply do not understand the functioning and problems of urban areas and this will cost them dearly.

I put it on the record, Mr. Speaker; not my views of a paper which normally is quite friendly to this government.

However, just one more bit so that the record will be complete. If I may go back to that Tory pocket borough of yesteryear, namely Victoria-Haliburton, I was most interested to read a clipping that came over my desk from Lindsay. It is dated October 31, not very long ago, and says:

Disenchantment with the Tory party in Ontario was clearly evident in remarks made by several speakers at the annual meeting Wednesday of the Victoria-Haliburton riding P.C. Association.

Ironically, most of the condemnation was voiced by three ex-wardens of Victoria county. These long-time staunch Tories took the government to task for dictatorial policies as well as high education and welfare costs.

"In the past we had government serving the people, now governments have us serving them," declared John Alton of Lorneville. "Men of the stature of John Diefenbaker and Leslie Frost made one feel proud to be a Tory. It was during their time as leaders that this country enjoyed its greatest progress," he maintained. Issuing a warning that "the people are ready for revolt"—

Imagine! Victoria-Haliburton and the people are ready for revolt!

—Reeve Wilbert Worsley of Fenelon township declared, "The government is getting away from the people."

And just to prove the point and cap the whole thing, the sitting member from the area is quoted thus:

The long and arduous sessions of the Ontario Legislature were cited in a speech here Wednesday as one of the reasons why government is getting away from the people. "We just don't have time to get together with the people any more," declared MPP Glen Hodgson, when addressing the annual meeting of the Victoria-Haliburton riding P.C. Association. "Government is getting to be business rather than serving the people."

We are here for five months of the year, only five months of the year, and I tell this government we will be here longer before we are here shorter, make no mistake about it. Yet it is impossible for the Tories to have contact with the people. Let me tell you—we have no trouble in getting contact with the people, whether it is in Picton or you name it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): The hon. member can look inscrutable but he is not fooling us.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, if the Cabinet members have all had their opportunity to have their say perhaps I can get back into the picture here.

I would like to take briefly some examples, by way of documentation, of the insensitivity of this government, its failure to meet the needs of the people. I am not going to go into detail on them; my colleagues will have opportunity later in the Throne Debate and in the estimates to get into the detail. But let me start with that area with which this government is so preoccupied because it has traditionally been its area of strength—rural Ontario, the farmers. I was very interested that after the most careful examination of the new expropriation bill, which has just been brought before us, I found nothing in the expropriation bill to deal with the particular problems that have been faced by agriculture in expropriation.

Farmers are not just homeowners, and farmers are not just business men. And I suggest if you go back and look at the kind of thing that farmers have faced in terms of expropriation from The Department of Highways, particularly in such events, for example, as the Pittock dam in the Woodstock area, there are peculiar problems with regard to expropriation. After such careful examination of this issue, the government brings in a bill which reflects nothing of these particular problems at all. We will have an opportunity a little later, Mr. Speaker, to look into this.

If I may move on to a second point—this fall we have witnessed the spectacle of the United States authorities challenging exorbitant price increases in automobiles, and as a result of the pressure, we finally have a rollback in car prices. We in the New Democratic Party have been trying to get the government in Ottawa to stop the kind of huffing and puffing that Mr. Sharp was engaged in for a time, but he would not follow through with any action; or to get this government, through a prices review board, to look into the exorbitant price increases in the automobile industry, because most of it is right in this province.

During the course of the past few months there has come out of Washington some fascinating evidence. For years nobody has ever been able to get from the automobile industry the cost of making cars, but that incorrigible digger, Ralph Nader, has gotten the information and it is being submitted to a congressional committee under Senator Gaylord Nelson's chairmanship in Washington, and now they are examining it. They have discovered that while the price increases are relatively acceptable as between the manufacturer and his sales to the dealer, what happens on parts and other things is really scandalous.

A four-door Galaxie 500, for example, costs the dealer 16.8 per cent more than it costs the builder to make, but optional equipment, usually amounting to a third of the selling price, was marked up anywhere between 57.8 per cent and 293 per cent over cost, according to Nelson's figures.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence (Minister of Mines): To the dealer? The markup is to the dealer?

Mr. MacDonald: The dealer, who is the retailer. The markup to the dealer, right. I am sorry, I missed the significance of the Minister's interjection. The markup to the dealer for the car is 16 per cent, but on these parts, it is up to as high as 293 per cent, and this, of course, is where the great profits are made.

What is this government going to do? What is the federal government going to do about this kind of a situation in Canada? Do we have to count on a certain situation in Washington being such as to force the president of the United States to move, so that we in Canada can get relief from this exorbitant gouging of the consumers? If the government at Ottawa signed a Canada-U.S. auto pact and is not willing to make certain that the consumers benefit as they are entitled to benefit under that pact—after the management has benefitted from a $50 million handout, in effect, out of the public treasury—is this government willing to move in this kind of proposition?

Mr. O. F. Villeneuve (Glengarry): It is the federal government.

Mr. MacDonald: It is not just the federal government. The federal government has some responsibility but this government can establish a prices review board and get at the facts and provide the facts to the public. This is what this government is unwilling to do.

Let me read one other comment here in this news story.

Despite requests by the Justice Department, the federal safety officials, the Automobile Union and other organizations, General Motors, Ford and Chrysler have refused to voluntarily reveal the cost of building an auto.

In other words we have to operate in the dark. We can do as we please with the inevitable, irresistible, increase each year in Canada, unjustified under the Canada-U.S. Auto Pact. I take the word of a former provincial Finance Minister of this country, Mr. Sharp, when he was in that position. Here is one area where the government has simply walked away from its responsibilities.

I move on to another area. All throughout the fall this government has sought to persuade the federal government to go back on its Medicare commitment—even though it has taken us 50 years to get the Liberals to accept the Medicare commitment in this country. Always we are told it is going to cost too much. When is this government going to face the facts? The fact that this government is now subsidizing all of the high risks in the province of Ontario. Figures that became available from a survey last spring indicate that the total Ontario cost for Medicare today, what is being paid by the government and what is being paid by individuals, is $465 million. The total cost if we went into the federal Medicare Plan would be $450 million. In other words, it would be less.

I was interested just two or three weeks ago—October 23 to be exact—to find that somebody asked a question in the federal House with regard to the average per capita cost of physicians' services in this country. We have listened for the last two or three years to spokesmen of this government, saying that the total cost, most of which is made up in physicians' services, is in the range, in the province of Ontario, of some $48. We get into constant wrangling as to what are the accurate figures.

Well, here is the latest little figure for you to take a look at. The average per capita cost of physicians' services in Canada in 1966, the latest year for which data was available, was $33.45, or $2.99 a month. On the basis of preliminary observations, it is estimated that the corresponding figure for January, 1968, was $3.26 per month, or $39.12 for the year.

Now, if you examine the breakdown for the provinces, for Ontario it is $35.55. If you project an increase to the beginning of 1968, it will take you into the range of $40 to $42. How does one square this with the $48 or the $50 figures which are going up each time this government uses them? I have given the most recent official figures.

I suggest that this government is indulging in high figures for the purpose of scaring the public out of Medicare. It is an utterly shameful proposition that a Tory government should pretend to be in favour of Medicare and should be assisting the Liberals to get out of a commitment that it took them 50 years to have the guts to implement in statutes. And then to cap the climax, a week or so ago, we have still another increase in Medicare costs in the province of Ontario, with a unilateral, unnegotiated, increase in doctors' fees. I asked the Minister of Health yesterday whether he knew about it. He replied that he got a letter saying that it was going to be done. We have listened in this country to the federal and the provincial governments moan and groan about exorbitant increases that are inflationary and are wrecking our whole economy. There are great lectures delivered to the workers and to others, but the doctors do as they please and the Minister gets a letter telling him that it is done and nothing more happens. When I asked the Minister whether he feels it is a tolerable proposition to have to be handed unilaterally announced increases in fees from the profession which is the highest paid profession in the province of Ontario, he says "we hope to work out some sort of an agreement with them". It is about time that this government had the courage to act on behalf of the people of the province of Ontario. It is simply because they have not got the courage to act on behalf of the people of the province of Ontario, and bow and scrape in front of every vested interest who dictates from behind the scenes, that you are crumbling in the eyes of the people of this province.

Mrs. M. Renwick (Scarborough Centre): Where is the Health Minister?

Mr. MacDonald: Where is the Health Minister?—that is another good point. Let us take a look at the housing Minister because if there is any Minister who is bringing questions and disrepute upon this government more than the hon. Minister of Trade and Development, I cannot figure whom it might be. The Minister is barnstorming, not only across the whole of the province of Ontario, but across the world. He is in Tokyo today, he is in Bonn tomorrow; when it is the job of somebody—and if not this Minister then let him get out of it and get somebody else to do it—to tackle the housing problem in the province.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: Is there anyone who has any doubt that this is to him?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: I will tell you—in the last election we got within 800 votes in Don Mills, so just go home and tend to your knitting because it cannot be attended to in Bonn or Tokyo. Mr. Speaker, I am not interested in the Minister's production of figures which are usually on the basis of a project in which has given us two or three earlier sets of figures. The earlier sets of figures meant nothing and it is likely that the latest one will not mean anything. We have simply got to build houses in greater numbers in this province of Ontario. Until we do something about a vacancy rate, which in the metropolitan areas is one, or less than one per cent, and until you have got over that problem, there is no point in this Minister, who can sell refrigerators to Eskimos, or any other preposterous proposition of that nature, trying to kid the public that the housing situation has been solved—it has not.

Hon. Mr. Randall: How many were built in Saskatchewan in 21 years?

Mr. MacDonald: I am not interested in how many were built in Saskatchewan. I am interested in how many you have not built in the province of Ontario, that is the important thing.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order.

Mr. MacDonald: Does the Minister want the floor for a moment?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, go ahead.

Mr. MacDonald: Let us take a look at another point in this Minister's department. We have only got to examine with great care the kind of abuse of the public treasury which this Minister is engaging in, in his so-called "forgiveness grants"—"forgiveness loans"—We desperately need a balance in economic development in the province of Ontario. There was a day when this government operated on the proposition that if some company that happens to be a marginal company, but in the assessment of the appropriate officers of this government, may well have had a contribution to make—if they cannot get their money from the traditional sources for capital, then let them come to the government and the government will assist them.

That was a questionable proposition, because it meant that the government underwrote the worst risks, but at least the government was trying to build in those areas where we do not have economic development.

Today we have a fatuous proposition. The richer the company is and the more resources it has, the more certain, this Minister told us just two days ago, it is that they can get a loan, a "forgiveness loan."

Let us face a fundamental fact here, Mr. Speaker. If a company is going to build in any area it is going to build because there is a prospect for long-term profits. Otherwise, it is not going to go into it. And therefore, what it amounts to, in the instance of some of these well-established companies that have large reserves, is a straight hand-out of the public treasury that is not needed at all. If a company has got reserves of tens, or hundreds of millions of dollars, this Minister is just handing out up to $500,000 which goes into private pockets; they do not need it any more than E. P. Taylor needs the $20,000 a year to train his horses.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: Well they have got most of the new factories.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: Talk to the Crane employees in Port Hope, or talk to the company whose position I drew to the Minister's attention earlier today where they got, I think, a grant in July for something over $200,000—I seek confirmation of the exact amount. They have laid off 60 people since they got the grant; they are in the process of further outlays. What kind of a proposition is this? This is abuse of the public Treasury.

This government is so penny pinching, it is examining with the greatest of care, grants to students. It examines with the greatest of care the overpayment of $75 or so in a welfare cheque, and it hounds that little man until he has paid it back. It has examined savings so carefully that out in the Whitby hospital, patients who are working in the hospital and were paid five to ten cents an hour, have now had their pay reduced to two cents an hour. It examines all these things so carefully. Yet with reckless abandon it will hand $500,000 to a company to establish in some part of the province, when that company has reserves that are such that they have no need of the $500,000 at all.

In short, Mr. Speaker, here is not only an indication of where the government is not fulfilling the objectives of a programme, it is abusing the public Treasury for its friends in the business world—American friends at that.

Well we will take a further look at that at some later time.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: I will proceed to another point Mr. Speaker. For years, this government has refused to deal with sources of friction in labour-management relations. Ten years ago, I happened to be a member of a select committee of this Legislature which made reports with regard to the streamlining and modernizing of The Labour Relations Act. I have said it many times before, but apparently it has to be said again—one of the unanimous recommendations was, for example, the getting rid of ex parte injunctions—a unanimity that was shared by eight Tory members, six of whom were in the Cabinet then, have been since, or are in the Cabinet now.

What have they done about it? Nothing. Because people behind the scenes in the business and management world wanted to keep ex parte injunctions. A gross violation of British justice, and this government was willing to do it. Then last year, or two years ago when we had the Oshawa and the Tilco situation, and the injunction issue flared up and caused a great public furor, what did this government do? Did it dust off that ten-year-old unanimous recommendation about ex parte injunctions? No.

It set up another Royal commission, and now we have backed into a set of proposals from an old gentleman whose mind is a legal mind, and who has produced a legal strait-jacket which is going to compound our difficulties and produce industrial strife instead of industrial peace in the province of Ontario if this government ever proceeds to implementing it.

Twenty-five years ago, even the Tories recognized that labour-management relationships were basically a problem of human relationships—not legal questions. Therefore, they took the whole question of labour-management relationships out of the regular courts and put them in a special court with labour and management and impartial chairmen sitting on that court.

Now we will have a proposal which is the result of this government refusing to deal with the issue in light of recommendations from ten years ago. We now have a proposal from Mr. Justice Rand for a legal strait-jacket, which is going to get us into incomparable difficulties.

We saw some of these difficulties when we went down to Picton the other day. There we have a case of a management refusing to bargain in good faith throughout a whole year. This union was certified December 27 last year. They even refused to grant the minimum wages which this government has finally implemented at disgracefully low levels. Even those low levels this company refuses to implement in a contract.

Once again, because of the laws of this province, they have been able to invoke the whole weight of the court on their side through an injunction, and they are now in the process of breaking the union through the gradual replacement of its working force, and this government sits on the sidelines and does nothing about it.

The government prattles about the importance of unions while perpetuating laws which make it possible for recalcitrant management to break legitimate collective bargaining units in areas where they are imposing sub-marginal wages.

Mr. Speaker, this is the kind of thing that the people in this province are not going to tolerate any longer. They are going to fight on the issue, and quite frankly when they fight, we in the New Democratic Party are going to be with them.

I could go into the farm, into the welfare field, into the health field, into any field at all, and find the same kind of growing insensitivity to the needs of the people on the part of a government which is frustrated because of its commitments to vested interests, and cannot move to meet the needs of the people.

That is the reason why the image of this government has deteriorated more and more in the last two or three months, and their friends are pointing it out clearly. We do not have to point it out.

Mr. Speaker, if you wanted any further proof of the bankruptcy of this government, you have it in the Throne Speech—of all the vacuous documents! The Prime Minister said that they finalized the writing of the Throne Speech so late they did not have the time to get it translated into French in time for the opening day. For the life of me, I cannot figure out what this government was doing that they had to delay. Because there was nothing in the speech.

It was contemptuously empty of substance. So the result is that we in this Legislature, for the next two or three weeks have got to operate within a vacuum in a Throne Debate, guessing at what this government is going to do.

I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, and I pass this on to the government rather seriously since it presumes it is the body most intent in protecting some of our old and historically honoured procedures, that a few more vacuous speeches like that, and a lot more people are going to be persuaded that it is time we got rid of some of the meaningless folderol of the opening day of the Legislature.

It has been put on the record in this House, what people like Bill Rathbun—he has now been taken to the bosom of the government, so they must think he is a pretty good fellow—had to say about the empty procedures of this Legislature on its opening day, and to cap the climax, we have this kind of a Throne Speech.

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): No wild river this year.

Mr. MacDonald: No, not even the relief of wild rivers. Well, Mr. Speaker, I have a few things that I want to say that might have been dealt with in the Throne Speech and I can assure you, whether they are in the Throne Speech or not, they are going to be dealt with in the course of this session. So I will proceed to them. We just hope that, with the expropriation bill, and some other things that are perhaps going to meet the needs of the people, the government will inject some substance into their vacuous programme so that we can spend our time a little bit more usefully between now and Christmas.

The first topic that I want to touch upon, Mr. Speaker, has to do with the Indian situation or the problems with relation to Indians in the province of Ontario.

During the Throne Debate a year ago, I detailed at some length, the shameful conditions under which Canada's Indian population live and work. I placed on record proposals for a fundamentally new approach to Indian affairs which had just been advanced by the Indian-Eskimo association with the apparent support and approval of the Ontario Union of Indians.

These proposals involved an almost complete decentralization of the present responsibilities of the Indian Affairs branch in Ottawa to the provinces—indeed, all of the responsibilities, except those pertaining to treaties and lands.

It was argued that if the social and economic welfare of our Indian population were to be more fully met, it could be done if programmes were worked out by the provincial government, particularly since most of the resources—land, timber minerals, game, water, fish and hydro power—the keys to the welfare of Indians, lie within provincial jurisdiction.

Unfortunately, during the past year, tragically little has been done to achieve this objective. At the moment, I do not want to go into the details of the programme. There will be other opportunities during this session and many of my colleagues will use them.

My interest, at this time, is to consider the broad outlines of overall policy and the difficulties which lie in the way of achieving those changes concerning which there is a growing consensus of support.

Let me make this point first. Canada's treatment of its native Indian population has been such a shameful record that we have escaped the consequences of our action for longer than we deserve. The Indians have had the patience of the gods in face of grave injustices. As a people, they have been docile. But all that is rapidly coming to an end. Observers cannot have missed some rather significant changes in recent months.

The normal orderly pattern of meetings has been disrupted by a vigorous protest of Indian leaders. They have demanded, and sometimes with too little grace, have been accorded a place on agendas designed to consider their plight.

Cabinet Ministers, both federal and provincial, have been sharply confronted both in meetings and hotel lobbies. At long last, Indian leaders are no longer docile. There is a ferment and unrest which carries the clear warning that either governments grapple more effectively with Indian problems, particularly by granting Indians greater opportunities to shape their own destiny, or Canada is going to experience the same kind of violent protest which has emerged in many other countries with minority groups.

Speaking in Burlington early in October, Omer Peters, who is both president of the Ontario Union of Indians and president of the Indian-Eskimo Association of Canada bluntly warned that organized militant Canadian Indians are teaching riot instigation techniques all across the country. Red power groups are emerging. There is grave danger that solutions will soon be made all the more difficult because of their activity. Time is running out. Already we face the prospect of having to pay a heavy price for years, decades, even centuries of neglect and procrastination, and at our peril can we delay any longer?

As one news report put it: "Get off my back, white man," was the message coming through the politics and intrigue of the conference of the Indian-Eskimo Association held in Toronto here this fall.

At the federal level, Mr. Speaker, there has been an unprecedented re-examination of government policy. Chretien, Andras and Co. have conducted seminars with native people all across the country. This whole process has been shadowed by a growing feeling among Indians and Eskimos that once again Ottawa is going paternalistically to decide what should be done with our native peoples, committing once again the fatal error. Whatever is done must be done for the most part, by decision of the Indians themselves.

But it is too early to prejudge what will come of this fundamental review. Native peoples are hopeful and their hopes still outweigh their apprehensions. Their mood is perhaps summed up in the comment of one Indian leader, "If this is another snow job, it will be the last one."

Let me, however, turn to the Ontario government situation because it is our immediate concern. Here the apprehensions are not relieved by any significant measure of hope.

Perhaps I can best set the context of my criticisms of this government's failure and intolerable procrastination by quoting for

hon. members, the remarks of the president of the Ontario Indian-Eskimo Association at its recent annual meeting. The gentleman in question is the Reverend John A. MacKenzie, an active Progressive Conservative, who unsuccessfully sought the federal nomination of his party in a central Toronto riding last spring.

This is what Mr. MacKenzie had to say:

While there are signs that the federal government is beginning to re-evaluate its policies with the involvement of Indians and recognize that policies must be implemented on the terms of the Indians and not the white man, we are increasingly disturbed by the failure of the government of Ontario to fulfill its role.

The Indian Development Branch of The Department of Social and Family Services has been in operation for over two years. The stated position of the Ontario government is to recognize Indians as one of many ethnic groups, but to treat them the same as all other groups. Furthermore, Prime Minister Robarts recently stated that his government intends to integrate Indians into Ontario society.

The position of Ontario fails to recognize that almost all other ethnic groups in Canada come from a western culture while Indians have a qualitatively different, and perhaps unique, cultural heritage. The first step for progress in Ontario is the unequivocal recognition of these differences which include the recognition of a special status for Indians because of their treaty rights.

The Indian-Eskimo Association has repeatedly made known to the government our position (and that of the Union of Ontario Indians) that community development should be removed from direct government control, and that a Crown corporation be set up which would be administered in ways which are consistent with the value systems of Indians in Ontario.

The government has informed us that they were listening but that they want to implement and test the programme which they have had under way for two years. We feel that we must now raise some questions about the existing programmes in Ontario.

Despite repeated criticisms by Indian people, some community development officers continue to operate out of the offices which administer welfare programmes. This means that the local community development officer is identified in the minds of the people as having a particular task which is related to welfare. This places him in a position whereby he cannot relate freely to all aspects of community life.

An Indian advisory board has been established by the Ontario Department of Social and Family Services. The terms of reference of the board are somewhat confusing to many Indian people in that the distinction between an advisory board and a decision making body has not been clearly interpreted to the native peoples.

There has been concern expressed that recommendations of the advisory board have not been adequately acted upon by the department. There is further confusion on the use of the advisory boards. Policies affecting them should be discovered and developed in ways which include the community in the decision-making. The government of Ontario has made it clear to the people in the Kensington area in downtown Toronto that no urban renewal would take place without their direct participation in the decision-making process. This same principle must be recognized in working with Indian communities in Ontario. The people who live in the community must play the dominant role in making the decisions which affect their lives.

That is the end of my quote from Mr. MacKenzie for the moment, Mr. Speaker. But from these criticisms of general attitudes of the government, Mr. MacKenzie then proceeded to specifics. He pointed out that the establishment of the Indian Development Branch and the subsequent appointment of community development officers has provided the Indians with new means of expressing their needs and developing initiatives to meet them. But consistently the government has said "NO", with a capital N-O to requests for financial assistance to fulfill the initiatives once the Indians have taken them.

Consider the record. The Indians sought grants to support folk-school projects which are obviously vitally important in their effort to strengthen their cultural heritage and thereby rebuild their self-esteem as a people. The government refused.

The Indian Hall of Fame at the CNE is an obvious symbol of our desire to restore the Indian to his rightful place in our history. Grants were sought for this purpose. The government refused.

A grant was sought for the Canadian Indian Workshop at Waterloo. The government refused.

If the current review of The Indian Act by the federal government is to reflect the views of the Indians themselves, as it must, it was important that representations by Ontario Indians be made as effective as possible. The Union of Ontario Indians sought a one-time grant for a field work project to assist in this critically important endeavour. The government refused.

There is a growing concern about the plight of these Indians who have left the reserves and flocked to the cities. An action research project designed to assist migrant Indian people receiving the joint support of the Metropolitan Toronto Social Planning Council, the Indian Affairs Branch, the Toronto Indian Centre and the Ontario Division of the Indian-Eskimo Association. In spite of this collective effort by, and on behalf of the Indians, the government refused financial assistance.

Having encouraged Indian initiative, Mr. Speaker, this government consistently frustrates its fulfillment. The resulting situation, I suggest to you, is almost more dangerous than if the government had done nothing to begin with. Mr. MacKenzie concluded in his annual report to the Ontario IEA:

The time has come for the Ontario government to reconsider its policies with regard to the Indians before it is too late. The first step, by necessity, must be opening up channels of communication between Indian communities and government branches and departments. It must be recognized that the Indians are adamant about their involvement in the decision-making process.

That is the end of Mr. MacKenzie's comment.

Mr. Speaker, that critique by an organization which works closely with Indians, is both fundamental and far-reaching. I can do no better than present the representations of the Indian-Eskimo Association at the length to which I have done, because they are authoritative. And without hesitation, I say that they have the solid backing of the Ontario New Democratic Party.

Before the government sloughs all this off with that unctuous bravado for which the chairman of the Cabinet committee on Indian affairs—the hon. Minister of Social and Family Affairs (Mr. Yaremko)—is so renowned, let me remind you that essentially the same criticisms have been expressed in this Legislature by government members.

For example, speaking in the Throne Debate last session, the hon. member for Kenora stated:

The consensus in northwestern Ontario is that too often policies and programmes are based on ideas originating in the administrative centres of Ottawa and Toronto, and lack the residents' insight into the problem. The difficulties encountered and the failure rate of such policies and programmes attest to the validity of these views.

Later, the hon. member for Kenora referred to the agreements by which the responsibilities for Indian affairs now resting with the federal government might be transferred to the provincial government. And he pointed out, and I quote:

Under the existing agreement, very little authority has been transferred from the federal to the provincial government. The transition is difficult, but one may question whether there is enough effort being made at the provincial level to speed up the process.

In seconding the motion in reply to the Speech from the Throne last week, the hon. member for Fort William declared that there are too many organizations and individuals with "do-gooding" inclinations getting involved in Indian problems, and then he gratuitously insulted them all by asserting that they were simply seeking publicity for themselves.

Let me assert, Mr. Speaker, that the prize "do-gooder" in the picture at the moment is the Minister of Social and Family Services who chairs the ineffectual Cabinet committee on these matters. In fact, I know of no more professional "do-gooder" than he. He positively drips it.

However, the Minister's actions merely symbolize a government policy which is basically misconceived, so let us take a look at the government's policy itself. The Prime Minister tends to blunt criticism of the province's inaction by the facile assertion that Ontario is willing to assume responsibility for meeting the Indian needs, that the road-block to progress is in Ottawa, that we cannot get agreements with them.

In the Throne Speech last year, the Prime Minister stated that perhaps it would be necessary to point out where the difficulties have arisen, why we have been blocked in doing what we set out to do and what we want to do. May I say to the Prime Minister that there is nothing blocking this government except its well-developed capacity to dream up excuses why it cannot and should not act.

There is a mythology regarding Indian affairs which must be destroyed. It has been widely believed, precisely because governmental authorities have propagated the belief, that Indian affairs are primarily a federal matter. Constitutional and legal experts have dismissed this contention as a mis-reading of the BNA Act. The BNA Act states that the federal government shall be responsible for Indian lands and treaties; it says nothing about services to the Indians, whether they be education, welfare or economic development. Under the constitution, Ontario has concurrent responsibilities and, indeed, it has an obligation to serve Indian peoples as citizens of this province as much as anybody else. There are no road blocks, other than the government's lack of will to get on with the job.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, there is the ever-present problem of money. The Ontario government argues that it will assume these responsibilities if Ottawa will provide the equivalent revenues to do the job. Here, once again, we have a desperately urgent problem which is the victim of constitutional wrangling over the responsibility for action.

Again I assert to the government: You have concurrent responsibility, so get moving! After all that this country has done to the Indians, there is nothing more demeaning and dangerous than further delay because of the cost involved.

With regard to the expenditures, may I remind the hon. members that the Hawthorne-Tremblay study on Indian affairs points out, and it is to be found on page 164, that the per capita expenditure on Canadians in general by government is $740. The per capita expenditure on Indians is less than half the national average. It is $300.

So let us not talk as though spending more money on Indians is going to put them into a favoured class. They are the recipients of less than half of the expenditure of government compared with the national average. Let us cut out this shameful procrastination.

Furthermore, let us face a basic fact with regard to the so-called Cabinet committee on Indian affairs. It is not a Cabinet committee. It is a committee on which a half dozen Cabinet Ministers sit, which has become an integral part of The Department of Social and Family Services, with its responsible officers answerable to the Minister and deputy of that department. It has been locked into that department so that it cannot fulfill the co-ordinating role which is its purpose. The very fact, so vigorously deplored by the Indian-Eskimo Association, that community development officers have to work out of the welfare offices across the province, is but one of the unfortunate results that flow from this.

This government steadfastly refuses to acknowledge the basic necessities in structuring a Cabinet committee if it is to be effective. Professor Krueger pointed them out some years ago in his study of chaotic situations with regard to regional development in this province.

To be effective, he pointed out, a Cabinet committee must be under the direction of a full-time person who has deputy Minister status and who is answerable directly to the Prime Minister. Otherwise, its work staggers along under the direction of a Minister who is already overloaded with his departmental work, and who has not the power to effect co-ordination, day in and day out, of the responsibilities which fall under a number of other Ministers.

The only man who can achieve that kind of effective co-ordination is a full-time person acting in the name and with the power of the Prime Minister of the province. I say this with regard to the Cabinet committee or any other committee that this government establishes. You simply cannot have effective Cabinet committees on the basis that the government has been operating them in the past.

To sum up, therefore, there are a number of guidelines to policy and action in coping with Indian affairs.

First, set up an effective Cabinet committee, under the direction of a competent person with deputy Minister status answerable directly to the Prime Minister.

Second, treat the Indians as citizens of this province, and not as wards of the paternalistic Great White Father in Ottawa. Let the province exercise the responsibilities which it has to serve Indians as well as all other citizens, and let there be no further delays while the endless negotiations with Ottawa drag on.

Finally, and most important of all, let us proceed to the setting up of regional Crown corporations, with full Indian involvement in their direction, to work out and implement programmes of all kinds—educational, retraining, welfare, economic, development. In my view, northwestern Ontario is ready for the establishment of such a regional development council right now. Indeed there are units in operation within that part of the province which the hon. member for Kenora put on the record last year, and which logically fit into the direction of an overall regional development council. The piecemeal expenditures of all departments should be pooled through this one body, which will operate in the name of the whole government, with the Indians directly involved at the regional and local level in the decision-making process for programmes which are designed to help them.

I conclude, Mr. Speaker, with a repetition of my first remarks. Time is running out. Either we act quickly to remove the national shame which has characterized our treatment of the Indians in the past, or the difficulties in solving Indian problems will become bedevilled by red power, with all its irrationality and violence, born of years of frustration and neglect. So the challenge to this government is to move now and not wait for two more years to find out how their present programmes are going to work out, when the judgment of many people who are authoritative in the field is that they simply are not working out.

Perhaps you will permit me, Mr. Speaker, to move the adjournment of the House. I was about to move into another section—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: On the debate?

Mr. MacDonald: Of the debate, rather. My apologies.

Mr. Nixon: The hon. member is three years ahead.

Mr. MacDonald: It is the will to win. I cannot contain it.

Mr. MacDonald moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will resume this debate.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 6.00 o'clock p.m.

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 27, 1968

The House met at 2.30 o'clock p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We are always pleased to have visitors to the Legislature and today we welcome as guests students from the following schools: in the east gallery, from Eastdale Vocational School, Toronto, and Emery Junior High School, Weston; and in the west gallery, from Highland Heights Public School, Agincourt, and St. Gregory's Separate School, Islington. Later this afternoon there will be students from St. Michael's Separate School, Dunnville, in the west gallery.

Petitions.

Presenting reports.

Motions.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister) moves that on Friday, November 29 only the House will meet at 10 a.m.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: In explanation of the motion, this is in connection with the honouring of the 150th anniversary of the birth of George Brown. I might say also that the usual business of the House will be suspended—that includes questions, motions, introduction of bills, and so on. As I explained yesterday, we will deal only with this particular function, and then move outside to proceed with the programme; but the normal business of the House will be suspended on Friday.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of bills.

UNIVERSITIES COMMISSION

Mr. T. Reid (Scarborough East) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to establish the universities commission.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the bill is to establish an independent universities commission containing representation from the government, universities, and the community, to allocate the grants of public money and to act in an inter-university advisory capacity.

The basic purpose, Mr. Speaker, is to assure the citizens and the taxpayers in this province that the large amount of money now being spent in our universities is being wisely and efficiently spent. The purpose of this particular bill, Mr. Speaker, is to fix the responsibility for the allocation of these funds in an independent commission, that is to say, a commission that is not a government department. I believe that this would be an efficient way of allocating the funds and of securing greater university co-operation.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Humber has the floor.

THE HIGHWAY TRAFFIC ACT

Mr. G. Ben (Humber) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Highway Traffic Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Speaker, this bill requires that all new automobiles have a log book in which are recorded all the repairs to the car and after each repair a certificate that the motor vehicle is roadworthy. It will also record the mileages at which repairs are made and automobiles are sold.

THE ONTARIO HUMAN RIGHTS CODE, 1961-1962

Mr. Ben moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Ontario Human Rights Code, 1961-1962.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to amend the provision, or wipe out the provision, which enables educational institutions and other institutions receiving government funds to practice discrimination in their hiring, such as for instance, the University of Toronto.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Mr. Speaker, I had thought that I had caught your eye and that that white glove was pointing right in my direction.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Humber had been on his feet at the same time as the previous member of the Opposition.

THE ELECTION ACT

Mr. Young moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Election Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to reduce the age of persons who may vote at provincial elections, from 21 years to 18 years.

THE ONTARIO WATER RESOURCES COMMISSION ACT

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Ontario Water Resources Commission Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to prevent eutrophication of water courses.

Mr. Speaker: Before the orders of the day, I would like to acknowledge and bring to the attention of the members present, the presence here of a member of the federal Parliament of Switzerland, Mr. Paul Burgi, MP, who is in the Speaker's gallery. He is accompanied by Consul General for Switzerland in Toronto, Mr. George Falquier, by Dr. Peter Welti of the General Auditing Co. in Switzerland, and Mr. Paul Stutz, also of Zurich, Switzerland.

I am sure that your recognition of this visiting parliamentarian will be appreciated by him. I hope that he will not only be interested but learn something from the proceedings of this House of Parliament.

Before we proceed to the questions which normally come at this time of the day, I would like to advise the members that today, we will try a new system of questions. The hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nixon) will, as usual, ask his questions first—such questions that he has; followed by the leader of the New Democratic Party, the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald). Then we will have questions from the members directed to Ministers and delivered to the Ministers in the order in which they stand on the table of precedence in the Executive Council. We will see whether this works any better toward allowing the Ministers to get off to work. We will see how it works and if it does not work as well as the other, we will go back.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order! Order!

May I say that this is a decision taken only by Mr. Speaker. I have not consulted the leaders of any of the parties and I do not intend to. If it works well and it should, that is fine. It will only work well if the hon. members will give it a fair trial.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Minister of Social and Family Services): Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege. Yesterday I was absent from the House, in my office, and was unable to be present during the course of the remarks of the leader of the Opposition, which I have since read as set out in the speech he has given out and as reported in the press.

Mr. Speaker, the leader of the Opposition distributed his speech, which I assume he read in this House, and I shall only refer to one portion thereof. In reference to the work of the children's aid societies, he said the following:

First let me say that the research on this subject was done with great hardship because the Minister's office or people under his direction have warned societies that they are not to discuss programmes financed by the government without clearing such discussions with the department.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): On a point of order, might the Minister indicate whether this is a point of order or a point of privilege that he is rising on?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. Minister is quite within his rights if he proposes to indicate that the excerpt which he is now reading from, I presume, Hansard, or the speech, is not a correct statement so far as he is concerned.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: The leader of the Opposition proceeded to state, as a statement of fact, "This is an unheard of abuse by the department" and so on in very colourful, uncomplimentary language.

That speech was reported. I am glad to see that some of the hon. members—

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. Minister will proceed with his point of order.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: This matter was referred to in the Toronto Telegram of today, as follows:

Mr. Nixon said research has been difficult because the Minister (John Yaremko) or people under him had given orders to the societies not to talk.

Mr. Speaker, my point of order is that the leader of the Opposition is completely—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I deny it categorically. The leader of the Opposition is off base completely. I was surprised to see that a man—

Mr. Speaker: Order! If the hon. Minister wishes to point out that in his opinion, and from the facts available to him, the hon. leader of the Opposition was in error in his statements he is entitled to do so, but he is not entitled to attack the hon. leader of the Opposition at this point.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Speaker, I rest my case: I categorically deny—

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, on the point of order, or point of privilege as it has been stated, may I suggest to the Minister that he undertake some inquiry as to why the officials of various children's aid societies and other branches that come under his jurisdiction have indicated to me and to my researchers that they must clear any conversations with the Opposition with the Minister's office.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Speaker, I point out to you—

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, may I represent to you that you are permitting a debate to commence in this House which is out of order?

Mr. Speaker: I agree with the hon. member for Windsor West. He is quite correct in what he has stated, and I would ask the hon. leader of the Opposition now to place his question.

An hon. member: The last word may be out of order, but get the last word.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): There is no reason why we cannot learn a few things from hon. members opposite.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Attorney General, if we can get through the interruptions from the other side:

What steps will be taken to investigate the statement made by the United States Federal Bureau of Investigation that Stefano Magaddino of Niagara Falls, New York, is "an overlord of crime" in southern Ontario?

Does the Attorney General intend to send a representative to the United States to consult with the FBI so that all facts are available to officials in Ontario?

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, we have a continuous exchange of information with the FBI and many other police agencies, we—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Yorkview has a similar question or questions. Would the hon. Attorney General allow the other question to be placed? Perhaps he can deal with the whole matter at once.

Mr. Young: My question is whether in view of the comments of officials of the FBI as reported in today's Toronto Star that Mafia activities are expanding into Ontario, does the Attorney General wish to revise his comments given in reply to my question yesterday?

In the light of the FBI statements, what actions does the Minister contemplate?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, the police commission, through the Ontario Provincial Police and police agencies generally in Ontario have complete exchange of information with the FBI and many other police agencies. They are aware and have been aware of the activities of the Magaddino people in Ontario. There have been convictions and prosecutions of these people, and we are kept fully aware. The FBI knows and our people know of the efforts of the criminal elements in the United States to come into southern Ontario and other parts of Ontario. This is why this information flows freely between the police forces.

There is no answer to the second part of the question, and I am not taking any further steps to investigate, because we have a very capable and very efficient intelligence agency, and there is a complete exchange of information. I will not say that we know everything that criminals do at the moment they do it, but there is the most complete exchange of information.

As to the question from the hon. member for Yorkview, I have no reason to change the nature of the content of the answer I gave yesterday, in answer to this question. This was a question as to whether the reference in some speculative article—in the New York

Times apparently—that there have been exchanges between criminal elements in the United States which, apparently, in the view of someone in the federal government of the United States, related to the eastern part of Canada.

I said we have no reason to believe that has reference to Ontario. We still have reason to think that that was a reference to Montreal, and it was not related to the Magaddinos. It was the Bonanos up there. My answer stands exactly as I gave it yesterday.

Mr. Nixon: If the Attorney General will permit me a couple of questions.

He is aware that at noon today the police chief of Toronto, Mr. Mackey, was reported as having said that one of the principal links between the betting community in Toronto and the Mafia was through the organization that was discussed in my question—that was controlled, apparently by Mr. Magaddino. What of that?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, I am aware, Mr. Speaker, that they are involved to a certain degree, in certain areas of gaming. But they are not overlords of crime in this province.

Those activities of which we are aware, where they give grounds for prosecution—these things are followed up.

Mr. Nixon: Well, I might just—

Mr. Speaker: Order! If the hon. member wishes to place a question, or a supplementary question, he is entitled to, but he is not entitled to get up and make a speech. It is right that the rules should be observed on both sides of this House. The hon. leader of the Opposition has a further question from yesterday of the Minister of Health.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Nixon: He is trying to get into your good graces.

Mr. Speaker, of the Minister of Health I would like to—

Mr. Speaker: Order! The Speaker is quite aware of the feelings on both sides of the House but he does certainly take objection to observations such as the hon. leader has made. I would hope that there would not be any repetition of it.

Mr. Nixon: I apologize for that, Mr. Speaker, and withdraw it.

Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Health. Will the Minister explain the position of the government in providing subsidized OMSIP for Indians on and off reservations in Ontario?

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Speaker, OMSIP is available to all residents of Ontario. It is available to people of Indian extraction or Indian blood living off the reservations exactly the same as to any resident.

For Indians on the reservation the federal government has traditionally claimed this as their responsibility and we look to the federal government to provide the financing, so that Indians living on reservations can have the same privilege in this respect as any citizen of Ontario.

Because of the present dialogue between the two levels of government we, in Ontario, have made it clear to all Indians that OMSIP is readily available to them. We have served notice on the federal government that they will be held responsible for the financing of this.

To that end the Minister of National Health and Welfare, I understand—and I emphasize this “I understand”—was to set up a task force to look into this entire matter and find a resolution of the problem for all time.

Mr. Nixon: Might I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, with the Minister's permission?

It is true, then, to say that no Indians on reserve at the present time are covered with the OMSIP programme?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No, I do not believe it would be true to say that, Mr. Speaker, because I believe some Indians have applied for OMSIP on their own, as they have been applying for other medical services insurance. I do not think it is widely spread, but on certain reservations the Indians do have it.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, on November 25 in this House, as recorded in Hansard, pages 109 and 110; with regard to the Proctor-Silex strike in Picton, I would like to point out the following matter of personal privilege.

My leader stated as follows,

We sent our representatives to a union meeting [at Proctor-Silex in Picton]. The member for Scarborough East represented the Liberal Party at that meeting. He was in contact with labour leaders, leaders in the community. He came back with a report that led us, as Liberals, to support the strikers in this particular negotiation.

On a point of personal privilege, Mr. Speaker, on page 110 the member for Brantford (Mr. Makarchuk) stated,

The leader of the Opposition is, Mr. Speaker, misleading the House. The representative from the Liberal Party was not at that meeting.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to quote directly from the Belleville Intelligencer of October 3, 1968, to show that I certainly was there.

The Liberal critic for economics and development visited Picton yesterday—

That was October 2. I would like to point out that the NDP did not get there until November 23.

—at the request of Robert Nixon, leader of the Opposition. He was accompanied by Nixon's executive assistant, John Morrit, and after the meeting with union officials and discussing the current situation, the Liberal visitors were extremely critical of the company's stand.

They discussed the situation with George Hutchens, Canadian IUE president, Jim Donofrio, union representative, Dan Neilson, president of the local United Farmers' Union, and Dr. Lionel Dockrill, Picton town councillor.

Mr. Speaker, I was there and I was there a good six weeks before the NDP got there.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order!

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, I will not enter the debate, but we were there many, many times in advance of—

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member is on his feet to ask a question.

Mr. MacDonald: I have three questions, Mr. Speaker, from yesterday. The Ministers are present, two of them I can ask; the third I shall retain, Mr. Speaker.

The first one is to the Minister of Trade and Development. When was a "forgiveness loan" extended to Matthews Conveyor Co. in Port Hope? For what amount was the loan? Is the Minister aware that since receiving the loan the company has laid off 50 workers and further layoffs are currently under way? Do the conditions of the "forgiveness loan" permit cutbacks in the work force?

Hon. W. D. McKeough (Minister of Municipal Affairs): The hon. member asked it yesterday.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, but I did not get an answer.

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Trade and Development): Mr. Speaker, the equalization of industrial opportunity loan extended to Matthews Conveyor Co. in Port Hope was approved by Order-in-Council on March 7, 1968, and the amount of the loan is $193,033.

The company informs ODC that the current layoffs at the plant are of a temporary nature. It is confidently expected that over the term of the EIO loans, substantial increases in employment will occur. If it became evident over a period of time that the company in receipt of a forgivable loan is not achieving the purposes for which the loan was given, then the ODC has the right to require the payment of any portion of the loan which has not been forgiven.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. Do the conditions normally implicit in such a loan involve no lay-offs?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, I do not know how it can. How can any manufacturer say that five years from now he will not have a turn-down of business and have to lay people off?

I do not have a crystal ball. I do not think even you could do that.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: It will be interesting to review the implementation of this in the future.

Mr. Speaker: Order! Order! The hon. member will proceed with his questions.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Health.

Has the Minister received a report from Doctor B. T. Hale, MOH for the Guelph-Wellington-Dufferin health unit, regarding the extreme pollution caused by the Canada Electric Castings Ltd., a subsidiary of Dayton Steel? What action does the company intend to take for the elimination of this pollution? What time limits have been granted the company for this remedial action?

In the event of this, or any other plant being closed down because of intolerable pollution, is the government developing any plan for short term assistance while alternative job opportunities are secured?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part of the question is no. Doctor Hale did, I believe, call my office a few days ago, advising us of a rather tragic accident that took place in the plant and which was said to be related in some way to air pollution.

However, we were in the process then of surveying this plant because of concern over its condition. On November 1, the company was surveyed, the report was provided setting out the air pollution control required. On November 22 of this year, the company was served with a ministerial order requiring compliance.

The requirements are in two parts. The long-term programme gives the company eight months to complete all work, to bring the effluence from their operations under satisfactory control. The short-term work to be done during the eight-month period requires that within three weeks—that is three weeks from November 22 of this year—all accumulated soot around the plant be removed, and within seven weeks they must have repaired and have operating properly existing pollution control equipment.

The answer to the fourth part of the question, Mr. Speaker, is I know of no policy at the present time under The Air Pollution Control Act. I have no such authority. This is a matter that will be submitted to government for consideration.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Wentworth has a question of the Prime Minister.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the government undertake to establish a fair capital gains tax for land speculation, and implement this without delay?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, the Treasurer (Mr. MacNaughton) is presently examining very closely all areas of taxation. This is one of them, and when these examinations are complete the government will make its decisions as to what it is going to do.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for High Park has a question of the Prime Minister.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, in light of the reports in Saturday's Toronto Star that the $100 million improvement of Sunnybrook Hospital into a teaching hospital is a waste of money, does the Prime Minister intend to intervene to stop this project?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, this report was, at best, a statement of opinion by whomsoever wrote it, and I am informed that really it is a kind of planner's forward programme covering a period of a great many years. It has not been approved by the Ontario Hospital Services Commission which has the power and must, of course, approve every expenditure made by any hospital and will only do so after the closest examination. I do not think therefore, hon. members need be unduly worried by the import of that report.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for High Park has a question of the Minister of Health.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, is the Minister aware that The Department of Health's new policy of charging for laboratory examinations of diabetics' blood is causing financial hardship to many elderly pensioners?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No, Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of that and if it does exist, it should not exist. OMSIP, as I have just said within the past few minutes, is readily available to every resident of the province of Ontario regardless of age, state of health or financial status. If those who are in need cannot afford to pay for it, all they have to do is apply and provision has been made by this government to see to it that they are not denied medical services because of their inability to pay for it.

I might add that lab services are a benefit provided under OMSIP and are, therefore, quite within the reach of any resident of the province of Ontario.

Mr. Shulman: Will the Minister accept a supplementary question?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Yes.

Mr. Shulman: Is the Minister aware that many such pensioners are covered by PSI, and PSI has decided that they will not pay for this charge?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I would still repeat, Mr. Speaker, that OMSIP is readily available to those people.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Humber has a question for the Minister of Health.

Mr. Ben: Yes, I have a number of questions.

Mr. Speaker: Just the two for the Minister of Health, at the moment.

Mr. Ben: How many cases of hepatitis were reported at the Ontario housing complex at Thistleton between November, 1967, and February, 1968?

What steps has the department taken to prevent the children at that development from playing in the garbage and sewers?

When was the area last inspected by officials of the Minister's department?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, our provincial communicable disease statistics are maintained on a municipal level only. On this basis, from November 1, 1967 to February 29, 1968, 79 cases of hepatitis were reported from the borough of Etobicoke. The office of the medical officer of health of Etobicoke has advised that the Ontario housing complex area in general, was the local address of approximately 53 reported cases of hepatitis from November 1, 1967, to February 29, 1968.

Reference to the second part of the question: I would point out that the enforcement of The Public Health Act is the responsibility of the local authority. We act in a consultative capacity when requested to do so and if we have cause to believe that the local authority is not doing its job.

In this case we do not believe the latter to be true and we have not been invited in a consultative capacity.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Speaker, will the Minister accept a supplementary question?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Yes.

Mr. Ben: Is not the fact that 53 out of 79 cases of hepatitis originate from one area in a municipality sufficient to cause the Minister's department to wonder what action, if any, the municipality is taking to prevent these epidemics?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, we are content that the local department of health took the necessary steps to control this outbreak. It was not an epidemic.

Mr. Ben: I will withdraw the word epidemic. I will use the word outbreak.

The next question, Mr. Speaker, I wondered if perhaps it should be addressed to the Minister of Social and Family Services (Mr. Yaremko), but I will put it to the Minister of Health.

What is the cost per annum of maintaining a child under the children's aid society?

How many children from the Ontario housing complex at Thistleton have become wards of the children's aid society during the past two years?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member's premise was correct, this should have been directed to the hon. Minister of Social and Family Services.

Mr. Speaker: The Speaker's office will redirect this and have it answered, if possible, tomorrow.

The hon. member for Scarborough West has a question of the Minister of Health.

Mr. Lewis: To the Minister, through you Mr. Speaker, will the announced 10 per cent increase in the Ontario Medical Association fee schedule set for April 1, 1969, be subject to approval or negotiation by the Minister of Health or this Legislature?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, in keeping with all government business, it will be subject to negotiation by the Minister of Health and the results of the negotiations will be referred to the government for decision.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Thunder Bay.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): Mr. Speaker, a question for the Minister of Health. Is the Minister aware of the statement made by Doctor C. E. Toll, Department of Health dentist, as reported in the Port Arthur News-Chronicle of November 22, 1968, that the state of children's teeth in Nipigon is deplorable?

If so, what steps will the Minister take to ensure proper dental care for the children in those communities?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, I believe that the dentist referred to did state that the teeth of the Nipigon children were severely neglected. He denies using some extravagant language as apparently appeared in the press.

However, the railway dental car was in Nipigon from August 7 to November 18 of this year. During that time, 1,030 dental appointments were provided and all of the children reporting received the dental care that was necessary.

I would suggest that the state of the kids' teeth now is pretty good.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Downsview has a question of the Minister of Social and Family Services.

Mr. Singer: Yes, Mr. Speaker, my question is this. In view of the fact that evidence at the coroner's inquest into the death of three-year-old Theresa McIntosh disclosed that this child was probably mistreated before her death, and that none of this information was conveyed either to the children's aid society, the police nor his department, what action does the Minister intend to take in view of the provisions of section 41 of The Child Welfare Act?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated on Monday, we are naturally concerned about this case. But as I said then, it is still before a coroner's jury and, as you know, the inquest resumed today. I believe it would be unfair of me to comment in any way while the jury is discharging its very serious responsibilities.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Huron-Bruce has a question of the Minister of Agriculture and Food.

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the Minister assure the House that the interest rate on junior farmer loans will remain at 5 per cent?

How many junior farmer loans are presently in arrears?

Has there been any noticeable difference in the number of applications coming before the board since the federal government announced the new interest rate for farm credit loans?

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food): Mr. Speaker, in reply, the answer to the first question is that this is a policy decision of the government and I am in no position to say yes or no. It is a statutory matter at the moment.

As to the number of junior farmer loans presently in arrears, there are 131 junior farmer loans in arrears, in a total amount of $125,000. I think this is a remarkably fine record for the junior farmers of Ontario, when one considers that there are 5,375 loans out with a total value of $89.742 million. As a matter of fact, the loans in arrears represent 2.4 per cent of all mortgages and .07 per cent of all principal, so arrears are practically negligible.

Mr. Gaunt: May I ask the Minister a supplementary question?

Is the Minister planning to consider the present interest rate with the idea of having it remain the same? Has the Minister given the matter any thought?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Well, of course, with the announcement that the federal government has raised their interest rate to 7 $\frac{3}{4}$  per cent on farm credit corporation loans, this is a matter of concern to all governments with the high cost of money today.

Mr. Shulman: Another question of the Minister of Agriculture and Food, Mr. Speaker.

Is the November, 1968 issue of Canadian Consumer, page 106, correct in its statement that provincial meat inspection by The Department of Agriculture and Food does not take place in northern Ontario and portions of eastern Ontario? And if the answer is "yes", why not?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the quotation to which the hon. member refers, but I assume he is quite correct in what he has said in his question.

Now, there are four counties of eastern Ontario in which there is not complete meat inspection. There are eight red-meat plants left to cover in eastern Ontario, and these will be done—if they are not done now, they will be done in the next few days or weeks, because the inspectors have been trained or are in the process of being trained, the plants have been brought up to standard, inspection will be introduced right away.

In northern Ontario there are 15 red-meat plants, 13 of which are not under inspection as yet. Now, it is our plan that as soon as inspectors can be obtained and trained, then they will be covered with inspection. However, the plants themselves come under The Department of Health supervision and as far as the plant standards are concerned, they do meet those qualifications.

Since April 1, 1965, we have covered the province of Ontario, at least the 38 counties of Ontario, with meat inspection. We have employed and trained over 200 meat inspectors. When we introduced the meat inspection programme, there were no inspectors, you just could not go out and hire them, we had to engage them and train them. It takes at least six months to train inspectors and you can only take so many at a time, because the academic training is only part of it. They have to go out to the various federally-inspected plants and receive practical training under the supervision of qualified federal inspectors. Meat inspection has come about in Ontario in a very orderly way and I think in a way that has not disrupted the meat processing facilities or slaughtering facilities in the province and yet has provided and assured the people of Ontario a wholesome quality product.

Mr. Shulman: Would the Minister permit a supplementary question? Does he have a target date for completing the balance of the areas that have not been covered?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: We have, we hope that we will be able to accomplish this within the next few months.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Rainy River.

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture and Food.

1. How many crop insurance salesmen are there in Rainy River district?
2. Who are they?
3. Do they have occupations other than that of crop insurance salesmen?
4. How long have they been selling crop insurance?
5. When did the advertising begin? When did it end? How many items of advertising were there?
6. What was the cut-off date for purchasing crop insurance in Rainy River district?
7. How many farmers in Rainy River district took advantage of crop insurance?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, there is one crop insurance agent in the Rainy River district. It is Mr. M. G. McComb insurance agency, located in Emo. He does have other occupations, he is a general insurance agent. He has been selling crop insurance or offering it for sale since May 18 of 1967, and I understand he has been a general insurance agent for many years.

With regard to advertising, the crop insurance commission places advertisements seasonally in the various papers and publications throughout the province. I cannot give the hon. member the exact number of times where it has been advertised in his area. If he took from what I said yesterday that it has been, I am not sure, whether it was in that paper or what date, I do not know. But, I do know that it has been widely advertised, we have placed advertising in the paper Farm and Country which I understand, goes into every farm home in Ontario, that is, advertising on an annual basis, and this is a monthly publication. The commission has prepared a pamphlet setting forth the information and I have a copy of that pamphlet here. We have circulated this quite widely through the bankers' association. We have sent it out to the local banks, to our agricultural representatives and to anyone who wishes to use this, including private members who may be interested in their constituents obtaining crop insurance.

The commission also has an agreement with all local agents to pay 50 per cent of the cost of advertising on a local basis for crop insurance programmes. The information branch of the Ontario Department of Agriculture and Food has circulated press releases in 1967 and again in 1968, having to do with the crop insurance programme. These are provided to all weekly newspapers in Ontario, to all daily newspapers, to all farm journals, and to all radio and television stations. With the expansion of the programme, with every expansion of the programme, even from its inception, I have made those announcements in the House and they have been covered by our own press gallery, certainly Hansard and by the members of the House.

The cut-off date for purchasing crop insurance in the Rainy River district was—there are two dates given—the deadline for application was May 15, 1968, and the deadline for seeding of the crop was June 15, 1968. There were four contracts written in 1968, in two of these cases the farmers did not seed their acreage on which they had proposed to plant crops. In the remaining two, both of them filed claims. One of them was successful in getting his crop off and so he cancelled his claim, while the other man lost his crop and it is expected that he will obtain about $1,000 in insurance payments.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Will the Minister accept a supplementary?

In view of the fact that there was only one insurance salesman who I am sure the Minister is aware of is also the municipal clerk of Emo municipality—

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member would just ask a supplementary question.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Does he not feel that this programme was not sufficiently advertised and energetically promoted in the area and that the farmers of the Rainy River district will therefore suffer? Does he not feel that some assistance should be provided for them this year?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, it is always very difficult to determine just how much advertising is enough.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Is one salesman enough?

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Hon. Mr. Stewart: It may well be the case. I would suggest, though, that with the interest that has been taken or evinced in crop insurance in many areas throughout the province that it would be very difficult to get anybody to accept it on a full-time basis. Now, I am quite sure that the man—and I do not know him at all, I did not know he was the municipal clerk—but, I am sure that if he is the municipal clerk he is well known to the farming community of the area and, as such, that he would be well known, he being a general insurance agent, and the amount of crop insurance advertising and the publicity it was given, that he would be the logical source.

Now, our local agricultural representative has promoted the programmes throughout the area. I know this to be a fact and I would like to suggest that if my hon. friend had displayed as much interest in promoting the crop insurance programme in his own local area as he has in asking these questions, it would likely be much more effective and widespread in its acceptance by local farmers.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

The hon. member for Wentworth has a question of the Minister of Transport.

Mr. Deans: Yes, a question of the Minister of Transport. Will the Minister undertake an immediate investigation of the behaviour of truck traffic on the Queen Elizabeth Highway between Hamilton and Toronto?

Hon. I. Haskett (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, while I am not sure that I understand just what the hon. member means by "truck traffic behaviour"—

Mr. Deans: I am asking if you will investigate whether or not the truck traffic on the Queen Elizabeth Highway is behaving in a manner suited for that kind of highway and whether it should not be investigated and whether action should be taken against them, to make them behave in the proper way.

Hon. Mr. Haskett: Mr. Speaker, I was not quite sure what the hon. member meant by truck traffic behaviour in this case but it appeared to me likely, and I think from his amplification of the statement that I am right in my assumption, that what he refers to is a matter of enforcement and would, for that reason, be a matter under the jurisdiction of the police. I think if he will pinpoint the problem and direct his question to the Attorney General it might be more appropriate.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for High Park.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Transport. Do municipalities require the permission of the Minister and/or the Legislature to temporarily change the speed limit on public roads for the purpose of car racing?

Hon. Mr. Haskett: Mr. Speaker, racing on the highways is prohibited. Section 91 of The Highway Traffic Act sets out that "no person shall drive a motor vehicle on a highway in a race".

Mr. Shulman: Will the Minister accept a supplementary question? Does that interpretation of the law mean that the city of Toronto will not be able to have car racing on Lakeshore Boulevard?

Hon. Mr. Haskett: Mr. Speaker, it is a good supplementary question but I am not prepared to answer it.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Minister would give it his consideration.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville has a question of the Minister of Tourism and Information.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Development. Can the Minister inform the House if his department has arrived at a decision in regard to maximum rentals for Ontario Housing Corporation public housing projects?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member was not paying attention. He has a question of the hon. Minister of Tourism and Information. The hon. Minister of Trade and Development comes later. This is a question from the other day.

Mr. B. Newman: Yes, I have a question for the Minister of Tourism and Information. When will the new Ontario government tourist reception centre on Huron Line in Windsor be open on a year-round basis, instead of the present part-time basis, because of the increased year-round traffic from the United States into Ontario over the Ambassador Bridge?

Hon. J. A. C. Auld (Minister of Tourism and Information): Mr. Speaker, I cannot give the hon. member a definitive answer at the moment. We are studying the changing traffic pattern between the tunnel and the bridge, both the daily traffic and the more-than-24-hour, or the tourist traffic. When we have completed that, we are going to consider our situation at Windsor.

I remind the hon. member that because of budget considerations it may be we will find that we should have our operation at the bridge rather than at the tunnel. It might be that we could keep both operations open the year round; it might be that we would simply change the year-round operation from the tunnel to the bridge.

Mr. B. Newman: May I ask of the Minister a supplementary question? Would he consider the rental of the premises either at the tunnel or the bridge for a community centre to the city, if it is not going to be used by the department?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I am afraid the hon. member will have to ask the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Connell).

Mr. Speaker: We have now reached the hon. Minister of Trade and Development, if the hon. member would now place his question.

Mr. B. Newman: Can the Minister inform the House if his department has arrived at a decision in regard to maximum rentals for Ontario Housing Corporation public housing projects?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Speaker, I am glad to see they save the good things for the last.

The hon. member is aware that as of May 1 of this year, rental rates in geared-to-income developments under the jurisdiction of Ontario Housing Corporation were pegged in accordance with the income of the tenant at that date.

Discussions are being held on a continuing basis with senior officials of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation with a view to establishing a new rent scale formula which will recognize, among other things, current economic conditions. In view of the complexities involved, no final decision has yet been reached. The rent freeze was introduced to ensure that no undue hardship would be incurred by any tenant while this study is proceeding.

Studies of market rentals for various types and sizes of accommodation in 12 selected Ontario municipalities have already been completed as part of this ongoing analysis.

Mr. B. Newman: May I ask the Minister a supplementary question? When can we expect a decision, Mr. Minister?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I cannot tell the hon. member that. When the surveys are completed and we finish our discussions with Central Mortgage and Housing.

Mr. B. Newman: If I may ask another supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is it not true, then, that the problem has been up for discussion for well over two years now?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No. The hon. member will recall we made a change of rent scale in May, 1967. As far back as last May we froze all rents at that time so there would not be any change or any hardship.

Mr. B. Newman: Thank you.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Peterborough.

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address my question to the Minister of Trade and Development.

In his speech on November 20 in Trenton, the Minister stated that the Ontario Development Corporation hopes to extend the "golden horseshoe" eastward making it a "golden corridor." Was the Minister announcing government policy in the fields of regional government and urban development?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Speaker, I am glad to see the hon. member for Peterborough is reading my speeches.

Mr. Pitman: All of them; I always read them.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Being a practical optimist, I want to assure him that as we look at the "golden horseshoe" and see the factories we have in there (and we know that we have wall-to-wall factories between here and Windsor), I have always told my associates and friends that I see no reason—with two railroads, the St. Lawrence Seaway, the Macdonald-Cartier Freeway—why we could not have wall-to-wall factories between here and Cornwall. While it may not be government policy, I think the fact that my colleagues and the Prime Minister okayed the EIO programme, which is now making itself felt in eastern Ontario, we can well call it, without government policy, the "golden corridor."

Mr. Pitman: Mr. Speaker, might I ask a supplementary question? That was not a facetious question, I can assure you. What I would like to know is whether the loans to be given under the EIO programme are—

Mr. Speaker: Order!

The hon. member's question about loans is not supplementary to his original question. If he wishes to ask a supplementary on his original question, he is entitled to.

Mr. Pitman: Mr. Speaker, with your indulgence, I do suggest that the EIO programme, as it is related to the creation of the "golden corridor" is relevant—what I am trying to establish, with your permission, is whether the loans that are given are actually approved by The Department of Trade and Development.

Mr. Speaker: Yes, but the hon. member did not try to establish anything about loans in his original question and therefore he cannot do it now by way of supplementary.

Mr. Pitman: The Minister in his answer suggested that these loans were paving the way to the "golden corridor."

Mr. Speaker: That is quite proper and if the hon. member wishes to question him about that on another occasion it is perfectly in order.

Mr. Pitman: I might just simply ask the Minister whether the creation of the "golden corridor" by the ODC is an integral part of the policy as established by the Cabinet committee on regional development?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Speaker, I think that the EIO is the only programme establishing what we hope to call the "golden corridor." I think all departments of the government are making a contribution to making it possible to have wall-to-wall factories between here and Cornwall.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Wentworth.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, a question for the Minister of Trade and Development. I noticed, as I read it, that one part was left off. I hope he will not mind me adding it.

How much land is presently owned by or under the control of the Ontario Housing Corporation? How much of this is unserviced land? Where is the land located—that is the part that was obviously missed out—and how much has been spent by this government on the acquisition of this land?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Speaker, I will take the questions as notice and get the information for the hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Humber.

Mr. Ben: I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Development, Mr. Speaker.

Is it true that rents are pegged to income for every Ontario Housing Corporation tenant, and that the number of children per household is irrelevant in the calculation of Ontario Housing Corporation rents?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Speaker, rental rates for all units under the jurisdiction of Ontario Housing Corporation which are leased on a geared-to-income basis are related to a sliding scale which was approved jointly by both the federal and provincial governments and has national application.

The factor which determines the applicable rental rate is the gross family income less certain exemptions. These exemptions include family allowance payments, the earnings of children who are in regular attendance at recognized educational institutions, the wife's earnings up to $250 a year and the monthly earnings of working children in excess of $75 a month.

The hon. member will thus appreciate that, unlike the private rental sector, it is not the size of the accommodation that dictates the rental rate. It is also important to recognize that in the majority of cases the Ontario Housing Corporation rental rate includes the provision of heat, hot water, water, appliances and very often hydro.

Families with large numbers of children are naturally allocated more spacious premises and, because of the size of the family, use more services for which no additional charges are made. In these respects, coupled with the income exemptions, certainly recognition is afforded the number of children in the household.

As I have already indicated previously, the rent scale is being reviewed, as it has been in the past, on a continuing basis. In fact, a new scale was introduced in 1962 and was subsequently revised as recently as May, 1967. Concurrently with the present review, rents were pegged in relation to the tenants' incomes at May 1 of this year; therefore since that date any increase in family income has not affected the tenant's rental rate.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Speaker, will the Minister accept a supplementary question?

Do I take it from his answer that a family with seven children, none of them earning an income, as indicated by you would be paying exactly the same rental on an income of, let us say for sake of argument, $5,000, as a family with two children?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not think I quite understand the question. What we—

Mr. Ben: I believe the Minister indicated the certain variables on employment, how many children are working, the income of the children, and so on.

Let us take the situation of a family with an income of $5,000 with seven children not working, earning no income. They would be paying exactly the same rent on an income of $5,000 as a family with only two children not working. Is that not so?

Hon. Mr. Randall: There would be different accommodations. In most cases we try to accommodate the families and I would think that in any case where there are different size accommodations, different incomes, the rental scale would be adjusted accordingly.

Mr. Ben: But if they were the same accommodation, which is quite feasible, they would be paying the same rent?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I would doubt that they would have the same accommodation with seven—

Mr. Ben: But if they were—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Perhaps so.

Mr. Ben: If they did have the same accommodation?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Perhaps so.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Grey-Bruce has questions of the Attorney-General.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

To the hon. the Attorney General: On page 1114 of the report on civil rights, Justice McRuer reveals that the city of Toronto is in direct contravention of its general licensing bylaw in allowing a cab license worth $300 to be sold for $14,500. He states that the public is paying through the nose for this being allowed to continue.

What steps is the Attorney General going to take in this regard?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, that is a very free translation of what the Hon. Mr. McRuer said. I could not find that expression in his remarks. But, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Sargent: Is that not right? I am sorry. Look, that is right—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: “Paying through the nose?”

Mr. Sargent: That is what he said.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I could not find that.

An hon. member: The Minister is in the wrong volume.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I guess so.

Mr. Speaker, we are reviewing all the recommendations of Mr. McRuer, including this one I may say. We have looked at it. However, I do not contemplate immediate action, because the matter is presently under our present law—within the jurisdiction and control under the Metropolitan Toronto licensing commission. At the moment that is where it is and we are reviewing the recommendation to see what action, if any, might be taken.

That is all the answer I can give.

Mr. Sargent: A question to the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs (Mr. Rowntree).

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member is now directing questions to the Attorney General.

Mr. Sargent: Yes, but if he is not here we will hold this.

Mr. Speaker: Yes, that will be done.

Mr. Sargent: A question to the Attorney General.

On November 15, Chief Mackey was quoted in the Toronto Daily Star as admitting that his police had seized five wire tapping bugs. When questioned on what authority he had to make these seizures, he said he had no authority.

Will the Attorney General advise:

1. Why police are allowed to have these special powers?
2. What is the Attorney General going to do about it?
3. Will Chief Mackey be called upon by the Attorney General for a full explanation of how he can make seizures illegally?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I would like to refer the hon. member for Grey-Bruce to the question and the answer to the question asked by the hon. member for Downsview on November 20 respecting the very same subject and in very similar terms. My answer at that time is in Hansard of November 20.

An hon. member: They do not talk to one another.

Mr. Sargent: The hon. members talk to themselves all the time.

An hon. member: Could not talk to a better fellow.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, in the event that the hon. member for Grey-Bruce has not read Hansard I will repeat what I said then.

I am advised that these devices were given to police by employees of the Bell Telephone Company of Canada, who removed them from their lines since they contravened—the attachment of them contravened—the provisions of The Bell Telephone Act of Canada.

The three following questions are really not relevant.

The police did not seize them in the sense of seizure. The Bell Telephone Act of Canada makes it wrongful—an offence—to intercept a message. Telephone employees found these devices attached to their lines, they took them off—which quite rightly they should do—and they turned them over to the police.

As I pointed out to the hon. member for Downsview who questioned me on November 20, nobody has come forward to say “these are our devices.” I do not think they are likely to come forward, because they are illegal under The Bell Telephone Act. The police have the devices in their possession and there is nothing much more we can do.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for High Park.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Attorney General.

1. Why was the death of Kenneth Haines on October 29 in the Scarborough General Hospital not reported until five days afterward?

2. Is it true that Mr. Haines was refused admission to another hospital shortly before his death?

3. Why is the coroner's office not holding an inquest into this unusual death?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I shall have to take this question as notice but I can promise an answer, I am sure, tomorrow. The question was only received in my office about the one o'clock hour and it required some inquiry to get the proper answers.

Mr. Shulman: I have another question of the Attorney General, Mr. Speaker.

Is an inquest to be held into the death of Mrs. Dorothy Gertrude Davis, age 31, of Oshawa, who disappeared July 20, 1968, and whose body was recovered near Bradford on August 19, 1968?

Question two. If so, what date has been set?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, this matter is under investigation by the criminal investigation branch of the Ontario Provincial Police. Just as soon as that investigation is completed it will be reported to the coroner, who will decide then as to the need for an inquest.

Mr. Shulman: Will the Minister accept a supplementary question?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes.

Mr. Shulman: Has not this investigation been going on for a very long time and, if you agree, when do you expect the results of the investigation?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, I cannot be too specific in replying. All I can say is that the investigation is being carried on by the CIB of the Ontario Provincial Police. I would expect it will be concluded shortly, but I am not as informed of the details of these things as the hon. member seems to expect that I might be.

I cannot, I think, in a specific case, be informed of all details. I can only answer as I did.

Investigation of this is carried on by the criminal investigation branch. Just as soon as that is over, the ordinary routine will be followed of reporting the whole matter to the coroner, who will make the decision as to the necessity of an inquest.

Mr. Shulman: In the form of a second supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Does the delay in the investigation have anything to do with the body being found on the property of Mrs. Viola MacMillan?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I should not think so, Mr. Speaker, but, again, this will come out, I presume, in the report of the criminal investigation branch.

Mr. Shulman: Thank you.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for High Park may place his question to the Minister of Highways, who is next on the list.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, can the city of Toronto close the Lake Shore Road to normal vehicular traffic for brief periods on a regular basis without the permission of the Minister?

Hon. G. E. Gomme (Minister of Highways): Mr. Speaker, the Lake Shore Road is under the jurisdiction of the municipality of Metro Toronto and therefore, the city of Toronto does not have jurisdiction.

Mr. Shulman: Will the Minister accept a supplementary question?

Hon. Mr. Gomme: Yes.

Mr. Shulman: Can Metro close this road without the Minister's permission?

Hon. Mr. Gomme: Mr. Speaker, Metro Toronto can close the Lake Shore Boulevard, under conditions referred to in the question, without the approval of the Minister.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Why did not the Minister say that long ago?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough East.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I have three questions of the Minister of Education (Mr. Davis), one of which is fairly urgent.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is now asking his question of the Minister of Highways. The Minister of Education is not in his seat and the questions will have to be held over.

Mr. T. Reid: A question of the Minister of Highways.

When, if at all, did the Minister reply to the request of the Metropolitan Toronto transportation commission to meet with the commission, or its chairman, to discuss an immediate and a long-run strategy of planning of Metro and provincial transportation facilities, especially in the Metropolitan region?

When, if at all, is the Minister meeting with the commission or its chairman to discuss these problems and to insure that taxpayers' dollars are not being wasted by useless duplication?

Hon. Mr. Gomme: Mr. Speaker, that is not exactly as I have the question.

I cannot give the date of the reply but I can tell you that I met with the chairman and the commission on April 30, not on this specific problem which the member discussed here.

To the second part, what I have is, "When is the Minister meeting with the commission or its chairman to discuss these problems?" I have had no request that I know of for a further meeting.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, if I could ask the Minister a supplementary question: In the report in the Globe and Mail of November 26, 1968, there is an article entitled "Lack of data from province angers Metro". I was wondering if the Minister had seen this article upon which my questions were based?

Hon. Mr. Gomme: No, Mr. Speaker, I have not seen that.

I have the reply, Mr. Speaker, to a question asked by the member for Nipissing (Mr. R. S. Smith) yesterday, which I would like to answer. The work project numbers quoted in the question under item 1 was advertised today, November 27, and tenders will be opened on January 8, 1969.

Mr. Ben: On a point of order. Mr. Speaker, I think you made a point not too long ago that the government should not be incensed if the members put questions to them, but do not ask them all at once. Now, Mr. Speaker, the members who ask questions have to abide by the exigencies, and if the Minister is not in his chair the question is not asked.

Under the same reasoning, should not the Minister wait to answer a question until the member who asked it or who submitted it is in his seat to ask a supplementary?

Mr. Speaker: This question has arisen earlier in the first session of this House, and at that time it was my opinion that the members felt that the questions which they asked were of such urgent public importance that the answer should be made available at the earliest possible moment.

Indeed, only yesterday the hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. T. Reid), who was going to be absent, to make sure of the point dropped me a note and asked me if I would have the answer made public by the Minister in his absence.

Therefore, as far as I was concerned, I felt that that might well be the situation in this case. But I have no objection as far as the Chair is concerned to the questions being withheld until the member is present in the same manner as the questions to be asked of a Minister are held until he is present. So if it is the wish of the official Opposition that this answer be retained until the hon. member for Nipissing is here, then certainly I am sure the Minister will do so and I will so rule.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I think we might have the answer.

Hon. Mr. Gomme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The work project numbers quoted in the question under item 1 was advertised today, November 27, and tenders will be opened on January 8, 1969. This contract will include the 4.2 miles covered by the work project numbers.

And to the second part: It is covered in the first answer.

And to the third part: The highway construction programme for the year 1968-69 listed this work as being placed under contract in this fiscal year and no reference was made in the programme book which stated that this large contract would be completed in the fiscal year.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sandwich-Riverside has a question of the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests.

Mr. F. A. Burr (Sandwich-Riverside): A question of the Minister of Lands and Forests: What action is the lands and forests district office in Aylmer taking to ensure that the fallow deer on Peche Island in the Detroit River at Windsor are neither abandoned nor allowed to escape into a hostile environment?

Hon. R. Brunelle (Minister of Lands and Forests): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. member for Sandwich-Riverside, fallow deer are not native to Ontario nor do they survive in a wild state.

Just to make sure that we all understand, fallow deer are native to the Mediterranean area, they are quite small animals, are private property and are excluded from the provisions of The Game and Fish Act by section 2(a) and a definition in section 15 of the Act. The abandonment or ill treatment of such animals would be an offence under The Criminal Code. We have no knowledge of their presence on Peche Island and the owners were under no obligation to report them to us.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sudbury East has a question of the Minister of Labour.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): Is there any reason why members of the Legislature cannot be covered by workmen's compensation during the performance of their duties as MPPs so that their families will be in receipt of survivor benefits in case of permanent disablement or fatal accident?

Hon. D. A. Bales (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the answer to that is yes. To provide this coverage would require changes in the legislation.

Mr. Martel: A supplementary question. If that is all that is necessary, would the Minister be so kind as to introduce this legislation?

Hon. Mr. Bales: Well, Mr. Speaker, while members work hard no doubt, nevertheless I do not think we fall within the group of workmen that the Legislature meant to assist by this Act.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Oxford has a question of the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. G. W. Innes (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Municipal Affairs: Can the Minister give an indication to the House of the approximate cost of publicizing the tax rebate programme to the province in terms of dollars and cents?

Hon. W. D. McKeough (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the member will appreciate the expenditures are by no means complete. The total expenditures for administration, information and publicity, advertising, to October 31, 1968, amounted to $208,700. Perhaps if I gave the latest estimated figures to the end of March, the end of the fiscal year, it might be helpful to the members. Administration, about $172,000; advertising, $123,000; distribution of the leaflets and so on, about another $150,000; for a total of $450,000, which is less than half of what we originally estimated.

Mr. Innes: Would the Minister accept a supplementary question?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Yes.

Mr. Innes: Could the Minister give any indication of the costs of administering the tax rebate in each municipality? The administration costs?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: No.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for High Park.

Mr. Shulman: I have a question of the Minister of Municipal Affairs: Does the city of Toronto require the permission of the Minister and/or the Legislature to go ahead with the proposed CNE-Lakeshore auto race track?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, I would say to the member that—he is asking questions in various parts of the House about this—perhaps it would be best to give a little bit of a summary of what has gone on. There are three Acts involved administered by three different departments, The Municipal Act, The Highway Improvement Act, and The Highway Act itself, administered by three different departments, all of whom have solicitors of their own—

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): I know it is insignificant, but it is Transport.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: All right. These Acts all bear one way or another, or do not bear one way or another. There have been a number of opinions collected from departmental people, and within the last few days they have all been dumped into the hands of the Attorney General. The Attorney General, in due course I am sure, will advise the various departments so that we will be in a position to answer adequately the member's question.

Mr. Shulman: Will the Minister answer my question when he hears from the Attorney General?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I will be delighted. There are other people asking, too, and I will be delighted to answer them.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sudbury East has a question for the Minister of Mines.

Mr. Martel: Will the Minister of Mines instruct the Fecunis Mines immediately to have soundproof curtains installed in their machine shop to enable men to work there without having to seek medical attention before they all succumb to industrial deafness?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence (Minister of Mines): Mr. Speaker, this matter was first brought to my attention, I think, last Thursday by the hon. member for Nickel Belt and he turned over some communications and some material to me. We have transmitted this to our field staff in Sudbury—our safety engineer, our mining engineer—and they are investigating the alleged occurrences now. I point out to the hon. member that Fecunis Mines, of course, is geographically located within the riding of Nickel Belt. If the hon. member wishes I can communicate with—

Mr. Martel: On a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member has a point of order.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, I have in my hand a letter from the union in question—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will state his point of order.

Mr. Martel: I am coming to my point of order. The—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will state his point of order.

Mr. Martel: The Minister of Mines was making reference to the fact that this question which I raised comes from a riding other than my own. The point I am making is that the headquarters of this company is in my riding and the union in question wrote me. If the Speaker would let me, I would quote the letter in which they asked me to raise this matter.

Mr. Speaker: Order! There is no question in Mr. Speaker's mind that any member is entitled to raise any question with respect not only to the people in his own area that he represents, but any other area of public interest in Ontario.

The hon. Minister is likewise within his rights, as far as the chair is concerned, to refer to those others who had raised the same points with him when answering the question, and that is what he has done. The hon. Minister will complete his statement.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, I am not debating that point, nor arguing that point; I agree with the hon. member. If he had not been quite so rude he would have heard me say that because it is in the hon. member's riding I intend transmitting the results of this report to him. At the same time, I would be very glad to transmit the result of this report to him, if he wants it that way, but if he is going to play it in some other way, then perhaps I had better ask the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Demers) first because he asked me the question first.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the leaders of the government and official Opposition and the third party might sometime before noon, if possible, tomorrow, advise me whether dealing with the questions in the manner we have done today or in the manner we have previously done by members, is more satisfactory to them because I wish to proceed in the manner which is best for the House and for each member of the House on both sides.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order I think it is, while I am in an argumentative mood, may I add my vigorous objection, being one of the lowest men on the totem pole on this side, to that procedure.

I am being very serious, sir, when I think the rights of the private members are being transgressed by your ruling. I think it is up to the private members of this House to ask what they want, of whom they want, when they want, sir.

Mr. Speaker: The question of procedure here is one which originally caused a great deal of difficulty and a great deal of unnecessary noise and improper debate. It has been running very well today and it also went well yesterday. The chair has made no ruling; the chair is merely requesting to know which way is preferable so far as the House is concerned.

The hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin has a point of order or a point of personal privilege or an answer to a question, I am not sure which.

Mr. J. Root (Wellington-Dufferin): Mr. Speaker, yesterday when I was out of the House on water resources business, a question was directed to the Minister of Energy and Resources Management (Mr. Simonett) regarding a letter that I signed. He said that he would ask me to reply to the question. The question asked by the hon. member for Kitchener (Mr. Breithaupt) was:

Can the Minister advise the House as to the cost to the government of Ontario, through the Ontario Water Resources Commission, of the mailing on August 22nd, 1968, of a news release regarding the Root family reunion, the covering letter for which was on the letterhead of the commission over the signature of the vice-chairman of the commission?

The question is in two parts. The second part is—can the Minister advise further how this release has advanced the work of the commission?

The answer to the first part. The cost of mailing the release—stamps, letterheads and envelopes—was $1.30.

The answer to the second part is, I think everyone interested in the work of the water resources commission would like to know something of the background of the people who serve the commission. Every member of the Legislature and every arm of government is interested in public relations. It would be very difficult to estimate in dollars and cents the public relations impact of the news release that referred to seven generations of a family that has pioneered in many areas of development in Ontario.

I might add that the news item was carried in its entirety in about ten papers and many thousands of people had the benefit of the news item. What the benefit to the water resources commission would be, I am not prepared to say.

Mr. J. R. Breithaupt (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question which I might put with respect to the information given as to cost. I am wondering how many of these releases were sent out to the media.

Mr. Root: These released went to approximately 20 news outlets. I have 20 news outlets that I release news to and I am not sure even whether the whole 20 were covered. I am not sure whether the radio and television stations were covered—it would probably be 15, maybe 20.

Hon. R. S. Welch (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, may I say that one of the papers to which the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin has referred was the Beamsville Express in the riding of Lincoln because that is where the Root family started, in the county of Lincoln, and we are very, very proud of this fact.

Mr. Speaker, I have an answer for the hon. member for Sudbury with respect to the revenues of the liquor control board for a certain period of this year.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps we might ascertain if that question should be answered in the absence of the member.

Mr. Nixon: I think we would be glad if he did so.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister will then give the answer.

Hon. Mr. Welch: During the period June 26, 1968, to October 31, 1968, the total revenue of the Liquor Control Board of Ontario amounted to approximately $152,665,000. The total revenue for the same period in 1967 amounted to approximately $110,685,000. These figures, with respect to the 1968 period, of course, reflect the price change of January, 1968, together with the normal increase of sales of about 5 per cent, together with other events referred to by the hon. member in his question.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Before the orders of the day may I make one very brief comment in regard to questions. I think it used to be the custom here to ask the question whether or not the Minister was in his seat; then he answered it as soon as he got into his seat, whether the man who asked the question was in his seat or not.

I always thought that was a fairly reasonable sort of a way of getting questions dealt with expeditiously because then they were not held in abeyance until it was possible to match a private member and a Minister. We might think of reverting to that particular routine. Personally I find the question period very stimulating and very interesting, and sometimes very entertaining, so I would do nothing to limit it in any way.

I would like to take this opportunity to bring the hon. members up to date on the gift Ontario has made to help alleviate the suffering resulting from the war between the Nigerians and Biafrans. As I announced on October 4, the government, and I think all members of this Legislature, are deeply moved by the privations and misery created by this conflict. This was referred to by the leader of the Opposition yesterday in his remarks.

Accordingly, as a government, we arranged to send a gift of food and hospital supplies to Nigeria as a humanitarian gesture in the name of the people of Ontario. These foodstuffs, which will be distributed by the Red Cross, consisted of 50,000 pounds of powdered skim milk; 10,000 pounds of honey; 10,000 pounds of tinned cheese, and 2,000 bushels of dried corn. All these goods were drawn from stocks available here in the province.

The entire gift and its shipment to Nigeria was arranged in close consultation with Canadian Red Cross Society and with the federal government. I would like to say a word of thank you on behalf of Ontario both to the federal government and to the Canadian Red Cross for the co-operation we received in making sure that our gift became operative, so to speak.

You might be interested to know that Air Transport Command provided a plane which flew the hospital supplies to Halifax, in order that they could be put aboard a ship there. The total direct cost to the government, for the goods and their shipment, will be in the neighbourhood of $20,000; the actual value of the goods, of course, is considerably higher than that. I am informed that all these supplies have arrived in Lagos, and Fernando Po.

I would like to read a telegram that has been received from the Canadian High Commissioner in Lagos, dated November 14.

Emergency relief supplies Silver Crest cargo. Cargo for Lagos was transferred officially today to representatives of the International Committee of the Red Cross, and the federal Ministry of Health. Please advise the Government of Ontario both representatives expressed warm appreciation for contributions from Ontario, and from the Government of Canada.

Small though this effort might be in the total sum of misery caused by this war, I thought you might be interested to know that it is on the spot and doing what good it can.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The first order, resuming the adjourned debate on the amendment to the motion for an address and reply to the speech of the hon. Lieutenant-Governor at the opening of the session.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, economic development is a matter of vital concern in the province of Ontario today. Only with adequate economic development are we going to have job opportunities to meet our growing population; are we going to have adequate wealth to be able to meet the growing services which our people are requesting.

I do not propose at the moment to deal with the broader issues of economic development, but rather to focus on what I would describe as a rather fundamental aspect, namely research and development.

Two-thirds of the scientific knowledge in the world today has been discovered within the past 20 years. Fully 90 per cent of the research scientists since the beginning of time are living today. Now, Mr. Speaker, these two dramatic facts serve to underline that for the first time in history, humanity has entered an era of permanent scientific and industrial revolutions.

Increasingly, therefore, research and development are the key to economic development. But Canada lags far behind other industrial nations. Taken as a whole, the federal industry minister stated a year or so ago,

Canadian manufacturing industry in 1963 displayed a research intensity of approximately 1 per cent, which was equivalent to research and development expenditures of about one-half cent per dollar of sales.

By comparison, British industry spends three times, Sweden four times and the United States over six times relative to industrial output.

It would appear that a research intensity for manufacturing industry of 3 per cent—that is almost three times the current figure—is required to bring Canada more equally in line with comparable industrialized countries.

Now that was the view of Mr. Drury who was at that time the Minister of Industry.

Ten years ago, Mr. Speaker, one single act of the federal government, cancellation of the Arrow project, cut research and development expenditures by industry by more than one half; from 1959 to 1960, the year in which that action was taken, industry's share of our national R and D expenditure dropped from 29 per cent to 13 per cent.

Despite much more generous tax exemptions and grants through the Industrial Research and Development Incentives Act—(IRDIA)—industry's share of R and D expenditures has never recovered from that single blow; the latest figures indicate it amounts to some 24 per cent national expenditures.

I recall the disastrous consequences of that black Friday when the Arrow project was cancelled, not only because the impact was greatest in Ontario (where the majority of the 300 companies in the industrial complex which sustained it were situated) but because the disaster has been repeated ten years later. One after another, imaginative scientific projects have been discarded.

In 1966, McGill's high altitude research programme, familiarly known as HARP, was lost when American funds were cut off. A few months ago the federal government scrapped the $22 million Queen Elizabeth Observatory, out in British Columbia. A few weeks ago, the $155 million intense neutron generator—or ING as the project is popularly known—fell victim to Ottawa's austerity programme. As a result, Canada's scientific community looks to the future with a mixture of disillusionment and foreboding.

There may be sound reasons, Mr. Speaker, for the cancellation of a programme such as ING, but as Dr. W. G. Schneider, president of the National Research Council, has said: "If so, the public has a right to know. I feel," said Dr. Schneider, "that when decisions of this kind are made a rationale should be given. If they are handled in this way it tends to destroy morale. Everyone will always wonder what's going to—whose is going to get the chop next."

In fact, Canada has no overall scientific policy. We are staggering around in the dark in this issue. Although the science council was set up two years ago, the hon. C. M. Drury who is not only president of the Treasury Board, but chairman of the Privy Council committee on Scientific and Industrial Research, stated recently that the government has not yet received the science council's recommendations for priorities.

There is an increasingly urgent need for the formulation of a scientific policy for Canada. Until the federal government ends the confusion and uncertainty, it is admittedly difficult for Ontario or any other province to decide intelligently what its supplementary programme should be.

However, the Ontario government cannot afford to delay in clarifying the guidelines of its own R and D programme simply because the federal government has failed dismally to provide a national context. What is more, the Ontario government need not delay because there is a growing consensus, first, as to the basic misdirection of past scientific policy, and second, where the future emphasis should be.

Let me examine briefly each of these in turn, because out of such an analysis emerges the guidelines for a more effective R and D programme, both federal and provincial.

Canada spends proportionately more on basic and applied research, much less on development. The following comparative figures reveal the dramatic imbalance in our programme: 18 per cent of our research and development funds went to basic research; 42 per cent went to applied research; and only 40 per cent to development.

By comparison, the United States spent only 10 per cent on basic research; 22 per cent on applied research and the lion's share of 68 per cent on development. Britain's figures were nearly identical: 10 per cent on basic research; 24 per cent on applied research, and 62 per cent on development. In short, Canada is spending more money to generate new technology than to employ it. There is good reason to believe that as a relatively small country, we cannot afford that kind of a programme. It is misconceived in terms of meeting the urgent needs of our economic development.

Admittedly, Mr. Speaker, Canada has an obligation to add to the world's store of knowledge and new technology, but within the limitations of our expenditures, we have more than met our obligations in this connection. The need is for more applied research, even more for development which provides economic developments.

Viewed in this context, the proposed expenditure of some $155 million in the ING programme may well have been misconceived from the very outset. Certainly there was sharp controversy in the scientific world, with many people arguing that this was too great an investment in a project that, at best, would have had long term economic benefits.

For example, writing in the October issue of The Science Forum, Dr. R. F. Howlett, who was until last August head of the National Research Council's division of applied physics, puts the case this way:

Too often the argument in favour of a costly project with heavy continuing commitments is good science and excites the imagination. Too rarely is there a case to support its direct relevance to Canada's future needs, and a realistic appraisal of the probable value to the country as compared with the same money spent on some other projects.

In short, Mr. Speaker, Canada's research programme should be less of a hobby of the scientist, and more of the hand-maiden of economic developments.

Dr. Howlett suggests that the broad lines of scientific policy should be worked out in collaboration with Economic Council of Canada. Now this persuasive line of argument, bolstered by the statistics indicating the severe imbalance in our research and development expenditures, points clearly to the need for a much heavier emphasis on development. This is not a plea for forsaking pure research, but for a more judicious choice of projects, from which the spin-off to the economy would be greater and more immediate.

Dr. O. M. Solandt, chairman of the Science Council of Canada, has suggested programmes to be undertaken in the fields of space research, transportation, water resources, computer application and technology and northern resources, and one which I must confess, captures my imagination, namely human ecology, especially as it refers to life in urban environment.

These are the general lines along which a national scientific policy should be formulated. In my view, the Ontario government should exert every conceivable pressure for such a formulation and clear statement.

Meanwhile, to the considerable extent that we are free to shape our own research and the development programme, we should seek to achieve, not only its expansion through private as well as public funds but with that balance of expenditure, which will do more than any other single thing to assure the necessary economic development, to provide new jobs and let those below the poverty line share in our rising standards of living.

Lest anyone think that I exaggerate the importance of a research and development programme, let me remind the hon. members that leading economists have shown that technological change has been a major factor in the great increase in output per unit of labour and capital that has taken place in most industrialized countries in this century. It is now convincingly documented that only about 20 per cent of the gain in labour productivity has come from the more intensive use of capital. About 80 per cent has come from the use of new technologies and the greater competence of workers and managers.

In a growing proportion of our industry today, survival in the rat race of the modern markets stems directly from the innovation which research and development programmes assure. Not only do such programmes speed up the pace of scientific discovery, but they shorten the gap between the laboratory and the production line. This is the fundamental mark of a modern economy. The U.S. chemical industry, for example, now considers it normal that half its business is based on products that did not exist only ten years ago.

Now let me narrow the focus of my considerations more strictly, Mr. Speaker, to the province of Ontario. From the point of view of economic development, the important thing is not only that the total amount of research and development be adequate, but also that it be spent for the right purposes.

Professor P. M. S. Blackett, president of the Royal Society of Great Britain, argued two years ago that only the U.S.A. can remain nearly self-sufficient in technology—that certainly Britain cannot. It follows, therefore, that for countries like Britain to achieve rapid economic growth, it is important to use qualified scientists and engineers to apply existing scientific and technical knowledge and know-how to produce more competitive products, rather than to create new knowledge.

If that be true of Britain, it is certainly true of the province of Ontario. In fact, a recent report of the Science Council of Canada emphasized this very point. A major failing of Canadian science in the past, it stated, has been that it performed too much basic research remote from the training of new scientists and too much applied research far from the point of innovation. The report added that there has been a tendency to fail to carry through work from research and development to production and use.

With this emphasis in mind, there are three aspects of our R and D programme on which I would like to comment briefly. They are key to the formulation of guidelines for expanding Ontario's programme—something to which I intend to return later in this session.

The first is a new development—the establishment of industrial research institutes in three of Ontario's universities—Waterloo, Windsor and McMaster—through grants by the federal Department of Industry. These research institutes are designed to use the best local resources of a given area and bring to them the scientific backing which is most likely to contribute to its economy. Such a close relationship of the university with industry will inevitably result in the desired emphasis on applied research and development.

There are dangers, Mr. Speaker, involved in such research institutes, either through injury to the basic work of the university or through an unfair competition with the Ontario Research Foundation for the limited R and D dollars. These dangers, once again, I would like to explore during consideration of the estimates later this year. But, on balance, it is my view that these research institutes are new and important developments—so much so that if they prove successful, there is a regional need, an urgent regional need, for their extension to the Lakehead, to the Laurentian University area in the Sudbury basin and to some centre in eastern Ontario. Either through extending the federal programme or, if the federal government will not—through supplementing it by a provincial programme.

Secondly, so important is the basic role of research and development, and so hesitant has the Canadian industry been in initiating its own research, that there is a legitimate role for the expansion of government programmes. The tendency in Canada has been to concentrate an undue amount of research in government laboratories, thereby discouraging industry from starting or expanding its own research facilities. For example, in the United States, government laboratories use only 15 per cent of their national research and development funds; in the United Kingdom 26 per cent; in Canada the figure is 36 per cent. This tends to reduce the likelihood of economic returns, because the research is not closely enough related to possible economic production and returns.

How can the provincial government play a role in shifting the emphasis to applied research and development? There may be many answers and many views on this, but my own impression is that this might best be achieved through an expansion of the work of the Ontario Research Foundation. It is a highly respected organization, in close touch with industry. At the moment the province matches, dollar for dollar, the revenue which ORF receives from the industry through its contract research. It would seem to me advisable to expand any R and D programme through the established machinery of the ORF, with an even greater emphasis on encouraging the development of private industrial research facilities within the industry.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I find it exciting to contemplate the possibilities of developing in Ontario the kind of close working relationship between universities and industry which has resulted in such a phenomenal economic growth in New England, or in Texas, or in California. It seems to me that we have all the ingredients for this kind of development here in the province of Ontario—in the Sheridan Park complex with the Ontario Research Foundation intimately tied in with it; in the close relationship which such research facilities should be able to establish with so many of our established universities which are geographically near at hand; and on the research institutes, which have now been established in three Ontario universities.

The very fact that these facilities are not all concentrated in one place could result in a desirable decentralization of industrial development, thereby assisting in a more effective regional development, an objective that we all pay lip service to, but which gets fulfilled only to a painfully small degree. Certainly this combination of management know-how, university brains, and research finance by private and public funds, is the key to dynamic, economic development, so much so, that Jean-Jacques Servan-Schreiber, in his recent book, the "American Challenge", warns that it is resulting in a virtual takeover of the European Common Market by U.S.A. interests.

It surely represents the key to the kind of economic development which Ontario must have to provide the job opportunities for its growing population and the expanded wealth to meet our growing needs in this province.

Maintenant, M. l'Orateur, pendant le mois d'octobre, j'ai passé deux semaines à suivre un cours d'immersion totale dans le français. Je veux faire rapport à l'Assemblée que c'était une expérience des plus satisfaisantes. Je suis convaincu que pour celui qui est intéressé, et qui a quelques facilités pour les langues, le bilinguisme est un but non seulement réalisable mais franchement excitant.

Au cas où il y en aura ceux qui pensent que le cours n'est qu'une rigolade, permettez-moi de vous désabuser. Nous étions debout avant sept heures chaque matin pour déjeuner à sept heures quinze. Les cours débutaient à huit heures et continuaient jusqu'à onze heures trente. Les cours reprenaient à deux heures et se poursuivaient jusqu'à cinq heures. Le soir, encore trois heures de cours — de sept heures trente jusqu'à dix heures trente.

Pendant les repas et les périodes de récréation, nous causions en français. Enfin, dans les quelques instants qui nous restaient avant le coucher on nous obligeait de lire quelques chapitres du "Compte de Monte Cristo", et d'en faire un résumé écrit en français.

En somme, M. l'Orateur, c'était une baignade sans merci dans le français. Comme disait un de nos instituteurs avec beaucoup d'à propos, c'était un lavage de cerveau en règle.

Toutefois, gardons-nous d'exagérer: pendant les classes ici à Queen's Park, nous avons complété huit à dix leçons. A la fin de la baignade nous en avons complété quinze.

Le cours complet comprend trente-deux leçons. Donc pour ceux d'entre nous qui ont pratiqué l'immersion totale, nous sommes tout juste qu'à mi-chemin. Ne demandez pas de nous d'être parfaits bilingues — pas si tôt!

Mon expérience personnelle mise à part, je suis devenu encore plus intéressé dans tout le problème de l'enseignement des langues. Aujourd'hui, en Ontario, il y a des milliers de nouveaux Canadiens qui prennent des cours d'anglais pour maîtriser la langue du monde du travail. Je me suis demandé jusqu'à quel point nous nous servons de ces nouvelles méthodes, et si l'approche générale était toujours l'étude plutôt morne et vieux jeu de la grammaire — la méthode qui s'est montrée si peu efficace pour développer la maîtrise d'une langue.

Après enquête, je me rends compte que l'Ontario, fort heureusement, s'est acquis en 1963 un comité des langues modernes qui est à la fois actif et clairvoyant. Ce comité opère sous les auspices de l'Institut Ontarien des Programmes d'études.

Depuis 1966, ce travail est continué par l'entremise du centre des langues modernes qui fait parti de l'Institut Ontarien pour les Etudes en Education. Celui-ci est le seul institut au Canada anglais qui a comme tâche l'étude des langues. Il est à espérer qu'à partir de ses efforts, le Canada pourra réaliser davantage son héritage linguistique.

De plus, on m'informe que les cours d'an-glais offerts par la section de la citoyenneté aux nouveaux Canadiens se servent de ces nouvelles méthodes. Donc, nous pouvons espérer que les méthodes actuelles auront comme résultat un bilinguisme plus poussé que fut le cas pendant l'époque du "high school French" auquel la plupart d'entre nous fut exposé.

Ceci m'amène directement au sujet de prime importance: celui des efforts de l'Ontario à devenir une province bilingue et ainsi soulager les tensions qui menacent de faire sauter la Confédération.

Ce gouvernement a fait sien le but tracé dans le rapport de la Commission Royale sur le Bilinguisme et le Biculturalisme. Il y a bientôt un an, le premier ministre annonçait la création de quatre groupes de travail: un pour faire enquête sur l'à propos de mettre en vigueur les recommandations concernant l'administration de la justice; un deuxième sur l'Assemblée et les statuts provinciaux; un troisième sur l'administration municipale; et un quatrième sur la fonction publique provinciale.

On m'informe que ces groupes de travail ont tous achevé leurs tâches et que leurs rapports se trouvent maintenant aux mains du gouvernement. Je demande au premier ministre quand il a l'intention de remettre ces rapports à cette Chambre, et ce que le gouvernement envisage à faire à la lumière de leurs recommandations.

Evidemment, ces études sont d'une importance fondamentale quant à toute action à entreprendre en vue de la formation de districts bilingues tels qu'envisagés par le rapport Laurendeau-Dunton pour toute région où la population d'expression française comporte 10 pour cent ou davantage du total. Déjà, le gouvernement fédéral a présenté son projet de Loi concernant le Statut des Langues Officielles du Canada. Cette loi forme le cadre dans lequel pourrons agir les provinces.

Je formule l'espoir que le gouvernement procédera pendant cette session à la réalisation de cette recommandation — clef de la commission Laurendeau-Dunton. Pour que le Canada devienne pays bilingue, l'Ontario doit prendre la tête.

Je ne peux faire mieux que de citer brièvement Monsieur Vincent Prince du Devoir. Voici l'extrait d'un éditorial du 8 décembre, 1967 intitulé "Les districts bilingues, pierre angulaire et pierre de touche du rapport Laurendeau". Je cite:

Nous croyons que les commissaires ont raison de parler de "pierre angulaire". Ce sont des districts, en effet, qui viendront donner un sens pratique et concret à toutes les autres recommandations. C'est par eux que, territorialement, les deux groupes linguistiques atteindront vraiment à un certain statut d'égalité même en dehors du Québec.

Les francophones qui vivront dans ces districts officiellement considérés comme bilingues continueront, certes, à subir une grande partie des inconvénients inhérents à leur état de minoritaires, mais, au plan de leurs relations avec l'autorité telle qu'elle s'incarne dans leur petit coin de la patrie, ils n'auraient plus cette pénible impression de se trouver complètement en pays étranger.

Il y aura désormais, en d'autres termes, d'importants îlots à travers le pays où le caractère bilingue du Canada pourra se refléter. Il sera possible de sortir du "ghetto" québécois sans tomber nécessairement en territoire unilingue anglais.

Mais nous dirions que la création de ces districts ne sera pas que la pierre angulaire de la réforme d'ensemble suggérée par la commission royale d'enquête. Il en sera aussi la pierre de touche. Le refus ou l'acceptation d'un semblable projet par les autorités fédérales ou provinciales permettra, en effet, de nous fixer une fois pour toutes sur la bonne ou la mauvaise volonté du Canada anglais, s'il y a de la bonne volonté, bien des espoirs restent permis; par contre, si la mauvaise volonté devient manifeste, il y aurait plus lieu de trop miser sur l'avenir de la confédération.

Le peuple ontarien est en très grande majorité engagé à outrance à la préservation et à la consolidation de la confédération.

Je suis d'avis que Monsieur Vincent Prince n'exagère point l'importance des districts bilingues pour atteindre ce but.

Pour cette raison je presse le gouvernement à procéder à leur réalisation avec toute hâte possible. Le gouvernement est assuré d'avance de l'appui non équivoque du Nouveau Parti Démocratique.

Now, Mr. Speaker, returning to the language in which we will be more efficient, may I say that I want now to turn to what is undoubtedly the major question before this session of the Legislature—that of taxes, tax reforms, and the related question of new fiscal agreements with the federal government for sharing of the tax dollar.

Before I begin, may I say that I was most interested in the comments by the leader of the Opposition in this connection. In the first of his comments, for what appears to me to be the first time there was a frank assertion that there was need for some renegotiation of the tax base with the federal government, as well as some protests with regard to the federal government's unilateral decision not to share the new social development tax.

In essence, the Liberal Party's position is that Ottawa is too rigid! But there is no indication really as to how Ottawa's rigidity should be eased, that basic rigidity that has been going on for two years.

The interjection of the leader of the Opposition indicates that he is only referring to what happened in the last month or two, instead of the two years of adamant stand with regard to the federal government.

But he has also said, Mr. Speaker, that Ontario is too rigid, that we might as well accept from Ottawa what Ottawa is offering. After all, they made this assertion two years ago and they have not changed, so, in effect, why continue to argue with Ottawa.

Now, that is all very fine, but then he comes back and says, without any specific delineation of the programme, that this government obviously has to cut back in many ways. That is the main preoccupation of the Liberal government, a preoccupation that should not be ignored. But I suggest it is not the whole issue. If there is going to be a cut-back, we must know where the cutback is going to be in terms of services. I venture a prediction—and perhaps this is where a politician should not stick his neck out—but after listening to this government last year talk about all the savings that must be made in cutting to the bone, we finally got a budget in this province which was for $486 million larger—the largest single increase of any year in Ontario's history.

I venture the prediction that in spite of all the gloom and doom, in spite of all the talk, that we are going to cut back, that we are cutting to the bone, when the budget comes down, it is going to be significantly larger than it was last year.

But the most important thing is that there is no suggestion—certainly no suggestion, other than by implication—no suggestion in detail from the Liberal party as to the basic need that has got to be tackled, namely, the reform of our tax structure.

What the Liberal Party is asking this government to do is to seek some alteration in the division in the present inequitable tax structure—the present inequitable tax dollar.

No real consideration of tackling the Carter commission in its recommendations—no real consideration back in the province of Ontario of tax reform.

Mr. Speaker, in my view that makes a mockery of the kind of society we are attempting to build in this nation, either at the national or provincial level—what is referred to as a just society.

Taxes are certainly the most topical issue today. Little wonder when you look at recent developments. Rising property taxes have hit almost everyone. Earlier this year we all felt the provincial hikes in the gasoline and the tobacco taxes, motor vehicle licenses, hospital and medicare premiums, and fishing and hunting licenses. Ottawa's new social development tax has now been added to the personal income surcharge which went into effect last January 1, and to the federal liquor, beer and tobacco taxes brought in a month earlier.

Never in our history has there been such a rapid-fire attack on our personal pockets. Naturally, it has aroused deep concern, particularly when it is coincident with a rise in living costs at double the rate of the previous decade. Loud noises from government spokesmen at both Queen's Park and Ottawa warn us that we have not seen anything yet, so the issue becomes of even greater importance than the current scene seems to suggest.

A situation such as this prompts one to ask whether the Liberals in Ottawa, or the Conservatives here at Queen's Park, know what they are doing in the tax field. Have they a tax philosophy? Oliver Wendell Holmes once said: "With taxes I buy civilization." We all know that nothing in this world is free, and the public programmes must be paid for through taxes.

We also recognize that an increasing number of our wants can be met only through community action. You cannot buy a yard of clean air at the department store, or a mile of super highway as an extra with your car. But if we are going to finance more things collectively through taxes, we must be absolutely sure that they are imposed in the fairest possible way.

Several years ago, John Kenneth Galbraith warned us that we face a superabundance of private goods, but a famine in public goods. The truth of his statement is self-evident today. Our stores are jammed with every kind of electrical gadgets and toys for Christmas shoppers, but we have not enough serviced land to keep the price of lots at reasonable levels for prospective home owners.

We have not sufficient space in our community colleges for the 2,300 applicants who were turned away this year. We have not enough government funds, through rehabilitation and counselling, which might end the poverty syndrome, that condemns generation after generation to a life of welfare and deprivation.

Galbraith pointed out that with this kind of distortion, in our allocating our resources, none of us enjoys the good life to the full.

The enjoyment of having a car is seriously reduced on highways that are congested and dangerous. The satisfaction of owning a summer cottage is a much less if there is no unpolluted lake to swim in. But this brings us face to face, Mr. Speaker, with the dilemma of our day.

When you offer people a choice between doing without public goods—which are essential to their well-being—or an increasing tax to finance them, many prefer to do without the public goods because they simply cannot afford them. And they are dead right in that conclusion!

The couple between 66 and 70 years of age, for example, living on an old age pension, even with a supplement, have only $2,570 income. They just cannot afford $47.40 that they now must pay in income tax, nor can they afford the 5 per cent provincial sales tax and the hidden federal sales tax, which they pay on almost all of the goods they purchase, except food.

The person on fixed income cannot absorb the increase in his property taxes every year. Nor can the 190,000 workers on minimum wages afford any more taxes, because even the new minimum wage income levels represent only $2,704 a year, if they are lucky enough to work 40 hours a week. Such minimum wage levels simply establish and condone a pocket of poverty which stretches all across the province of Ontario.

Even less can these groups, and many others, afford an increase in the sales tax, or an extension of the sales tax to food, car repairs or hair cuts. A tax system which imposes heavier burdens on people such as these is grossly inequitable. They are carrying more than their fair share of the burden right now. But there are groups which can afford to pay more to ensure that they themselves, or society as a whole, are not starved of public goods.

The person who makes a capital gain on the stock market has more money in his pocket than his neighbour. The land speculator who reaps a windfall gain from the growth of a community has an unearned profit financed out of the taxes paid by everybody. The person, or company, able to take advantage of the present income tax loopholes is holding privileged dollars which are taxed more lightly than those in the pockets of the ordinary wage earners.

We must, and we can, afford more public goods if we are going to meet the problems of urbanization and break the stalemate which is leading to the civil unrest everywhere. But we can afford them only if we finance them by fair share taxes based on the ability to pay. This will require a restructuring of our entire tax system at all three levels of government, but the present shrill dialogue between the Tories here and the Liberals in Ottawa and our municipal representatives has degenerated into an aimless squabbling which offers no hope of satisfying the needs of the people they claim to represent.

In short, Mr. Speaker, I think what we have got to do first is take a look at what are the features of an equitable tax structure. I want to deal with that now in terms of the distinctive features of a New Democratic tax system.

1. The first principle would be basic equity, with every citizen being called upon to assume his fair share—no more, no less—of the total burden. People in like circumstances would be treated equally.

2. No type of income should go untaxed.

3. It should effect a significant redistribution of income and wealth with our objective being equality of condition rather than merely of opportunity.

4. It should, of course, be based on ability to pay, with rate schedules even more progressive.

5. The tax system should be regarded as a major instrument in planning economic growth and assuring full employment.

6. It must reflect increasing emphasis on channelling corporate surpluses, which are the major pool of investment capital, in greater measure toward major public projects.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I suggest to this House that you can get a picture of the New Democratic tax system if you study the 20 dissents that were made by the New Democratic members who sat on the select committee which studied the Smith committee recommendations.

In essence they demanded "a reshaping of the Ontario tax structure to make it a truly dynamic and progressive tax system".

Such a tax system will rely primarily on those sources which are most equitable and whose yield is most elastic—sources like the income tax and transfers of wealth between generations, all of which produce increases in revenue at a faster rate than the provincial products grow. This occurs because such taxes are generally levied with progressive rate schedules.

But even these taxes will be equitable, and will yield their true potential, only if all income and wealth is included in the tax base. As the Carter commission pointed out, our present taxes in these fields are like a sieve through which many dollars escape, or are taxed too lightly. Such things as capital gains, stock options, resources industry profits and insurance investment income make up the $5 billion which is not carrying its proper share of the collective costs of our society.

Broadening the tax base and closing these loopholes to catch exempt income dollars will produce a substantial increase in revenue for both the federal and provincial governments, without any increase in the present tax rates, or any additional burden on the ordinary wage earner or pensioner.

I ask this question: have we ever heard the Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) of this province, or the Provincial Treasurer (Mr. MacNaughton), advocating such a reform? Have the Liberals mentioned this source of revenue? Their joint silence on this topic is deafening. Ottawa's virtual rejection of the Carter report, and Mr. Trudeau's spurning of a capital gains tax during the election campaign, indicates little prospect for a broadened tax base. Instead, the federal Liberals put their new taxes on these least able to pay.

Most economists reject complete reliance on income tax alone for all revenue needs and they recommend instead a carefully balanced mix of taxes on income, wealth and consumption. This ensures that no form of activity escapes tax; that visitors and non-resident companies pay a share, and that rates do not get out of line with those in neighbouring jurisdictions or cause psychological blocks to certain kinds of economic activity.

In our opinion, the ideal tax is one which places most stress on reformed and broadened income and wealth taxes, and de-emphasizes property taxes, sales taxes, flat rate premiums and other regressive forms of taxation.

Furthermore, in all its levies the ideal tax mix includes relieving clauses which lift the burden of taxation from the low income groups, who really have no surplus after they have provided for their food, clothing and shelter needs. These groups may even be entitled to a negative tax which would return to them some of the collective contributions from other groups which are fortunate enough to have more bargaining power in the market place.

You can call this principle a negative income tax, or a guaranteed annual income, or whatever term you wish. If it is more than a refund of over-taxation it recognizes our fiscal system must include redistribution as one of its elements, to compensate for the imperfections of the market system.

The New Democratic Party tax mix will not, I assure you, follow the present Tory trend of reducing the proportion of revenue derived from corporate income—something which has been going on for the past ten years or so—while increasing the proportion from personal income. Even if we concede that some of the corporate taxes is passed on to consumers and becomes, in effect, a sales tax, the exact amount varies from industry to industry and depends on the competitive conditions of the moment.

There are strong arguments for continuing to collect a fair share from corporate surpluses, particularly when a large proportion of them go across the border, and if untaxed, simply benefit either foreign shareholders or foreign governments at the expense of the Canadian taxpayer.

Transfer of wealth between generations is another revenue source which must be included in the tax mix. This source has been neglected by the present government. In a paper delivered to the Canadian Tax Foundation conference on the Smith report last January, Professor Claude Forget, of the University of Montreal, said:

“Wealth taxation could make a decidedly greater contribution to public finances. Moreover, from an economic viewpoint, given the reason for people saving, estate and gift taxes are most unlikely to reduce the amount of savings. If anything, those taxes may very well stimulate savings.

A rather sharply contradictory view to that which is normally propagated, I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker.

The new federal rules under which transfers between spouses are exempt, and heavier taxes are placed on other transfers, will make it necessary for Ontario to re-examine our succession duties. If we do not act promptly, the lack of harmonization between the two statutes will cause great inconvenience to taxpayers and our failure to impose a gift tax will permit the revenue to be seriously eroded. The Smith committee recommended a provincial gift tax, but the select committee's conservative majority—and I think that could be a small “c” there—backed away from it. The New Democratic members dissented from the committee's timidity.

I note that the Ontario Economic Council does not appear to share the select committee's feeling that transfers between generations are a suitable tax source. On page 11 of its report, the select committee says:

Your committee, moreover, thinks that the area of wealth taxes has been inadequately explored, and that it offers both qualitative and quantitative advantages as a potential source of revenue.

The economic council's conclusions are in striking contrast to that. It claims that the present wealth taxes in Canada represent “an economically regressive taxation policy”. Its study of succession duties is a lop-sided analysis of their effect only on closely-held private corporations. In order to permit the small segment of the population engaged in this type of business activity to establish small dynasties, the council is prepared to completely free from taxes the shares of such companies. Its tender solicitude for this class of succession duty taxpayers is based on a premise which both Carter and the Smith commission found false after considerable research, namely, that estate taxes and succession duties are the cause of the break-up of family businesses or their take-over by foreign owners.

One wonders then if the government will respond to the economic council's neanderthal advice to discriminate in favour of one form of business activity, and to question the whole function of inheritance taxes, when the select committee urged greater reliance on them.

One also wonders about the merits of retaining a body such as the economic council which appears to have become so pre-occupied with the building up of special privilege and inequality of economic opportunity in this province.

But, Mr. Speaker, to return to the general picture. The New Democratic Party also believes that a proper tax mix must include a fair return to the people of the province for the use of their resources. The present revenue amounts to less than two per cent of the $2 billion produced by our mining and forest industries. It does not even cover the cost of the services provided to those industries by the provincial and local governments.

Furthermore, in our tax mix, the heavy burden of the regressive property tax will be lightened by the provincial government's gradual assumption of education, health and welfare costs, and by promoting efficiency through regional government.

In addition, burdens and costs will be equalized through the adoption of the municipal foundation programme for general services, similar to the educational foundation programme now in effect. I dealt with this proposal at length in the Throne speech last February and I note that the select committee on the Smith report moved toward acceptance of the principle in its recommendations for mining municipalities. Unfortunately, its formula does not go far enough and equalizes mainly the revenue side of the equation, without giving sufficient weight to differences in costs of providing services among these municipalities. Also, it only brings municipalities up to the provincial average, which may not be adequate to assure a proper standard of services to all residents of the province.

Mr. Speaker, the New Democratic Party would also lighten the sales tax, either by exempting additional necessities of life, or by providing tax credits and rebates for those which are difficult to administer. The credit approach is a familiar device for offsetting tax on items where an exemption is cumbersome, but it is completely unsuitable as a substitute for a food exemption since food constitutes such a large proportion of the spending of low income families, and they simply cannot afford to wait for a refund of excess tax six months or a year later.

Under our tax mix, we would depart from the highly regressive method of financing hospital and medical care largely through flat rate premiums. Instead, we propose nominal premiums for most families and individuals, with complete exemption for welfare recipients and low income groups. The balance of the cost would be financed from the progressive tax system which a New Democratic government will substitute for our present lopsided system after the 1971 election.

We believe that gasoline and motor vehicle taxes should be kept to a level sufficient to negotiate the motorists' fair share of the cost of providing road systems. Current economic thinking in the Smith report places this at somewhere between two-thirds and three-quarters of the expenditures.

Incidentally, our present highway taxes are something over 100 per cent, and yesterday, by a decision that has not yet come before this House, we had an increase further in car licenses.

However, Mr. Speaker, having dealt in many details in this broad tax picture with the tax mix that we would advocate let me then summarize the approaches which a New Democratic government would follow in reforming the tax system of the province of Ontario.

First, the tax mix would be altered to emphasize those taxes which are most progressive, growth-producing and offer the most potential for revenue.

Second, we would reform the personal and corporate income taxes so as to broaden the overall tax base, close the present tax loopholes, and afford a greater measure of relief to low income earners.

Third, we would institute a tax on capital gains and on speculative land transactions.

Fourth, relief of the property tax would flow from the province assuming a larger proportion of current municipal costs, and through a foundation plan for municipal finance.

Fifth, we would decrease reliance on the sales tax, and exempt additional necessities.

Sixth, we would move away from regressive, flat rate premiums as the principal means of paying for health and hospital services.

Seventh, taxes on motor vehicles and gasoline would be kept to a level representing their fair share of road costs.

This then is our concept of an ideal tax system. It is the only one which will ensure that our collective needs are paid for in accordance with ability to pay, and that they are not denied because the burden of taxes is too heavy on some segments of the population.

While the Smith committee and the select committee on taxation fell short of this ideal system, it did provide us with a wealth of material and proposals which must now be sifted through and the progressive proposals implemented. What we need, Mr. Speaker, is the machinery for establishing a continuing working relationship between the provincial government and the municipalities to achieve this objective.

My proposal would be that there should be set up a provincial tax structure committee for working out collective decisions and producing an integrated taxation policy at the provincial level.

If there is a need—and Ontario has been arguing it vigorously for years—for the federal government to sit down with the provinces and work out systematically a more accurate equation of responsibilities and revenues to meet them, then there is an equally pressing need for the province to sit down with the municipalities. Together they must work out an integrated tax policy, providing the municipalities with the necessary revenues to meet whatever responsibilities are going to be left with them, and that is our decision as to what shall be left with them.

An integrated tax policy at the provincial-municipal level becomes even more important as we move to the establishment of regional government. Larger and more efficient units of local government will make it possible for their province to restore local autonomy and make certain that each region can raise more of its revenue needs. We can then get away from the present extensive reliance on provincial grants.

Now, Mr. Speaker, how does this restructured tax system worked out through the more democratic machinery of a provincial tax structure committee contrast with what the Tories have built up over the last 25 years? Let us take a look at it.

In the first place, this government has left an excessive load on the homeowner by failing to lighten the property tax burden through a substantial shift in the responsibilities to the province. The $150 million basic shelter grants were only a token handout which offset 1968 tax increases, but will not stop the steady rise in urban costs next year or the year after. It is doubtful if they will benefit many tenants at all.

The government also has made no real effort to obtain a reform of the income tax. They have rejected a capital gains tax, or an unearned increment tax on land speculation, and regretfully the select committee backed them up on this with that Conservative majority. They have not endorsed any of the Carter proposals for broadening the tax base or closing the loopholes. All this government has done is ask for a bigger share of an unreformed income tax which hits the lower income groups unfairly and is not producing its full revenue potential for either the federal or provincial governments.

Instead of looking to a reformed income tax, both personal and corporate, for more revenue the government has continued to add to the regressivity of our tax system by increasing flat-rate premiums for hospitalization and OMSIP, and by raising gasoline and motor vehicle taxes well beyond the level needed to finance the motorists' proper share of road costs.

In addition, the government has taken no steps to increase significantly, revenue from our mining industry. It contents itself with a yield of about $16 million from a billion-dollar industry to meet both provincial and municipal purposes.

The recent increases in forest levies were also token, and will likely bring in only a million dollars extra from this second billion-dollar resource industry.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, all of the present government's recent tax reforms have reduced the progressivity of our provincial tax system and added excessive amounts to the burden carried by the lower and middle income groups. All this at a time when promises of tax reform are bandied about with reckless abandon.

The select committee demanded that: "Changes in the tax mix and in the tax rates be designed so that the overall Ontario tax system is restructured along more progressive lines in the interest of social justice and economic growth." High-sounding words! We are still waiting for some indication that the government shares this philosophy.

Nor have we seen any sign that the Liberals accept this philosophy. They have not called for a fundamental reform of the income tax, nor have they endorsed a capital gains tax or a land speculators' tax. They did not put in a dissent on the proposal to tax food under the sales tax, though I will have to agree—

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): That is incorrect.

Mr. MacDonald: I repeat—they did not put in a dissent on the proposal to tax food under the sales tax in the report but, I will agree that when the public storm broke, their panic was exceeded only by that of the Tory backbenchers and they have been dissenting daily ever since.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): I advocated the tax on land here last year and the member for Scarborough West (Mr. Lewis) jeered at me.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): The hon. member for Riverdale (Mr. J. Renwick) is right when he says the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) is not credible.

Mr. MacDonald: Instead the Liberals—I guess I have gotten to them—instead the Liberals have spent most of their time defending the federal government's shifting of the tax system away from progressivity and its denial of additional tax room for the provinces. They have offered no solution to the pressing revenue needs of this province beyond suggesting that economies should be made by government reorganization.

Admittedly, Mr. Speaker, there are savings possible from the elimination of waste and improvement of government efficiency. We do not overlook them. We would apply modern and imaginative techniques of forward planning, regional decentralization, programme budgeting, cost-benefit analysis, operations research, centralized purchasing, and so on.

It should be pointed out that the most expensive politics are crash programmes, hastily devised in reaction to some crisis. This is the kind of spending which the present government is forced into in the housing crisis, the sewage problem, growing unemployment and the shortage of serviced land. Heaven knows how many millions are wasted because of inadequate planning to anticipate highly predictable needs.

The New Democratic Party government would also look to increased revenues from the expansionary economic policies which we would pursue. Raising productivity, and putting the unemployed to work would increase the revenue share of the provincial pie and mean a lighter burden of taxes for everyone. Turning welfare recipients into self-supporting citizens through rehabilitation would both increase revenues and reduce expenditures.

But in the last analysis, Mr. Speaker, we would rely on a restructured tax system for the main financing of our programmes. Tax reforms cannot be delayed any longer; and the Throne Speech on this as on most things, is simply bankrupt.

Now, we recognize that Ontario cannot reshape its tax system alone. The level of taxation and the tax mix chosen by the federal government inevitably affects our freedom of action, and vice versa. The fiscal climate is affected by the interplay of the taxing and borrowing decisions of all three levels of government. Nor can we achieve a full reform of the income tax structure without the co-operation of the federal government. Regardless of constitutional provisions, we are not 11 watertight compartments, but rather a nation seeking common economic and social goals. We cannot achieve these by acting in isolation, whether we are a large province or a small one. We do so at the peril of national unity, economic growth and a rational system of priorities and taxation.

The present impasse in the federal-provincial relations is a serious one. We all recognize that we have growing needs at all levels of government. We all want to develop Canada as a strong viable economy, and in a country where every resident has an equal right to a basic standard of services. We all want a society in which mobility of population is always available so that citizens will not be penalized because of geographic location.

But, we also recognize that our resources are not unlimited and we must allocate them among our different wants in both the public and private sector in a way which is most likely to achieve these national goals.

The present Liberal government at Ottawa is pursuing a stiff-necked attitude of considering only federal priorities and federal problems. Trudeau's parochial approach represents such an abdication of national leadership that it may be an even greater threat to the long-term interests of this country than the aimless drift of the earlier Pearson regime.

For example, the federal government's current proposal that the provinces take almost full responsibility for the three programmes which most closely affect our lives today—education, health and welfare—will remove these areas from inclusion in federal priorities and federal initiatives. It will simply lead to a hodge-podge of standards and a jungle of regressive taxes to finance them.

Without adequate equalization, some provinces will be unable to provide an acceptable basic level of services in these fields. Canadians will not be able to move from province to province without grave disturbances in their lives. Wherever they live they will face unequal tax burdens. We shall be creating and consolidating nationally the inequities which we are seeking to remove within each province.

There will be a balkanization of decision-making in the most crucial areas of our national well being. All this from a Prime Minister who presented himself to the people last June as a champion of national unity!

Mr. Nixon: And now commands over 50 per cent of national support.

Mr. Sopha: Do the hon. members understand why the hon. member for Riverdale says "MacDonald cannot win"?

An hon. member: Now we know.

Mr. MacDonald: If this devolution of responsibilities to the provinces is accompanied by an adequate transfer of tax room, the federal government will be left with insufficient control of the fiscal levers for stabilizing the economy. There is as yet no sign of any joint federal-provincial machinery to take over this responsibility. Unless the granting of the tax room is accompanied by more adequate equalization than we now have, the rich provinces will get richer and the poor ones poorer under such a system. Emerging from the constitutional conferences a year ago was a widespread recognition that regional disparities and economic growth and living standard represented as great a threat to Canadian unity as the differences between English and French Canada. In spite of that recognition the federal government is pursuing policies which will increase those disparities.

I will give Ontario's Prime Minister credit that the government here has seen the danger to our national unity arising from such a federal stance. It has asked for federal-provincial machinery to set priorities, and engage in joint fiscal planning. It has expressed its willingness to share in an equalization programme to remove regional disparity.

But this government, Mr. Speaker, has also shown an unwillingness to face realities when it simply asks for more room for provincial priorities within an unreformed income tax structure that already bears too heavily on the lower income groups.

With rapid growth in provincial and municipal responsibilities I believe that the provinces do need a bigger share of the dynamic progressive tax fields. But we must go beyond this and ask for fundamental tax reform, and a radical change in the federal-provincial sharing of fiscal decisions. We can no longer solve our problems simply by accusing the other level of government of selfishness. The kind of conduct that has been going on in recent months.

Just last week, for example, Dean W. R. Lederman of Queen's University law faculty, put his finger on the problem when he told the conference of the Canadian Tax Foundation:

"I believe in the future of Canada as a purely federal state. I believe our political leaders can ensure a great future for Canada as a federal state, but they will have to work at it in a spirit of partnership and co-operation."

He went on:

"While the primary leadership must come from the federal government, nevertheless the provinces, large and small, must be treated as partners and not subordinates."

And taking income taxes as an example of an area where this approach is necessary, because of the concurrent jurisdiction in that field, Dean Lederman said:

"A federal system of income tax, having at its territorial base the whole country, can be more effective and more fair than separate provincial taxes. But the constitutional point is that we are dependent on voluntary inter-governmental agreement on the partnership principle of co-operative federalism—something we must make every effort to retain and advance."

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Nixon: Is that a first prize boar button the Premier is wearing.

Mr. MacDonald: As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, it looked like one of the MacDonald buttons from the convention. I just wondered whether one of them had been delivered to the Prime Minister.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am interrupting the hon. member.

I just met a group of young people who were in the gallery here, who are sponsoring youth safety clubs across Canada to increase the degree of safety on our highways. They are working particularly with the young people of our country.

I would have met them outside had I not felt that I should sit here and listen to the words of wisdom of the leader of the New Democratic Party. I explained to them that this was a leaders' day that has lasted for three days, and is now going to last for several more. In any event they are here and I would like to bring their activities to your attention, because they deserve all the support we can give them as they work among their own age group to ensure safety on our highways, and this is one of their buttons.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: I thank the Prime Minister for his explanation of the button, and I thank him for a two minutes' period of respite.

Picking up once again, Mr. Speaker, in my Throne Speech of 1967, two years ago, I stated that Ontario must work for the development of an integrated fiscal policy. When it was deemed advisable and necessary to channel the greater share of the national product into social capital and public services, we must convince Ottawa that the onus for raising taxes should be shared by all levels of government, and be done in concert with a view to the overall economic consequences.

Increases should be mainly in the dynamic and progressive fields, and be based on ability to pay. I would even go so far as to suggest that after the 11 governments have sat down together, bargained about priorities, and agreed on changes on tax rates and the tax mix, they should then make a joint pre-budget announcement of the proposed changes. This could not include change which must be kept secret until implemented, but I suggest that much of the time-honoured tradition of budget secrecy is irrelevant today, in the complex inter-relationships of a federal state. The only purpose of secrecy is to prevent taxpayers from taking advantage of company changes to the detriment of revenue or their fellow citizens.

I can see no reason why changes in personal or corporate income tax could not be handled by 11 governments in the same way they are now handled by single governments, made effective on a set date and subject to legislative ratification.

The sharing of the proposed tax increases by the different levels of government must also be worked out jointly in light of national goals and priorities. We must start developing machinery to facilitate this joint fiscal planning at once, and I would hope that this would be one of the top items on the agenda of the forthcoming federal-provincial conference. It does not need to wait for constitutional reform, since it is, as Dean Lederman said, "a voluntary process of negotiation to rationalize the sharing of joint jurisdiction on common tax fields."

The reconstituting of the tax structure committee at the last federal-provincial conference is a step towards the establishment of the necessary machinery for this exercise. If, as I mentioned earlier, this whole effort is underpinned by a provincial tax structure committee, providing the machinery for a working—continuous working—relationship between the province and the municipalities, then Ontario's delegation will be in a position to reflect fully and accurately the full range of needs within the province.

I would further suggest that a federal tax structure committee should undertake, not only a projection of revenue and capital expenditure trends, but actually set out to construct a five-year budget for all three levels of government. This could be on the basis of bargaining and fiscal planning which we propose for the 11 governments and senior municipalities. In my view, Mr. Speaker, this is the only alternative for the present stalemate. It is the only path to national unity and a viable federalism.

I have already noted, Mr. Speaker, that many of our large urban municipalities have budgets that are greater than those of the smaller provinces. It follows therefore, that if we are going to achieve integrated fiscal and taxation policies for the nation, the role and needs of these so-called "city states" must be more fully taken into account. Otherwise any integrated national policy is going to be ineffective.

We must devise machinery that would bring the large urban municipalities more intimately into the consultative and decision process. More and more the problems we have to deal with in this Legislature find their most traumatic expression in our cities. This is true whether we speak of the housing shortage, or tenants' rights, or transportation, pollution, municipal taxes, industrial development, labour relations, discrimination, poverty, educational opportunities, or student unrest.

We should ask ourselves just how well are we equipped to handle these issues. What kind of genuine working relationship does this Legislature have with our cities? Are we satisfied that the federal government, insofar as its jurisdiction permits, is sharing the burden of these problems with us?

There is a profound confusion in the public mind about the roles that are supposed to be played by the various levels of government in this country. It is a confusion growing, not so much of the ignorance of our constitution, but a sense of frustration that real issues affecting people are just not being faced.

The division of powers by which we still operate was arranged to govern a society that was largely rural. Now that society has changed to the point where it is over 75 per cent urban. People live in cities and the people are growing. The cities are growing and so are their problems. There has evolved, Mr. Speaker, in our cities a structure of governments which operates parallel to the provincial and federal, but rarely is there any meaningful or continuing relationship with them.

What kind of productive contact, for example, has Metropolitan Toronto with this Legislature and the government? No more than the smallest rural village. That, I suggest to you, is an anachronism that we can no longer afford. We, at the provincial level, have failed in this regard. True we have a Department of Municipal Affairs. True, the work of other government departments affects urban life—officials from both levels talk to one another, not always amicably. But surely it is time, in view of the growth of our cities, and the advent of regional government, that we look ahead to see if we can develop a more modern relationship with urban Ontario and ensure that the making of key decisions is done by and at the level of the people most affected.

The federal Liberal government, with its fixation about ensuring the most rigid division of powers, must take some blame for the hesitation to recognize a changing pattern of life in Canada, but there is no excuse for us in the Ontario Legislature to bury our heads in the sand.

Why, for example, must we continue to pretend that there is no need for a separate Ministry of Housing and Urban Affairs? Why do we refuse to establish a committee of this Legislature to deal with housing? We are content to leave housing as an adjunct of The Department of Trade and Development. The Minister in charge is ignorant of the complexities of planning as witness his behaviour over the Waterloo land use study. His credibility as a believable spokesman of government policy is now totally shattered by the recent revelations surrounding the Flemingdon Park extension. To leave the most critical and massive single problem facing this government in his hands is to welcome chaos, and quite frankly we are getting it.

Why, for example, do we continue to refuse the municipalities the authority to institute rent control if, in their view, the local situation warrants it? Why must "Big Daddy" at Queen's Park dictate what every municipality must do in terms of meeting their needs when the government has not acted sufficiently to build adequate housing?

Why, for example, do we insist that pollution must come under The Department of Health? Certainly it is a health hazard, but does that need still to be proven? Surely the prevention of pollution must arise from a co-ordinated government programme relying on techniques and sanctions which The Health Department is powerless to implement.

I could, Mr. Speaker, give many other examples, but I hope I have made my point. Increasingly the procedures and structures of the government in Ontario seem irrelevant to the problems and situations which confront the peoples. There are few municipal governments as fusty and archaic in their approach as this present provincial administration. With their day to day confrontation of real problems which can be passed no further down the line they have no alternative but to be contemporary.

But not so Queen's Park. That is why we have to conceive of a new relationship between our cities and this Legislature. I propose that we start by setting up on a permanent footing, with a permanent staff, an urban council for Ontario. Let us ask the cities to join with both government and Opposition members of this Legislature on a body where the specific pressing problems of the cities can be given the priorities they need, and the needed impact on determining government policies.

I would go further and invite the federal government also to be represented on an urban council for Ontario, for as in housing or pollution or in many other areas, Ottawa has a major role to play as well.

An urban council for Ontario can provide a context in which municipal spokesmen, provincial Legislatures, and representatives of the provincial and federal governments, can focus on the range of problems which have their greatest impact in the cities.

I do not suggest that this council will substitute for any present government body. It would rather fill a vacuum, and operate ancillary to this Legislature. I envisage it would be an ex officio body not elected, but made up of men and women there by virtue of offices held at all three levels of government. An urban council for Ontario can be a new channel of communication and a new forum for dialogue between Queen's Park and our cities.

I hope we will not raise the nineteenth century constitutional roadblocks in its way. I recollect earlier this year that the Provincial Treasurer was less than welcoming when Ottawa proposed becoming more directly involved with urban policies. His response, in effect, was "stay off our property," and incidentally he was rapidly clobbered by the editorial pages of the three Toronto papers.

That kind of attitude will only make our future problems more difficult and it runs counter to public opinion. The average man is not worried about constitutional jurisdictions. His view is, "We are all in it together, let us work it out together."

I suggest we must be prepared to experiment with a new kind of inter-governmental relationship. An urban council for Ontario would be one such innovation, affording the cities and Queen's Park for the first time a chance to talk meaningfully with each other. I commend it to the government and this Legislature for their most serious consideration.

Mr. Speaker, I turn in conclusion to the amendment which is before us, moved by the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nixon).

May I say at the outset that we will support this amendment. We will support it in part because it contains ideas that were exclusively ours until a year or so ago and have now been picked up in that normal pattern.

We have fought with the Liberals supporting the Tories in bucking permissive rent controls for the last two or three years. Now they have come over; now they recognize it is necessary. We also fought for years to get some sort of a prices review board. Last year they climbed on that band wagon. Interestingly enough their enthusiasm is such that it has dropped out of any inclusive condemnation of the government, though certainly the government has not moved about it. So there is a waning of enthusiasm on the part of the Liberals for that issue.

However, as one goes through the amendments—the nine points of this amendment—there is nothing to which anybody who is opposed to this government can really take exception.

That the government shou'd put its house in order—we have listened all this fall to the cry of doom from the Prime Minister and the Provincial Treasurer. The province is facing a financial nightmare. It is rather interesting that the leading spokesmen for the Cabinet after 25 years of Tory rule should be proclaiming to the people of the province that the province has such a dire future ahead of it. However, there it is.

Adequate housing programme—I dealt with this.

The neglect of northern development—this is something that we have been hitting at continuously since the government took something of a shellacking in the last provincial election. The Prime Minister, in pique, cut down the Cabinet representation from the north as a result. We will come back to that again.

Provide educational opportunities and facilities, and failed to develop any effective policies to meet the university unrest. I am rather interested, for example, in the specifics that emerged behind this general statement coming from the member for Scarborough East (Mr. T. Reid) in his proposals for universities.

Two years ago I brought into this House a resolution in which I spelled out guidelines for the restructuring of the universities and I deliberately said, that these were guidelines which we could debate and proclaim, leaving the initiative for action to rest with the universities so that we would not encroach upon their autonomy.

The government not surprisingly said that this in itself was an encroachment on the autonomy of the universities. But the hon. member for Sudbury speaking, so he said, specifically with the approval of the leader of the Opposition, joined with the Tories and voted and argued against the resolution.

Now we have the Liberal Party doing a complete backflip and coming in with what, in effect, is an imposed restructuring on the universities.

Mr. Sopha: Is the hon. member for the Duff-Berdahl report? Does he know that everybody in the university community has rejected it? Is he for it?

Mr. MacDona'd: I am on record. If the hon. member has not read Hansard, I suggest he do so, instead of interrupting.

Mr. Sopha: That is what his resolution was about—he was for the Duff-Berdahl report.

Mr. MacDonald: "Has failed to bring about meaningful reform in our ancient and inefficient system of municipal government"—that is a little weak but one cannot object to it. I would like to have seen something a little stronger in terms of this government's failure to give leadership on regional government.

We are drifting towards regional government—moving only when the pressures build up to the point where they have to do a study—when the Smith committee, the select committee, and many other people have indicated that there has got to be a pattern of regional government provided so that all parts of the province will know exactly where they might fit in and be a guide to them to really come to grips with this problem.

The Prime Minister, on occasion, has said "plan or you will be planned". But on the level of regional government, they will not move with the necessary leadership to give assistance to this kind of planning. Even where you do have people who move with some vigour and imagination to exercise their responsibilities locally, as in the county of Waterloo, then that barnstorming Minister of Trade and Development (Mr. Randall) suddenly announces that there is going to be a new city developed in their midst, a city of 60,000 people, and the locale of the city has nothing to do with the planned development in the area.

I have reason to believe that two or three other Ministers in the Cabinet knew nothing about it at all. Then, when Doctor Fyfe, who is doing the overall study, reopened his hearings to find out how they are going to reshape their plans, and invited the Minister and the Ontario Housing Corporation to come and make representation, the Minister declared the criticism was not valid and the Ontario Housing Corporation would not even come.

This kind of arrogant, bull-in-the-china-shop operation, when a region has moved to do some intelligent planning, is thoroughly disruptive.

Mr. Speaker, this government obviously should be attacked for its deficiencies. However, I just wanted to draw attention to the fact, as I have earlier this afternoon, that the Liberal amendment does not really get at some of the fundamental failures for which this government is guilty. We have heard very little, for example, on the kind of re-structured tax system which would get at a capital gains tax and would get at those fundamentals which that creator of a just society pursues in Ottawa with inequitable social development taxes—so inequitable that even the water boy from Queen's Park has to oppose them.

So, Mr. Speaker, I move—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: There are a number of points, Mr. Speaker, which should be included for consideration of this House if we are going to get at some fundamentals; if we are going to do something more than merely tinker with the status quo, therefore, Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the member for Riverdale, that the amendment be further amended by adding after the words “. . . efficient system of municipal government,” the following words:

10. has failed to alter the existing structure of power and wealth in our society, and to use the full powers and resources of a modern state, to

(a) affirm housing as a basic right, and assist this by channelling corporate surpluses and investment funds into a major, government-directed housing programme;

(b) establish a universal, public car insurance programme at cost, based on compensation without fault;

(c) set out a realistic charter for hundreds of thousands of unorganized workers, including a minimum wage of $2.25 an hour and proper overtime and holiday provisions, and laws which will facilitate organization and collective bargaining;

(d) set up a public development corporation to undertake policies aimed at increasing Canadian ownership of Ontario industry;

(e) solve the financial impasse by radical reform of the tax system, including a tax on capital gains and land speculation.

11. has failed to express adequate condemnation of those federal Liberal fiscal policies which will result in dismembering the Canadian nation.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will resume this debate. His Honour will be here to give Royal Assent to one bill and then we will resume this debate.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 5.45 o'clock, p.m.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Introduction of bills.

TOWN OF PARRY SOUND

Mr. W. E. Johnston (Carleton) in the absence of Mr. A. Johnston (Parry Sound) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act respecting the town of Parry Sound.

ONTARIO CO-OPERATIVE CREDIT SOCIETY

Mr. W. E. Johnston in the absence of Mr. Root (Wellington-Dufferin) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act respecting Ontario Co-operative Credit Society.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

THE ONTARIO HURRICANE RELIEF FUND ACT, 1955

Hon. D. A. Bales (Minister of Labour) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Ontario Hurricane Relief Fund Act, 1955.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Bales: Mr. Speaker, this is an amendment to provide increases in pensions to widows and children who are eligible under The Ontario Hurricane Relief Fund Act. This legislation was passed by the Legislature in 1955 and under its terms money collected by the Ontario Hurricane Relief Fund was transferred to the Ontario Workmen's Compensation Board pension fund to provide assistance to widows and children of those who lost their lives in Hurricane Hazel. It was stipulated that assistance will be paid in accordance with The Workmen's Compensation Act of that time. This policy has been followed over the years. Periodic evaluations of the fund have been carried out. Because some of the widows have remarried, there remains sufficient capital to permit the pensions to be increased to the level now being paid under The Workmen's Compensation Act, 1968. These latter pensions were increased as of last August 1.

The bill now before us, to be known as, An Act to amend The Ontario Hurricane Relief Fund Act, 1955, will permit the eligible widows and children to receive pensions at these increased rates, and it is our intention to make the effective date of this legislation August 1, 1968.

THE MILK ACT, 1965

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Milk Act, 1965.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, this bill does not confer any new powers on the Ontario Milk Marketing Board but simply clarifies the manner in which the marketing board may carry out powers already conferred upon it by the milk commission of Ontario. The bill also validates the orders of the marketing board which have already been filed as regulations in accordance with The Regulations Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

CITY OF LONDON

Mr. N. L. Olde (Middlesex South) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act respecting the city of London.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Ministers for whom I have questions are not in the House. I was wondering if, in this event, you might permit me to put the questions before you, sir, and they might be answered at their earliest convenience?

Mr. Speaker: Until we have the discussion which we had hoped to have today, I think that we should retain the previous practice that questions will not be asked if the Minister is not present, nor answers given if the member is not present, unless the leader of the party is agreed that they should be given. I would ask the indulgence of the hon. members of the Opposition for that. When we redecide the manner of handling questions, then I will be most pleased to carry out the decisions.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of questions. One, held over for a couple of days, is to the Minister of University Affairs.

Is The Department of University Affairs putting pressure on Brock University to change from a seminar-oriented institution, to the old-style lecture classes? If so, why, and if so, is this not a case of unwarranted violation of a legitimate area of university autonomy?

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I have a question, and it appears that I can be afforded the privilege to ask it now. The question, Mr. Speaker, is in three parts.

1. What was the name of the report of the Minister's department which checked the budget, staff and courses at Brock University, and concluded that the university's first- and second-year students' seminars, which have approximately 15 students each, were too rich and unnecessary?

2. Has this report, referred to by the Toronto Daily Star, November 25, 1968, been made available to the public?

3. What were the results of the negotiations between Dr. James A. Gibson, president of Brock University, and the officials of The Department of University Affairs on Monday, November 25, 1968?

Hon. W. G. Davis (Minister of Education and University Affairs): I shall start the answer by dealing basically with the questions from the member for York South. The answer to the first question is "no", which means really there is no need to answer questions two and three.

I would expand on it a little bit by making it very clear that neither the department nor the committee determines or dictates the nature of the teaching that goes on in our universities. Their task is to determine an equitable way for the allocation of resources among all the provincially assisted institutions. Then it is up to that institution, within the limits of the resources made available, to make the decisions as to how it would best offer the programmes. There has been no pressure from The Department of University Affairs on Brock University as to how, per se, it offers its programmes. There is a concern, with respect to all the universities, that they are receiving equitable treatment. Then, the internal decisions must be made by them.

After the formula was announced last year, Mr. Speaker, concern was expressed by several of the emerging universities. I am now replying to the member from York University or Scarborough East or whichever constituency he—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Davis: It was not a formal committee per se; there was no name for it. It was a subcommittee of the committee of university affairs, and I asked this committee to study specifically the problems as they related to Brock, Trent, Lakehead and Laurentian Universities. When the committee started its operation, Laurentian asked to be excluded from the study, so that it then only related to Brock, Trenton and Lakehead. The subcommittee was composed of the following members: Dr. Wright, who is chairman of the committee; Dr. Elizabeth Arthur, professor of history at the Lakehead; Dr. Maurice Lavigne, manager, physical metallurgy department of Falconbridge; and Dr. David Slater, who is the dean of graduate studies at Queen's University. This was the membership of the subcommittee of the committee on university affairs.

The report, Mr. Speaker, has not been made public, but it has been made available to the university presidents, and of course those institutions directly affected. The report contained a number of comments about the current cost of operation at each institution and possible "models of university operation combining high academic quality and financial viability" were also set out. It was noted in the report—and this is something we have debated in this Legislature, Mr. Speaker, on several occasions—that the problem of financing emergent universities relates to the need to respond to the extraordinary costs associated with starting a new and smaller institution. I think it is fair to state that the committee, in its deliberations, has taken this into account in the grants that have been awarded to these institutions as emergent universities in this province.

As I say, the report was widely circulated through the committee of presidents, and I have received within the last day or so their response to this report. I must be very frank, Mr. Speaker, I have not had an opportunity to assess their response to it yet at this moment.

With respect to Brock University itself, it met with the committee—this is the third part of the question, I guess—in its usual presentation with respect to the coming year's operations. Of course, there have been no decisions made by the committee on university affairs vis-à-vis Brock, or any other provincially assisted institution at this particular time. So there is nothing to relate to the hon. member with respect to those specific discussions. Mr. Speaker, I shall endeavour—let me put it that way—to obtain a copy of this special subcommittee report for the hon. member.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, could I ask the Minister if he will also make that report available to the other Opposition party?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Yes, delighted.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Minister would entertain a number of brief supplementary questions?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I shall certainly entertain them; I cannot guarantee I will answer them, but I will entertain them, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MacDonald: The first one is: Would the Minister not agree that while there is formally no intervention on the decision with regard to courses and so on, there is a back-door intervention through your grant structure?

Hon. Mr. Davis: No, Mr. Speaker, I say without fear of contradiction there is not, nor does there need to be, nor is there intended to be, any back-door intervention into the way the universities handle their academic programme by the grant structure or any other policy administered by The Department of University Affairs. We have always made this abundantly clear. There is no question that the economic resource available to the total university community determines to a degree, shall we say, the extent of the offerings in some course areas. You could relate this to the field of medicine, dentistry, and what have you, but there is no attempt, in a back-door fashion or in a front-door fashion, to determine just how these programmes are to be offered within the individual institutions. I want to make this abundantly clear. We try to make the same number of dollars available as equitably as the formula allows and the wisdom of the people dealing with it, for each institution. There is just no intent to do so.

Mr. T. Reid: I wonder if I could ask a supplementary question?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I wonder if I could take those, Mr. Speaker, from the member for York South so that I may keep them in order in my own mind?

Mr. T. Reid: That would be very difficult, sir.

Hon. Mr. Davis: It is quite difficult, but I try.

Mr. MacDonald: My second supplementary question to the Minister is: How long are these special grants to the emergent universities going to continue?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, the period of emergence is very difficult to determine, but I recall that the report—and I cannot put my finger on it immediately—had some reference to this. There is a suggested length of time. I think York is in its eighth or ninth year of what has been called emergent status, and I believe it is coming very close to the end of that situation. Brock and Trent, of course, have several more years to go and I think the report will give some indication, but at the same time you cannot draw a hard and fast rule on these situations. That is something the committee, I think, determines each year. There is no question that for Brock and Trent and the Lakehead it will go on yet for a period of years.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough East.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, will the Minister accept a supplementary question? Would not the Minister's remarks about the degree, if any, of government interference in the academic curriculum of the university be more believable if he accepted the Act I introduced in this House yesterday, establishing an independent university commission?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, we, I hope, will have an opportunity to discuss this, not necessarily in the discussion of the hon. member's bill, but perhaps during the debate on The Department of University Affairs, because with great respect, Mr. Speaker, in the bill introduced by the hon. member there is some parallel that can be drawn with the U.K. grants commission and practices and procedures elsewhere. And I say, with the greatest of respect, it builds in a rigidity which I believe the universities do not want, and it is not in any way a solution—

Mr. T. Reid: Is the hon. Minister debating or is he answering a question?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister is answering the member's question.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to say that concept is "old hat" because that would not be quite accurate. But it has been debated here and I think we can have a very useful dialogue about this at the appropriate time. I do not regard it as being a solution. It gets right down to the availability of funds on as equitable a basis as one can determine and the fact that the hon. member, through legislation, thinks he can isolate this from some mythical control by the department or the Minister, Mr. Speaker. I say, with respect, this is a fiction.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York South.

Mr. MacDonald: I had three questions for today, one to the Minister of Trade and Development (Mr. Randall), who is not here, which I shall hold, I presume, until next Monday; another was to the Prime Minister.

Will the Prime Minister intervene with the federal Indian affairs branch to help resolve the impasse arising from the order for holding new band council elections in the Garden City reserve outside Sault Ste. Marie?

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would have to say that we have no intention of interfering in this matter. I have gone into it reasonably thoroughly, and it is a procedural matter. Perhaps I could give you the details of it, but in any event band council elections on Indian reservations are purely under the jurisdiction of the federal government. We have nothing to do with them whatsoever. The federal Act provides for the holding of the elections and provides the methods by which they are to take place. And I am told that in this particular Indian reserve—the Garden City Indian reserve, the Indian superintendent for the Sault Ste. Marie area is the acting electoral officer for band elections, because the band itself did not appoint an electoral officer. You see, such is not within the control of our electoral officer here at all. The superintendent compiled a list of band members prior to the election; and he counted slightly over 600 on the list. The Indian Act allows for one councillor per hundred band members, thus there was provision for six councillors to be elected.

I am further informed that when the official returns were sent to Ottawa it was found there were fewer than 600 on the lists, so that they were entitled only to five councillors. Therefore the election was declared illegal and a new election was ordered by the Indian affairs staff of the federal government. A nomination meeting was held but there were no names put in nomination at that meeting and this is where I would imagine the impasse arose, but we have no jurisdiction and I rather think any interference by us would (a) be ineffectual, and (b) probably not be welcome.

Mr. MacDonald: I would just like to add very briefly, Mr. Speaker, that there are loopholes—

Mr. Speaker: Order, order, the member may ask a supplementary question but he may not add remarks to what has been said.

Mr. MacDonald: Since the Prime Minister has reviewed so extensively the circumstances, may I ask whether he has also reviewed the fact that the federal Act has a clause in it which states,

However, an exception may be made and the number of councillors may be increased or decreased with the consent of the Minister if, for some good reason, the number of councillors based on population is not satisfactory.

In other words, if the superintendent "goofed", why does the Minister not accept responsibility for it and get them out of the impasse?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I can only say that this is a question for the federal government. If somebody from the federal government started to interfere with our electoral procedures in this province because they did not like what our electoral officer had done, or because somebody had booted, I think every man in this House would be up in arms in very short order and say to the federal government, "You exercise your own jurisdiction". To settle the matter, perhaps, the hon. Attorney General who comes from Sault Ste. Marie informs me the band was on its way to Ottawa yesterday, so I assume they will sit down with the officials who have jurisdiction and will straighten this matter out.

Mr. MacDonald: I would like to inform the Prime Minister—

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): I understand the Indians do not want the interference of this government; they do not want it.

Mr. MacDonald: I would say to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker, that he is very right. This is a federal matter, but the Indians are so disturbed that they visited us and they are now going to Ottawa.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is asking a question.

Mr. Sopha: They always dealt with Ottawa on these matters.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. MacDonald: In the fullness of time, we will have an opportunity to explore it more fully, Mr. Speaker.

I have a question for the Minister of Labour. Does the Minister consider that the Thomson management of the Peterborough Examiner has been bargaining in good faith? If not, what does the Minister propose to do about it?

Hon. Mr. Bales: Mr. Speaker, the responsibility for such a decision rests with the Ontario Labour Relations Board and it has not been asked, by either of the parties, to make a ruling in this situation. I am particularly interested in assisting the parties in finding a mutually acceptable solution and to this end, the conciliation branch of my department has been in touch with both sides several times this week and will continue its efforts to help them.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Ottawa Centre has a question of the Minister of Education.

Mr. H. MacKenzie (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, a question for the Minister of Education—three questions.

1. Could the Minister of Education indicate whether or not every effort is being made to ensure that only materials of Canadian manufacturers are being used in the construction of all educational facilities in which grants in any form are made?

2. Would the Minister outline in limited detail the directives issued with regard to using materials of Canadian manufacturers in the construction of educational facilities on which grants in any form are made?

3. Would the Minister give us a listing of major materials used in the construction of educational facilities on which grants in any form are made—which are not of Canadian manufacturers?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, to answer the first part of the question. The department does, and I do, make an effort to encourage the boards to buy Canadian where they can. The decision, of course, rests with the local board but I would read to the House a directive that was sent out by myself on May 31, 1968.

The support of the Canadian economy is a responsibility that each of us must share and I regard it as particularly important that the authorities and officials of the educational institutions of the province keep this constantly in mind.

It is suggested that boards, officials and administrators of our many educational institutions should encourage the policy of "Buy Canadian" by advising architects and consultants to specify Canadian goods and manufactured products whenever possible and by instructing purchasing departments to adhere to the practice of buying Canadian-made goods where price and quality are comparable.

In 1965, a similar statement was made in support of the "Buy Canadian" policy, and at this time, I am urging all boards and persons connected with education to maintain this policy. I am certain that a significant stimulation of our Canadian economy can result in the combined effort of the many educational authorities in this province.

Now, with respect to the third part of the question, Mr. Speaker, I really cannot get such lists for the hon. member. This would mean getting down into the breakdown of almost every school that is built—and there are many hundreds of them—and getting a detailed list of all the specifications, what materials are manufactured in Canada, and so on. And I think, Mr. Speaker, when the hon. member looks at it, he will realize just how difficult a compilation of this kind would be.

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. Minister allow a supplementary question?

Mr. MacKenzie: Mr. Speaker, would the Minister consider gathering such lists of materials if I were to put such a question on the order paper?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I would be prepared to do this for the hon. member. I will see just how much we might get for him. To put it on the order paper really would not solve the problem, perhaps because the bulk of the information would have to come from the individual school boards, and at this present moment we are still talking of many hundreds. This is further complicated by the fact that within a few weeks, while the records will still be available, the administrators and so on will not be performing the same function. But certainly, I shall try and get maybe some general statistics that will be helpful for the hon. member. I am not sure that I can undertake to get it from each individual school board in the province.

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member for York South care to place his question with the Minister of Trade and Development?

Mr. MacDonald: Do builders have authority to use the HOME label on advertisements, such as the one in the Toronto Daily Star, November 27, 1968, for Bramalea homes available with carrying charges of $167 per month requiring an income of $7,422, plus a down payment of $1,995?

Are there any homes available in the Metro Toronto area under the HOME programme for persons with incomes below $7,422?

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Trade and Development): Mr. Speaker, I was out of my office. I just saw the question when I got here. I am having it checked and will give the hon. member the answer, perhaps first thing Monday.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Peterborough.

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to address a question to the Minister of Education. Has the Minister made any progress in the introduction of transfer review boards or with legislation introducing teacher transfer review boards as a result of his meeting last week with the Ontario Teachers' Federation?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I guess one should really get down to asking the hon. member to define what he might mean by the word "progress". I would say at this stage I must answer the question by saying the problem is still under active consideration.

Mr. Pitman: Perhaps I might be more specific in a supplementary question, if allowed, Mr. Speaker.

Does the Minister intend to introduce a Schools Administration Act into this Legislature allowing at least some debate on the question within the next few weeks?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I recall the discussions in the last sessions which, on some occasions, appears to me really just to have finished a few days ago, I undertook either to have an amendment to The Schools Administration Act introduced here or to find some other way whereby this question can be debated; either here or before the education committee. I shall endeavour to live up to the undertaking that I gave to the hon. member.

Mr. Pitman: Thank you. Another question, Mr. Speaker: Is an investigation being carried on at present, of teacher-pupil ratio and teaching load in Ontario's schools? If so, what is the purpose of the investigation?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, there is no formal investigation per se on a province-wide basis with respect to teacher-pupil ratio but I think, Mr. Speaker, that if there were one and the hon. member really were seeking out the purpose; one would relate such a study, of course, to the economic investment that we are making in education. Of course, one area of greatest investment relates to the numbers of teachers involved. Of course, if one is looking for economies, the question of student-teacher ratio, I think, becomes relevant. But there is no province-wide study as such at the present moment. But this matter is always under study in some manner or other within the department internally.

Mr. Pitman: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might ask a supplementary.

Would the Minister assure the House that there is no specific and special purpose involved in trying to raise the teacher-pupil ratio or increase the teaching load as a specific means of solving the economic problems of the province of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I think that when one is looking at the whole question then perhaps we could debate this during the Throne debate. I perhaps shall participate in this area myself. One must look at all facets of what is happening in the educational field to determine where economies can be effected and to isolate one. I could say to the hon. member, "No, you cannot isolate a single area and expect to find a solution here. But at the same time you cannot overlook any area where the cost factor is really fairly significant."

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Kent placed a question with the Premier which has been re-directed to the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. Spence: Mr. Speaker, a question to the Minister of Public Works: How much money has been spent to date on the Centennial project for Ontario? When will this Centennial project be completed?

Hon. T. R. Connell (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first question is that The Department of Public Works has made payments totalling $19,765,585.54 to date.

As far as the completion is concerned; buildings "A" and "C" were completed and handed over to the Centennial staff in early October 1968. The contractor is endeavouring to complete the external work on building "B" by January or February 1969, and the external work such as sodding and grading will be completed in the summer of 1969.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, my understanding was that the Ministers were in a certain order. I have three questions of the Minister of Education.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member, if he had been observing this afternoon, would have realized that we have gone back today to the former system. Perhaps on Monday, until it has been decided, we will go back again to the procedure of referring them to Ministers in turn.

However, the hon. Minister for Scarborough East had my eye and he now may place the questions which he had.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I hope you do not change Hansard, to read "member". I would be delighted to be a Minister in a Liberal administration in 1971.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of University Affairs. It is in three parts:

(a) Why did York University have to turn down 700 academically qualified students last fall, as reported by York University president Dr. Murray Ross in his annual report released on Tuesday, November 26?

(b) Does the Minister agree with Dr. Ross that continued lack of government financial support may damage York's system of college clusters on its Keele Street campus, and does the Minister agree with Dr. Ross that the college systems at the Keele Street campus "are not simply frills to be dispensed with in times of financial stringency" because the college systems make it possible to maintain personal contact with each individual student, thereby making the likelihood of destructive student rebellion a great deal less?

(c) What financial steps is the Minister taking to ensure that 700 academically qualified students will not have to be turned down again by York University in 1969-70, as reported in—

Mr. Speaker: Order. That is the end of the question and the hon. member has not been reading the questions as submitted. He has been substituting other words. However, the variations—

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): It was close.

Mr. Speaker: Yes, it was pretty close, as the hon. member says. The hon. Minister has the floor.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: That is good enough—

Mr. Sargent: We will get the Prime Minister later.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: That is 100 per cent.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, one might express the thought that they were as accurate as the wishful thinking expressed by the hon. member as to his own political future in 1971.

However, dealing with the question, Mr. Speaker, I have not had an opportunity to read all Dr. Ross's report, so I cannot comment in detail on all aspects of the question. But I think two or three points must be made: (a) I am sure that York University was not the only university not to admit all applicants—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Davis: If the hon. member will wait until I am finished, he may have to retract what he has said. Just be patient. You wait, and you will have the opportunity, and if you are big enough, you will.

Before we were somewhat interrupted, Mr. Speaker, I was trying to get around to this question of the 700 students at York University. What happens is, Mr. Speaker, that the students of this province make multiple applications—they apply at more than a single institution. As a result of this, a lot of universities receive applications from students—

Mr. Sargent: That is always the answer.

Hon. Mr. Davis: If the hon. member will just be patient, I have an answer for him.

If one takes this into account, I think it is quite reasonable to anticipate there will be some universities which will receive a number of applications from students who are selecting that institution as their first, or perhaps second, third or even fourth choice. I do not intend to make a lengthy government statement on this, but I think even the hon. member can share some pride in this fact that I am going to relate next. The fact is that first year enrolment in Ontario this year increased to 26,664 students from 22,000 just one academic year ago. This is an increase of approximately 21.2 per cent. And despite this very significant increase, Mr. Speaker, the universities of this province in total were enabled, through policies of their own and of the government, to accommodate all students who met the admission requirements in some university in the province of Ontario, and I say with respect, Mr. Speaker, this does not apply to very many jurisdictions.

When the member for Grey-Bruce suggests that we should be ashamed of the fact that certain students could not get into York, I think we can be very proud of the fact that a student who received proper marks in grade 13 was able to find a niche in some university in the province of Ontario. I have stated in this Legislature before and I state it again, no matter what plans we develop there is no question that some students will not always be able to get into the university of their first choice. I think the most important aspect, Mr. Speaker, is that the students found some place in a university—and they are all good universities—in this province. I know now that the member for Grey-Bruce will be delighted to get up on some future occasion and compliment the government and the universities for this very admirable accomplishment.

Mr. Speaker, I think it would be presumptuous of me as a layman to pass an opinion with respect to the second part of the question. I do not propose in this Legislature to get into a lengthy debate as to how academic programmes are best developed or administered within individual institutions. Surely this is a matter that must be determined by that institution. Dr. Ross has some very strong points of view and I would be the last one to take issue or dispute them, because I do not pretend to be as knowledgeable as the president of York as to how the programme should be administered within that particular institution.

I would say with respect to the last part of the question, we are taking steps, as we have in the past two or three years, to see that all the universities in the province of Ontario, once again in an equitable way, receive the amount of financial support that will enable them, in total, to accommodate the number of students who will be graduating from grade 13 this year and will be seeking admission into some university in the fall of 1969. I think, Mr. Speaker, this is as helpful as I can be on those three questions.

Mr. T. Reid: By way of a supplementary question, if I may, with all due respect to the hon. Minister's ability to think logically, I suggest that the arguments he put forward—

Mr. Speaker: Order! Is the hon. member asking a supplementary question? At the moment he is making a suggestion. Will he please frame a question?

Mr. T. Reid: My question, Mr. Speaker, is this:

Would it be proper to deduce from the Minister's remarks that York University is quite entitled to reduce its growth rate, in order to maintain its individuality in terms of staff-student relationships?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, as I understand the situation in York—and the hon. member can correct me because I understand he is still very closely associated with that great university—the question of the college concept does not necessarily relate to the student-professor ratio; it relates to the number of students within, shall we say, a physical or environmental structure whereby the relationship may or may not be close, I would not know. But it does not necessarily relate to the total number of professors available for the total number of students. This is not necessarily a part of the college structure per se as I understand it. So I do not think the hon. member can interpret what I have said one way or the other in that regard.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, a question for the Minister of Education this time:

How many Indian schools in Ontario are inspected by supervisors of the programmes branch of The Department of Education? How many pupils are enrolled in these schools? How many of these schools have television sets in them? How many of these schools have more than one television set in them?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, the federal department of Indian affairs provides, equips, and actually operates the Indian schools in the province. At the request of the federal department we do arrange for—"inspection" is not the right word any more—we do arrange for visits by departmental staff. The main purpose behind these visits is to ascertain that these schools are following the Ontario courses of study, so that the child, who may leave that particular school at any stage of his schooling, may readily move into the total Ontario school system.

Mr. Nixon: Why can the Minister not call it inspection?

Hon. Mr. Davis: We are getting away from that. I thought the hon. leader of the Opposition agreed with—

Mr. Nixon: I thought he was a visiting resource.

Hon. Mr. Davis: That is what I am saying, we make visitations, but we are not having formal inspections per se any more. We use the term "visit".

Mr. Nixon: They have no resources either.

Hon. Mr. Davis: There are 56 Indian schools that are currently being visited by members of the Ontario department. With respect to the question of equipment or enrolment, I shall endeavour to find this out for the hon. member, but I think he could perhaps more rapidly ascertain it from the federal department, because this is where we are presently going to get the information for him. I am informed, though, through that agency, that every Indian school within range of a television transmission tower is equipped with one or more TV sets. With respect to numbers and equipment, I shall endeavour to obtain this for him from the federal authorities.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, by way of a supplementary question, with all due respect to the Minister's memory, will the Minister in his next September report use the word "visit" instead of "inspect", which is the word he used in his September, 1968, report?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Yes, Mr. Speaker, it takes a while to bring about these philosophical changes. We are very hopeful that the term "inspection" per se will fade from the vocabulary of the—

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Why does the Minister not strike it out of the dictionary?

Mr. T. Reid: I would suggest, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member has a right to ask a supplementary question, not to make suggestions.

Mr. T. Reid: If the Minister would allow, Mr. Speaker. Is the Minister of Education not responsible for educational television in this province? If so, surely he should know whether the Indian schools have television sets.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to get involved, because this really provokes a rather lengthy answer as to the question of responsibility and the view of the member for Scarborough East on ETV and how it should be administered. I really am delighted to have the question but I am not really prepared to answer it. I will get the actual number of TV receivers for him, but the first part of his question, I think, would provoke a very lengthy discussion on this occasion.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, my final question for the Minister today, is:

Regarding assistant superintendent Walter Currie of the supervision section—and it is still called the supervision section, Mr. Speaker—of The Department of Education, who has been charged by the Minister to undertake a study of the educational needs of Indian children in isolated parts of the province, what meetings has he had with: (a) the Minister of Indian Affairs of the federal government, (b) the hon. Robert Andras of the federal government, (c) the Indian-Eskimo Association? And finally, Mr. Speaker, how many miles has Mr. Currie travelled in Ontario since his appointment?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, not wishing once again to become controversial, I would say to the hon. member that I detect some slight difference between "inspection" and "supervision", but perhaps he does not.

To answer part (c) of the question first, I guess, Mr. Currie is himself a member of the executive of the Indian-Eskimo Association. He is a former vice-president and is presently chairman of the educational committee, so there is a fairly close liaison between Mr. Currie and the department and the same Mr. Currie is the chairman of the educational committee of the Indian-Eskimo Association.

He has met with Mr. Chretien and Mr. Andras informally on several occasions in the course of his activities relating to Indian education, but the majority of his contacts have been with the federal government or with the senior officials of that government, and these have been rather frequent and quite productive. For example, at present a joint programme is being developed with the federal government for a special course for teachers of Indians. This is something new that is being discussed. The assistant superintendent, Mr. Currie, does not meet formally—or has not since his appointment—with the federal Minister, and I think in fairness one would anticipate that if there were to be such a formal meeting it really should be on a ministerial level.

With respect to the number of miles Mr. Currie has travelled, I understand he has travelled across the province several times since joining the department in August. This is only an approximation—I cannot be too specific—but the approximate number of miles travelled by air and by road would be, we think, somewhere around 8,000.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, in the way of a supplementary, if the Minister would permit, would the Minister suggest that Mr. Currie ask the federal people how many pupils are enrolled in the Indian schools so the Minister could answer my first question?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, Mr. Currie or somebody shall certainly find out. As I say, the hon. member probably has as speedy access to the federal authorities as we do, but certainly we shall get this for him.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for High Park has the floor.

Mr. Shulman: A question of the Attorney General, Mr. Speaker.

When will The Attorney General's Department complete the study of the different problems in connection with the CNE auto racetrack forwarded to us by The Departments of Municipal Affairs, Transport and Highways, and will the findings of The Attorney General's Department be made public?

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, the department is not making a study of the nature suggested by the hon. member for High Park. The opinion of the law officers has been sought by certain persons as to the legal aspect of the matter, and our opinion will be given to those people who have sought it. The opinion of the department is as a rule not made public and we will not be making it public in this case.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Public Works.

Has Mr. Robert Clark, executive-director of supply been given a staff? When was Mr. Clark appointed? Have any economies resulted from Mr. Clark's appointment, as originally forecast? Are departmental buyers still shopping for the province on a decentralized basis as reported in the Financial Post of October 5, 1968?

Hon. Mr. Connell: Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first question is "yes". The answer to the second question is February, 1968. He commenced duties on March 11, 1968. On question 3, the economies of central purchasing originally forecast and announced are anticipated but were not confined to any period of time following Mr. Clark's appointment. On question 4, yes.

Mr. Shulman: Will the Minister accept a supplementary question?

Hon. Mr. Connell: Yes.

Mr. Shulman: Inasmuch as Mr. Clark's appointment was forecast to lead to centralized buying, when will Mr. Clark begin centralizing buying as was the intention of the government?

Hon. Mr. Connell: That has already started.

Mr. Shulman: It has started?

Hon. Mr. Connell: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sandwich-Riverside.

Mr. F. A. Burr (Sandwich-Riverside): Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Education. What was the cost of printing the report on the Ontario College of Art, September, 1968?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, the cost of printing the report was $5,998.65.

Mr. Burr: A supplementary question? Could the Minister inform the House why 11 of the 28 pages in this report are blank, two others are virtually blank, and four are at least half blank?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, in that I did not design it, I could not comment on that. I would only say that while there may be some blank pages, that does not detract, I think, from the quality of a very excellent report.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Kent has a question of the hon. Minister of Agriculture and Food. I missed him before.

Mr. Spence: Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister of Agriculture and Food:

Is the Minister aware that in southwestern Ontario the farmers produced approximately 68 million bushels of corn in 1967, a large portion of which was shipped to Montreal and Port Colborne—where there is no corn produced—at 21 cents a bushel, and that the American corn was shipped to both markets at eight cents per bushel? Will the Minister make a feasibility study of the possibility of locating a corn processing plant in southwestern Ontario where the corn is produced, in order to improve the income of the corn producers in southwestern Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to reply to this question because I am sure the hon. member is aware of the corn industry study that was announced some weeks ago by me, and which will be carried out by the present farm income committee when they have completed their assignments as far as their income report is concerned. That report will be submitted early in January. The committee will be carrying out in more detail a study of the corn industry, right from the research that goes into the production of the seed, to maturity dates and what have you, and quality of production that would flow from such research. It follows right through all of the stages of the cost of the seed, the cost of the fertilizers involved in the planting, the pesticides, the herbicides, and the cost of growing an acre of corn in the various areas of Ontario. Their terms of reference also cover transportation costs, storage facilities, and, as is indicated in your question, the possibility of establishment of corn processing industries in the corn-growing areas of southwestern Ontario. By the same token, Mr. Speaker, I would not want to be left unsaid that corn is now being grown in many areas of Ontario, particularly eastern Ontario. I would not want to—

Mr. Sargent: A lot in this House, too.

An hon. member: You should know.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: From what comes from over there, I would say that if it could be spread on the corn fields of Ontario we would get better crops of corn.

Let me say this, Mr. Speaker, that we would not want to leave unstudied the wonderful area of eastern Ontario from which you come, sir, because we know there are corn industries in that area that are using corn that is now grown in eastern Ontario. Corn from western Ontario is now moving to the industries of eastern Ontario.

The freight rates that you mention here are, I gather from what you say, the rates that pertain at 20 cents a bushel by rail compared with eight cents by water. This is a significant difference. But I hope that the committee will be able, in its investigations, to determine how this might be equalized to some degree. We will look forward to that report.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Cochrane South.

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): I have a question, Mr. Speaker, for the Minister of Mines.

Can the Minister inform the House of the present state of affairs concerning the location of the zinc and copper smelters to be built by Texas-Gulf Sulphur to process their ores from their Ecstall mining operations?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence (Minister of Mines): Mr. Speaker, you will remember at the time of the estimates of the department last year I indicated that we had been in very close contact with Texas-Gulf in relation to this very important matter. We had been informed that feasibility studies had been undertaken by that company and the feasibility studies, we were informed by the company, were going to be ready by January 1, 1969. We have continued this close contact with the company and just within the last week we have been informed by the company that they, in turn, have been informed by their consultants that these feasibility studies will not now be ready for at least a few months after the date that they had originally given to us. So the only progress report I can give the House at the moment is, that I hope that before this session is prorogued next spring, we may have something a little bit more specific in relation to the location and the feasibility of building these smelters in Ontario.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Yorkview.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the hon. Minister of Transport.

In view of the Globe and Mail story from Detroit this morning that the Ford Motor Company is recalling 81,200 cars because of faulty brakes, can the Minister assure the House that Canadian models with this problem are being recalled immediately so that the defect may be rectified?

Hon. I. Haskett (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, yes. The manufacturer informed us, in the usual way, of this recall programme now under way and affecting some 5,731 cars in Canada. These vehicles will be examined for a possible defect in that the brake hose may have been installed with a torsional twist causing it to take on a buckle which in the case of the front wheel would bear against the brake drum at three-quarter right or left lock.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, before I ask my question here, I would like to rise on a point of privilege as a taxpayer about this pile of conglomerate rubbish here. I would like to know where we are going to stop subjecting the taxpayers of this province to pay for this kind of nonsense.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member would proceed with his questions which he has placed with the Speaker's office.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out that the "conglomerate rubbish" as referred to by this—

Mr. Sargent: Of which the Prime Minister is a great part.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: His leader simply asked that all this be made available in all deliberations in his remarks in this House, so they had better get together—

Mr. Sargent: Do not tell me—

Mr. Speaker: Order, order! The leader of the Opposition has the floor.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, on the point that has been raised and replied to by the Premier: He should surely recall that the deliberations, that these pamphlets report, are now a full year old. I brought to his attention yesterday, in my remarks, not that we get the reports from that committee but that it advise a standing committee of the Legislature rather than a committee of the Cabinet.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I just cannot accept the fact that the hon. leader of the Opposition would agree that this is a conglomerate—

Mr. Singer: He did not say that.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Or whatever the term the hon. member used. I might say that if you bother to read it, it is as topical today as it was when it was delivered.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order! The hon. member will proceed with his—order, order! The hon. member will now proceed with his questions.

I would also point out to the hon. member that when Mr. Speaker takes the floor the member will return to his seat until he is given the floor again.

The hon. member now has the floor.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, a question to the Attorney General: Has the Attorney General read the transcript of the Elwin A. Rogers case?

1. Will the Attorney General advise why Mr. Rogers has never been granted the privilege of any citizen, the right to enquiry into his case?

2. Does the Attorney General agree that because of a traffic offence a person can be locked up and subjected to inhuman treatment by police and authorities and have no recourse for months of imprisonment?

3. Will the Attorney General agree to reopen this case and to focus public attention on such a machine that can perpetrate this to a law-abiding citizen?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, the hon. members will perhaps recall that Mr. Rogers is the gentleman who entered on the floor of the House in 1966, in order to address the Legislature.

Mr. Sargent: He is still trying to get justice.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: He has visited my department on many occasions. He has been interviewed by at least four of the lawyers on my staff, including the Assistant Deputy Minister. His various allegations have been reviewed in similar detail by other departments including The Department of Health and The Department of Labour. The files respecting this and other complaints of Mr. Rogers go back to 1964.

In reply to the specific case raised by the hon. member for Grey-Bruce, Mr. Speaker, I would point out that when this gentleman was stopped for speeding on the Don Valley Parkway in 1964, his conduct was such that the court referred him to the Ontario Hospital for observation.

Mr. Sargent: It does not say that here.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I am saying it to the hon. member now.

He was then committed to the hospital for a period of five months, under The Mental Hospitals Act for the purpose of treatment. Since that time he has visited us on various dates with various problems. We have, to the best of our ability, attempted to answer his questions. Unfortunately, we have not always been able to satisfy him. We have, however, investigated his complaints most thoroughly and cannot find justification for his allegations.

We do not propose to institute any further investigations.

Hon. Mr. Randall: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I speak for this gentleman? He is in my riding. The kindest thing I can say is that the gentleman is emotionally upset and the—

Mr. Sargent: What do—

Mr. Speaker: Order, order, order.

Hon. Mr. Randall: The kindest thing—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not think that this is the proper place for the Minister to enter this particular area. The hon. member will proceed with his questions.

The hon. member has a question of the Minister of Transport.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, a question to the Minister of Transport. Is the Minister aware that the hidden windshield wipers on the 1969 automobiles have been indicted as a serious safety hazard and will act as a horizontal guillotine for passengers involved in head-on collisions?

What steps is the Minister taking in this regard?

Hon. Mr. Haskett: Mr. Speaker, the question comes in two parts.

My answers are: to the first part, "no", and to the second part, "at the moment, none".

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sudbury East.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): Mr. Speaker, a question of the Attorney General. Will an inquest be held into the death of Mr. James O'Brien, as requested by Mr. Paul Falkowski of the United Steelworkers of America? If not, why not?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I would like to say I personally wrote to Mr. Falkowski on November 26. I advised him that Doctor Cotnam, our supervising coroner, would review the matter to determine whether or not an inquest should be held.

I can advise the hon. member that the review by the chief coroner is not yet complete. When it is, he will make a decision as to whether or not an inquest will be held.

Mr. Martel: Another question of the Attorney General, Mr. Speaker. Will the Minister accept the request of the safety committee of the United Steelworkers of America that jurors in an inquest be given the opportunity to visit the site of an accident to familiarize them with the conditions giving cause to the accident, and thus enabling jurors to arrive at a more informed verdict and recommendations?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, we do take jurors to the scene of an accident or a death that they are investigating, in every case where we think it will assist the investigation. We advise that this be done but the decision is one that is made by the coroner who is carrying on the inquest.

Our attitude is that the jurors should see the scene of the fatality where it will assist the inquest proceedings.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. In view of the fact that many of the jurors involved in mining accidents have never seen a mine, and because of the difficulty in ensuring that all jurors do in fact, who have not seen a mine, get to visit it, it almost becomes a compulsion for this to happen so that they can—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Will the hon. member place his supplementary question?

Mr. Martel: Will the Minister instruct the coroners that those members of a jury who have never seen a mine, see the site of the accident so they can have a fair chance of good recommendations?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I think, having been a Crown attorney and having assisted at inquests on quite a number of occasions, the important thing is that the persons who are to give the evidence to the jury, which is presided over by the coroner—those persons who are usually summoned by the Crown attorney after consultation with the coroner—are the persons who should be fully aware of all the circumstances and that there be sufficient evidence in the way of description, sketch, and all the other evidence that is available; that those are the persons who should acquaint the jury with the facts of the matter. I do not think it is necessary in every case, for all the jurors to be taken to the scene of the fatality.

Mr. Martel: It might help.

Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Education. Will the Minister arrange for a vote of the students at Chelmsford Valley district composite school to determine whether the school should be turned into a French environmental school?

If yes, will the vote be taken before the end of this year so that the $1.5 million approved for new construction can be utilized in time to provide adequate facilities by the beginning of the next school year?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I really do not think there is any legislative way whereby I could arrange for a vote. And obviously, even if there were one, there is no legal authority in the present board to institute French-language instruction until after January 1, 1969. I would suggest that really the decision would have to be that of the new divisional board which assumes its obligations within a few weeks. Perhaps the best way to approach it, from the students' point of view, would be to have some of the students or students' council make some representation to the new divisional board after it assumes its obligations on January 1, 1969.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question then, if I might. Is the Minister aware that there is apparently going to be a serious problem of housing the number of students involved come next September, and that any delay in this could necessitate a staggered system at night?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I understand that there is some urgency with respect to the planning of the addition at that particular school. I do not see how this really relates to the question of it being a school where French is the language of instruction. I do not think the two are related.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, if I might ask the Minister: If it is turned into an all-French school where will the English students go? The boards in the surrounding area are quite concerned whether there will be an influx in their area.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, surely this is one of the obligations, one of the reasons why next Monday—and I hope everybody votes before they come back here to the Legislature Monday—this is one reason the new board is being elected, just to help resolve these problems.

It would really, I think, be presumptuous of me to dictate to the board that is in the process of being elected, just how they should come to grips with the situation. Surely, this is part of their responsibility. I cannot, at this stage, give the hon. member answers to these individual situations at all.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Downsview, finally. He has been very patient. I commend him for his patience.

An hon. member: He has got great patience.

Mr. Singer: As ever.

Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Attorney General. In view of the reply made by the Minister of Highways—the text says “yesterday” but it was a few days ago now—to a question to the effect that wherever warranted construction speed zones are removed on the highways during the evenings and weekends, has the Attorney General instructed police not to lay speeding charges in certain 45 mile per hour zones on the Queen Elizabeth Way?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, Mr. Speaker, I have not so instructed the police and I would presume that the police would not be issuing summonses where there are no breach of the traffic signs as posted. If there are no signs in the construction zone then the ordinary traffic speeds apply to that road.

The police do not go laying summonses and they do not need instructions to refrain from issuing them, if there are no signs to the contrary.

Mr. Singer: By way of a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker: In view of the fact that certain information has come to our attention in any event, the police have been laying charges after the construction hours are over, would the Attorney General look into it and ascertain what the situation is and take whatever action is necessary?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to, but I do not quite understand. Police have been laying charges and issuing summonses, I take it.

Mr. Singer: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: For speeding after construction ceases—is this a case where there are no signs?

Mr. Singer: Yes, the signs go up in the daytime, while construction is going on, and come down at night, but the police are still—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, if they come down at night I would—

Mr. Singer: They do not come down—I am sorry, they do not come down. But the charges are laid.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I will check it out but I would like to get the facts the hon. member has. I will check it.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of Correctional Services.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): Mr. Speaker, mine is in answer to a question which I took as notice from the hon. member for Essex-Kent (Mr. Ruston). He is out of his seat for the moment, perhaps the Attorney General might proceed with his—

Mr. Nixon: We would like to have the answer.

Mr. Speaker: Then perhaps the Minister would give the answer.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Essex-Kent on November 26, asked me a question in three parts, the first part of which reads, "Is it the policy of the department to provide compensation for property damage caused by individuals who are wards of the province in training schools?"

The answer, sir, is that the department is concerned with losses suffered by individuals in a community, under such circumstances. Therefore, each case is considered on its individual merits, as was the occurrence referred to in the second part of his question, which is, and I quote again, "Will there be compensation for tractor damage, destroying of antiques and other valuables at the Harper residence north of Cobourg as a result of the escape of nine residents of Brookside School on August 28?"

Mr. Speaker, when this incident occurred the superintendent of the school and the deputy superintendent visited the home of the owner, Mr. Eric Harper and informed him that the boys who had caused the damage would be made responsible for cleaning it up. This was done by the boys under the supervision of our staff and incidental expenses for such things as glass, door locks and so on, amounted to slightly over $100 plus the labour of our maintenance staff. Action of this nature is also taken as a salutary measure for the boys responsible.

The department offered to repair the damaged farm tractor at our own institution with our own skilled mechanics. This offer was refused by Mr. Edwin Harper on behalf of his uncle Mr. Eric Harper.

And the third part of the question, "Has any disciplinary action been taken with respect to the conduct of the Brookside supervisor who said to one of the nine Brookside boys who was apprehended with a bleeding hand"—And there follows then, Mr. Speaker, a rather outrageous statement which was alleged to have been made, and which I, with my middle class morality hesitate to repeat and I will not. It was reported in the Cobourg Sentinel-Star of September 4.

The answer, sir, is that the quotation from the newspaper—which, it should be noted, was reported as being overheard at third hand—was investigated and it was established that the supervisor did not make this statement. As a matter of fact, the superintendent of the school advises me that such a remark would be entirely out of character having regard for this particular staff member's philosophy and attitude towards his work at the school during the 13 years he has been with us.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for High Park asked a question which I was not able to answer at that time. I promised to answer it today.

The first part of the question: "Why was the death of Kenneth Haines on October 29 in the Scarborough General Hospital not reported until five days afterward?" The answer, Mr. Speaker, is that it was the opinion of the officials at Scarborough General Hospital that the case was not a reportable death required to be reported to the coroner's office.

An autopsy was performed at the hospital and it was ascertained that the child had died of natural causes. When certain articles began to appear in the newspapers the hospital felt it wise to report it to the coroner so that it might be reviewed by him. This was therefore done and the matter was investigated by the coroner.

The second part of the question: "Is it true that Mr. Haines was refused admission to another hospital shortly before his death?" Actually, the person was a child of one year of age by the name of Haines. I am informed that the child was never refused admittance to any hospital.

The facts as they are related to me is that this child, aged one year, was taken by the mother to St. Mary's Hospital on two separate occasions during the course of treatment for an infection. At each time, the child was treated and then was sent home. At the same time, the child was under the care of the family's physician. When the child was home on the last occasion, it went into convulsions rather suddenly, the mother telephoned the St. Mary's Hospital, and they advised that the child be brought in immediately. Police and the fire department officers rushed the child to Scarborough General Hospital because it was nearer, and the child was admitted there.

The third part of the question: "Why is the coroners' office not holding an inquest in this unusual death?" The answer to that is: The cause of death has been established as one from natural causes; the coroner's office does not feel that an inquest is necessary. I would just like to add, Mr. Speaker, that I wrote the hon. member on November 13, this year, in answer to his enquiry, and recited to him in my letter the finding of the autopsy as to the cause of death. I set that forth in my letter to the hon. member.

Mr. Shulman: Would the Attorney General accept a supplementary question?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes.

Mr. Shulman: Would the Attorney General agree with me that if a child is sent home from a hospital a few hours before it convulses and dies, the practice should be to treat it as an unusual death which merits an inquest?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The hon. member has much more medical knowledge than I have, but I can think of situations that I think perhaps we have all experienced, where deaths and serious situations which result in death arise very suddenly, even after treatments in a hospital, or at home.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, with your permission I will ask His Honour if he will come into the Chamber and give one bill Royal Assent.

The Honourable, the Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario entered the Chamber of the legislative assembly and took his seat upon the Throne.

Hon. W. R. Macdonald (Lieutenant-Governor): Pray be seated.

Mr. Speaker: May it please Your Honour, the legislative assembly of the province has, at its present sittings thereof, passed a bill to which, in the name and on behalf of the said legislative assembly, I respectfully request Your Honour's assent.

The Clerk Assistant: The following is the title of the bill to which Your Honour's assent is prayed:

Bill 2, An Act to amend The Municipal Act.

To this Act the Royal Assent was announced by the Clerk of the legislative assembly in the following words:

Clerk of the House: In Her Majesty's name, the Honourable, the Lieutenant-Governor doth assent to this bill.

The Honourable, the Lieutenant-Governor was pleased to retire from the Chamber.

The first order: Resuming the debate on the amendment to the motion for an address in reply to the speech of the Hon. the Lieutenant-Governor at the opening of the session.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in the traditional style, I would indeed very sincerely like to offer my compliments to you as I commence the first contribution that I have made to this, the first large formal debate of this session.

I am interested in the comments you made concerning the rules of the House, particularly the question period. I have been watching the clock these last few days, and keeping an ear on the questions as well, and as we consider these matters I think we might be wise to think in terms of the fact that the question period really is for questions of immediate urgency. There are other ways of obtaining information from the government.

Questions can be put on the order paper, where they are answered—particularly those questions that require a good deal of research and involve figures, and so on.

But if we are to have an efficient and orderly House, I think we might, all of us, pay some attention to the fact that the questions are supposed to have at least some degree of urgency and some degree of public interest. Public interest is a fairly broad term, and it does not include some of the purely local matters that are the subject of questions here. I only throw that out as a suggestion. We will be looking at this whole matter of questions in the next few days, but that is an observation I would like to make.

I would like also to welcome all the members back from their summer vacation, if we could put it that way. It did seem to me it was nothing more than a long weekend. I heard the same barracking coming from the same quarters, and the same questions from the same quarters, but for my part, Mr. Speaker, I can only say that my happiest days in government are spent inside this Chamber, and I have no objections to sitting here for any given period of time. I am delighted to be back and dealing with the business of the public in an open manner such as we do here.

I would hope that we will be able to complete this Throne Debate and some legislation by approximately December 20, which is the Friday prior to Christmas, and then we might await the completion of the Budget and the good news that it will contain before we reassemble.

One of the large events of the period since we last met was the members' tour of northwestern Ontario. I thought it was quite successful. We were fortunate in the weather. In fact, wherever we went we were told we got the first decent weather in northwestern Ontario during the whole summer. I have asked my own members here for comments on that tour. These tours will continue. I would hope that perhaps not next fall but the year after that, we might take a tour into another part of northern Ontario.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): How about Japan?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: We will deal with that when we get to it. I have some ideas in that regard too, Mr. Speaker.

I would welcome any suggestion that any of the members may have as to how these tours may be made more productive. It occurred to me as we went about northwestern Ontario that we might easily have offered the members a choice—in other words, instead of attempting to move as a body wherever we went, we might have been able to break down the examination that we were doing and the visits we made, into various units so that members could make up their minds as to what was of particular interest to them.

I think anyone comes away from a tour of that kind with some sensation of the vastness of northern Ontario, and the fact that a five-day tour in northern Ontario really is not very much in terms of a true examination of the country, or a chance to speak with the people and find out what they are thinking. It did occur to me that we might organize it somewhat differently another time. If any member, as a result of last fall's tour, has any ideas as to how it might be improved, we would be pleased to receive his comments.

While there are various matters that I could deal with here that have been touched upon by previous speakers, one thing that rather intrigues me is the constant reference to my own retirement. These come particularly from the Opposition and I get the feeling there is a good deal of wishful thinking going on over there—

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Do not blame it on us, all the public prints have been speculating.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I went through all this, you see, so I have no problem about discussing it, because I went through a similar situation prior to the last convention of our national party, when no one would really believe me when I said I was not going to be a candidate for the national leadership.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): That was good thinking!

Hon. Mr. Robarts: But it does seem to me that inasmuch as I am frank enough to put my intentions on the table, I would like to hear some expression of opinion from the Opposition. For instance, our friends over there are in the habit of changing their leader about every two years, and I was just wondering whether there is any such intention over there at the moment. Perhaps we could put these questions to them, if they put these questions to us. I sit here and I see the hopefuls, and I sometimes think by the tone of question that is asked and the approach that is being taken that maybe each one is trying to build a position for the next spasm of leadership change that will take place in that group. I detect in the member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Sargent) that he would like to have another run at it. I am certain he would, and he wants to improve his record from the last time.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Oh, there are the old perennials. I do not know about the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha), I do not think he really cares any more. But there is some new blood; the hon. member for Sarnia gives every indication to me of really casting a long and envious look on that seat down in front. I sit in this House pretty constantly and I can look across there and I can probably see the interplay of expression on those faces better than you can see it from where you sit, and sometimes it is—

Mr. MacDonald: How about the hon. member for Humber (Mr. Ben)?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: The hon. member for York Centre, too, I think is rather keen, that member from this great city of Toronto that is so soundly supported by the member for Grey-Bruce in this Legislature—I think perhaps he thinks he might have a chance. There was one more but I will save a comment about him until I am going through the reveries once again.

Now when we turn, of course, to the other—

Mr. MacDonald: That has been settled, the Prime Minister does not have to speculate on it.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Oh no. There, Mr. Speaker, is a real dreamer. He thinks it is settled. The other thing is, you see, if you sort of take the natural progression of things—it does not necessarily have to happen this way—but about every four years we have an election and the last election was in 1967, so that empirically, I suppose you might say that we would have another election in 1971. But does this group have to go through this agony again between now and 1971? I wonder, well I do not worry, but I am so interested. It has been a fascinating few weeks. We all read the paper with great eagerness to see what the frank comments were going to be on that particular day. Now the hon. member for High Park (Mr. Shulman) has indicated that he will be a candidate next time and it seems to me the hon. member for York—he has been in the House so little I have forgotten the name of his riding—the hon. member for Mt. Royal in Montreal—that was his riding. He spent three months in Montreal, fruitless I might say, but none the less I have a feeling that he might aspire to the post over here too. We do not know about the hon. member for Riverdale (Mr. J. Renwick), we do not know whether he will aspire again—we do not even know if he has accepted the result of the last one. But, nonetheless, I think this will probably be an exercise that we will all have an opportunity to view between—

Mr. Sargent: What is the Prime Minister worried about?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I am worried about my group of stalwart friends here. These are the people that will eventually clean up the thing again you see, but for laughs we watch these performances. I would not presume to suggest, but I can only tell you that we will watch with interest and we will see who really will lead this group into the next election. I have never heard an expression of opinion from the hon. member for York South that he intended to stand. It may be he has made such a statement, but it has not come to my attention. These are the things that interest me when all these questions are continuously put to me about what my personal future may be.

Mr. Sargent: Why does the Prime Minister not tell them, and make them feel good?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well I guess that is a fair assumption and one that I could not quarrel with. There are other things that have happened in the intervening periods. One was the select committee on taxation and this gave certain members who just came into the Legislature last year an opportunity to take part in the functioning of our select committees. I understand that this was a good committee, that it functioned very well.

However, I understand there were certain members of it who found their freedom of action sort of cut off in the latter days. After examination was made and the conclusions were to be reached all of a sudden the hand of the hierarchy reached up and said “thou shalt not do it that way in this committee, thou shalt do it this way, according to the dictates of the caucus and the socialist experts who advised it.” I just wondered what kind of an experience that was for those men who laboured long and hard, did a terrific job, came to some conclusions with their own consciences and their own minds as to what recommendations should and would be right, and then found that these all had to be changed because the hierarchy said "no, no, no, that is not the way we want to go."

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well I wonder personally what the reaction is of the individual members on that committee who eventually were given their orders—let us face it, they were allowed to go along and listen to the submissions and do the research, but when the chips were down, they took their orders and signed, or not signed, agreed or disagreed, according to the hierarchy of the party, and their socialist advisors.

It seems to me—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, with the reaction I get I must be right.

Mr. Speaker, I want to make a few comments about federal-provincial relations and constitutional matters. On July 23 last, the Provincial Secretary (Mr. Welch) addressed this House at some length about the course the government of Ontario is pursuing in connection with major federal-provincial and inter-provincial issues, and I would like to review for the House some of these issues and the events associated with them. I would like to bring the members up to date on the events concerning inter-governmental relations that have occurred since the House rose last July.

Yesterday, the twenty-seventh day of November was the first anniversary of the Confederation of tomorrow conference which was, you will recall, convened by this government upon the direction of this Legislature. I believe the direction was almost unanimous, perhaps there was one dissenting vote, but in any event, certainly the vast majority of the members of this Legislature approved of the government doing what it did in calling that conference. I think that in the light of what has happened since, we can now be proud of what credit we can take in that event.

No specific decisions, of course, were reached at that conference and none were intended to be reached. It was not the purpose of the conference to reach decisions. The conference was convened so that the leaders of all of the governments of Canada, of all areas of Canada, could get together and discuss with each other, through the medium of radio, television, newspapers, with the people of Canada, the issues which they believed and thought were responsible for the stresses and strains that had been developing in our federal system of government. I think that the conference was completely successful in meeting the goals that we established for it.

The leaders of the governments of the Atlantic provinces, for instance, spoke to us about their very deep-seated economic problems. The Prime Minister of Quebec explained for us the difficulties faced by French speaking people of Canada and their belief in the necessity to ensure for them their linguistic and cultural survival and growth.

Mr. Sargent: It cost a million dollars too.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, when you are dealing with the future of your country I do not think you consider dollars and cents.

I think that the representatives of the prairie provinces and British Columbia expressed primarily a strong desire to understand more fully what was going on in the other parts of Canada, and the challenges that Confederation offered. These matters have traditionally been much more debated here in central Canada than they have been among our western neighbours, and I think that when they realized what the situation was, they indicated, of course, their willingness to participate in the discussions which would be entered into, in order to resolve some of the difficulties that were laid out before us all at that conference.

Despite the differing viewpoints—because the viewpoints did differ, quite markedly—and despite the different approach taken by different areas of the country, there emerged eventually from the conference a very definite spirit and mood of co-operation. Anyone and everyone who became in any way involved in this conference, either as a participant or as an observer, or by radio, television or the press, realized that moderation and understanding really are the prerequisites, the basic fundamental prerequisites to the successful solution of Canada's constitutional problems.

This conference was notable in two other respects: First, by opening the session to journalists, the television cameras and radio microphones for the first time in the history of our country, we were able to ensure that the people of Canada would join in the deliberations about the future of our country. By so doing, we set a precedent. I feel quite certain, no one will attempt to reverse this precedent, because I believe that the very presence of the people of Canada had contributed a great deal to the success of that conference and to the constitutional conference held in Ottawa in February.

I hope that our future federal-provincial conferences of heads of government will be opened to the people of Canada through the news media. I welcome this; I believe it is a healthy and a mature step forward in our approach to matters of vital importance to the people of our country. I am informing the Prime Minister of Canada by letter, that insofar as Ontario is concerned, we are agreeable and indeed we are very anxious that any arrangements which will help to make the December conference and future conferences open to the public will be made. We will do anything on our part to ensure that this is done.

We have no interest whatsoever in going to Ottawa and discussing behind closed doors the matters that are of fundamental interest to all the people of Canada. Now, when we get into some of the financial and budgetary questions—long-range budgeting of course, it may be impossible for a whole variety of reasons to have these conferences open. But I think many conferences are closed which do not need to be closed. I think you can always have executive sessions if you need them, to discuss certain matters when it would not be in the public interest to disseminate the information produced, but that does not mean you put a lock on at the beginning of day one, and take it off at the end of day three or four or however long the conference may be. As far as this government is concerned, we would like to be able to put our position on a whole variety of subjects before the people of the province and the people of Canada. We do not want to be muzzled by closed conferences. We accept the position that there may be information that cannot be made public but that can be sorted out and dealt with in a separate way.

If I may digress for a moment, I would like to suggest that perhaps it is time we gave some consideration in this Chamber to the advisability of allowing access to our proceedings here in this Legislature for television and radio coverage.

The people of Ontario would be better informed about the important debates in each session if television and radio were allowed to cover the proceedings with live broadcasts. Of course, the Legislature itself must retain control over access to the Chamber by television and radio, but I believe that it might be possible. I only put this forward as a proposition, because I realize there are enormous technical and economic difficulties involved. The Legislature must always retain control over itself and the affairs here, but we should be able to reach some agreement between the Legislature and the media involved in order that we can decide, for instance, what debates might profitably be subjected to live coverage.

For specific examples of what I think might be appropriate: the addresses by the leaders of each party at the beginning of this debate. I do not think we could subject the public to six or seven hours of it, because you would lose your audience. I am told that in Australia there is one radio channel tuned in to their Parliament that is never shut off. It just goes on all the time, and it is never listened to either; that is the ultimate result.

There would have to be, I think, some degree of discrimination, but I can think of debates we have had here on resolutions that were of wide significance beyond the mere local issues that we dealt with in a great deal of our work here, and would be of interest to the people. The people would like to hear the expression of opinion as advanced by members speaking here; the Budget Address, the addresses of the leaders of parties in the Budget debate where policies are being set forth—broad policies as advocated by different political parties and different groups in the House. Surely, Mr. Speaker, these matters could be and would be of value if some of these debates could be broadcast and all our people could share them.

I would propose, as this session proceeds, to set up a committee to do some examination in this field to see if it is, in fact, feasible. The preliminary examination would include, of course, the whole question of cameras, lighting, and so on, and sponsorship time. Well, we will leave the questions and make-up to the individual members if they feel they need it. I suppose they are using it now.

But in any event, returning to the Confederation of Tomorrow conference, and leaving that short digression, a great deal of preparation, of course, went into it. We provided this material that was spoken of so highly by the hon. member for Grey-Bruce; this was given to the delegates from all across Canada. This material was distributed to them all, to provide background for their discussions. And here we have the theme papers of the conferences, the verbatim report of the proceedings, which is a very valuable reference work indeed. Included here is a translation of a special supplement of Le Devoir, entitled "Quebec in the Canada of Tomorrow". If you really want to understand the Quebec viewpoint, I suppose you could call that a bible of position because it contains all the thinking of the best brains in Quebec, dealing with this problem from their point of view.

Now, sir, the positive spirit we generated there was carried forward to the conference of Prime Minister and Premiers during the first week in February, and I reported on this in some detail last February. I should like to recall the two important agreements that were reached at that conference. First, the participating governments reached a consensus on language rights; and second, they agreed to undertake a comprehensive review of the constitution of Canada. For this purpose, the Prime Minister and Premiers constituted themselves as they are continuing, as a constitutional conference, and they established a committee of officials to aid them in their consideration of the constitutional review.

The continuing committee of officials, or CCO as it is called, was organized in the spring following our conference, and has since met on four occasions. It will meet once more before the constitutional conference reconvenes next month. In accordance with its mandate, that committee of officials established a full-time secretariat which is directly responsible to the 11 governments which constitute the continuing conference. Thus all the governments concerned have control in this development. In other words, it is not being run by one level of government; it is being run by all 11 governments, which I think is a very important point.

Mr. Nixon: May I just ask a brief question? The continuing committee to which the Prime Minister is referring—is that the one that was constituted by the Confederation of Tomorrow group?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: No.

Mr. Nixon: It is the one from the February conference?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Yes.

Mr. Nixon: Was there not a continuing group from the conference a year ago, here in Toronto, as well?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I will mention the outcome of that, and what it has done, but this is a continuing committee of officials whereas that other committee that you are referring to is really the committee of heads of government.

Mr. Nixon: Has it met?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Yes, but this Continuing Committee of Officials, as I say, has met four times and will meet once more. The delegates from Ontario are the Deputy Treasurer and Deputy Minister of Economics, Mr. H. I. Macdonald, and the Deputy Minister of Justice and Deputy Attorney General, Mr. A. R. Dick. The other governments of Canada are represented on this committee by similar senior public servants. It has worked very hard as a committee to provide the preliminary analysis which is necessary to the leaders of the government in their comprehensive review of the constitutional challenges facing Canada. There are many of them, and it is very difficult to sort them out by subject or in any priority at all. It is not easy even to decide where one should start.

The progress achieved to date has necessarily not been very dramatic—I would have to say that—because of the many opinions on these issues that we have in various regions of Canada. It is not simply a question of getting together and deciding what we can agree upon. You first really have to agree upon what you disagree about, and attempt to reconcile these many conflicting points of view. I am sure that everybody will recognize, as I mentioned earlier in these remarks, that the primary necessity in this is an enormous amount of patience. It is a novel exercise. It has not been done before, and patience is necessary, because we must seek to understand one another's views about these very fundamental matters related to the future of Canada.

This committee will submit a formal report on its work at the constitutional conference next month. It will be the responsibility of the Conference itself, after it has received that report, to provide the committee with further instructions about the nature of the review, and the future direction of the work of that continuing committee.

I mentioned a consensus was reached concerning language rights at that conference as well, and it consisted of three parts. This is taken from the final communique:

Recognition by this conference that as proposed by the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism, and as a matter of equity, French-speaking Canadians outside of Quebec should have the same rights as English-speaking Canadians in Quebec. Secondly: Recognition as the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism has recommended of the desirability of proceeding by governmental action as speedily as possible, in ways most appropriate in each province and without diminishing existing rights, recognized by law or usage. Thirdly: The establishment of a special committee to examine the report of the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism and the views expressed at this conference on the report, and on other matters relating to language rights and their effective provision in practice, and to consult on methods of implementation, including the nature of possible federal assistance, and on the form and the method of constitutional amendment.

That is quite formal language, but it has to be, because it has to embody the positions that are put forward by each of the 11 governments.

The special committee referred to in this last part of the consensus was created at the first meeting of the continuing committee of officials in May. Since that time the subcommittee on official languages has met twice, once in July and again in October. At these meetings the subcommittee examined the recommendations of the first report of the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism and exchanged information on problems of implementing bilingual programmes. A report of its work and progress will be submitted to the conference next month.

The position of the government of Ontario on the provision of bilingual services was explained in detail at the February conference. I reviewed it for the House here on February 27 of this year. We stated then, as now, that we endorsed the guiding principle and the spirit of the first volume of the Royal Commission report, namely that both English and French be recognized wherever the minority is numerous enough. We also announced on the two occasions in February, the creation of four task forces which would undertake a full examination of the report, particularly as its recommendations affected Ontario. These task forces are examining the administration of justice, the Legislature and provincial statutes, municipal administration, and are looking at the provincial public service. I gave an interim report on that work to this House on July 22.

The reports of these task forces were submitted to the government last month, and I believe the hon. member for York South referred to these in his remarks of yesterday. I congratulate him on the use of French in his contribution to the Throne Debate, and it was the only difference I could find in the whole speech from his contribution from the last three or four years, but it was a very significant one, and I enjoyed it.

Mr. MacDonald: There were portions of my speech that the Prime Minister must have missed.

An hon. member: You are improving, MacDonald!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: When can we see these reports?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I do not know that they really are public documents. These were task forces established within the government service. They did not hold public hearings, and so on. They were drawn up as a basis for action by the government. They are presently being examined, and I have some doubts as to whether really they are documents that should be made public. But in any event, they will be the basis for the policies that the government will announce. At the moment we are looking over what they have been able to dig out and what is in those reports, and I will report to the Legislature before this session is complete.

Sir, last July this Legislature passed a motion permitting the use of both English and French in the deliberations of this House. Legislation authorizing the establishment of public French-language secondary schools and classes were also approved. Legislation was also passed to provide a statutory basis for the French-language elementary schools which have existed in Ontario for many years.

Mr. Speaker, before I review the progress of bilingualism in the field of education, I should like to mention one other matter. Recently, we were all pleased, I am sure, to learn of the early intention of the government of Quebec to introduce legislation which would guarantee the rights of both French- and English-speaking people in Quebec to have their children educated in either of the two languages. I would like, really, to remind everyone that this assembly passed such legislation last July. I offer this reminder not in a self-congratulatory manner to the members of this House, but I think it is a fact that can probably be easily overlooked. The fact is that Ontario has taken the lead in such matters, and it has done so to ensure the equal educational opportunity of all the residents of this province. I think in this respect that we have much in which we can take pride.

Sir, when the committee on French-language schools was established by government a year ago it was charged with two tasks. The first was to prepare the necessary legislation. This was one, of course, and the government has implemented the committee's proposals in that regard. Since that time the committee has turned to such questions as curriculum, teacher education, financing and related matters. The report of this committee is nearing completion on these other matters and will soon be presented to the Minister of Education.

We have been greatly encouraged by the goodwill and by the action which led many boards of education to introduce French-language instruction this past fall, although the bill will not come into effect formally until January 1, 1969. I think this indicates the depth of goodwill and understanding that exists among the people of the province, and their basic recognition of the justice of this position that it is a right for people to have their children talk in their own language. I think that many of our children are being served now, rather than a year from now, because of the attitude taken by many boards. There are two specific instances of this that I might mention to you. In Ottawa, the collegiate institute board took under its control this fall the former private French-language secondary schools in that city, and those schools are now integral parts of the public secondary school system.

You will recall that under the new legislation, French-language committees will be created, made up of four French-speaking representatives and three members appointed by the board. These committees will act, in effect, as advisory committees to the boards who are charged with the responsibility of administering these schools. Their role will be extremely important to the proper functioning of French-language secondary schools.

In Ottawa, approximately two weeks ago, a meeting was held to choose the four French-speaking representatives. I was delighted to learn that 3,500 people turned out at a local high school in order to choose four people to sit on that advisory board. Then, in the same evening, the Ottawa collegiate institute board named its three members to the committee and this, I think we would all agree, is a very enthusiastic beginning for this programme.

I feel certain that this relationship that has developed in Ottawa will develop in other parts of the province, and will serve as a model for other parts of the province, too. In other parts of the province, the initial progress may not be so striking. It will take time, of course, but it is heartening that matters are going ahead in the way that I have indicated here. It justifies all our faith in the inherent good sense of our people and in their ability to successfully arrange these matters without strife and without acrimony such as we sometimes experience in this House.

The second instance to which I refer is the ceremony held in Welland on Monday of this week. I was to have participated and at the last moment was unable to do so. The hon. member for Stormont appeared for me. I am referring, of course, to the official opening of Confederation Secondary School, the first French-language composite secondary school to be established in Ontario. This school, once again you see, has been opened well before the legislation goes into effect on January 1 next, and this too reflects the ability of the people of that area to get together and the desire that they obviously show to solve these problems in a proper fashion.

To conclude my remarks on this particular subject of French-language schooling and instruction, I would like to stress my own confidence in the continuation of the work we have done. We will meet as a government and as a Legislature to see to the needs of our Franco-Ontarian people and Franco-Ontarian community. We will do it, I hope, in what will be the most efficient and practical fashion. We recognize and have spoken often, of course, of the great contribution that this community has made to our entire province. We have accepted the principle of bilingualism, we are engaged in its implementation and we look forward to this being done not in a token fashion, but in a sincere way, so that it will produce the ultimate results over a long period of time which we believe are possible and necessary.

These things will all, of course, play their part in the strengthening of the total unity of Canada, and I think also will make us all more aware of the interdependence of the various parts of Canada and the various units which make up Confederation. Evidence of the interdependence of the various parts of our country is provided by the frequent meetings which are taking place between the provinces themselves, and between the federal and provincial governments.

A very wide variety of dialogue has taken place in recent months. It is on the rather dramatic matters such as constitutional reform that the real confrontations take place. These are the matters that are brought forcibly to everyone's attention. But there is an enormous amount of co-operation and interaction that is going on that does not necessarily get as high a degree of publicity.

In Saskatchewan, and I will mention this later, all the Premiers met in August. We have had federal-provincial meetings dealing with health, consumer affairs, and various fiscal matters, and interprovincial meetings dealing with mining, trucking and transport. Then, of course, there is the annual meeting of the Canadian Council of Resource Ministers, and there have been all the meetings which I have described to you relating to the continuing study of the constitution.

So as we move along there is a great deal of intergovernmental co-operation taking place, and I think that it is wise that this is emphasized and drawn to the attention of the public, because I think a good many people do not really realize what is going on. Of course, the ultimate objective of all this consultation must be to improve the administrative governmental machinery of our country, and the federal and provincial governments must work together if there is to be harmony in their efforts and if there is to be maximum efficiency. I can assure you that interprovincial co-operation is flourishing between the provinces. There is a great deal of co-operation, and I am quite satisfied, quite confident, that it will continue in the future.

I have mentioned the meeting of provincial Premiers held at Waskesiu, Saskatchewan, in August. A very wide-ranging agenda was dealt with there, including proposals for provincial co-operation on pollution control, securities regulation, problems of provincial and university financing, administration of Indian affairs—which concerns us all a great deal and which is a problem for each one of the ten provincial governments—housing, and of course, the report of the continuing committee of the Confederation of Tomorrow conference.

At Waskesiu, among the resolutions passed by that meeting, were those requesting further consultation with Ottawa on health and fiscal matters. Another initiated a review leading to uniform guidelines for pollution control, because we must have national guidelines dealing with pollution. This is becoming more and more apparent, but they do not exist now. Another was aimed at achieving greater consultation on the growing problem of alcoholism and drug addiction, which is a problem besetting every provincial government. We agreed also to improve the effect of these conferences by concentrating attention, at each meeting, on several common areas of concern.

Next year we will meet in Quebec City and we are already at work on four problems—housing and urban problems, health, education and pollution. The continuing committee of the Confederation of Tomorrow conference, which was the committee referred to by the leader of the Opposition a moment or so ago, will meet in the new year to review progress on those matters dealt with by the Confederation of Tomorrow conference—namely regional disparities, linguistic rights, and a review of the constitution.

This is the continuing committee, and I am chairman of that committee, but that committee really was set up in order that the Confederation of Tomorrow conference would not simply disappear from the scene. The Confederation of Tomorrow conference was really not instituted with an idea that it would in any way supplant a federal-provincial constitutional conference. On the other hand, it did demonstrate that there could be a good deal of good done in this country if the provinces met together and discussed some of their common problems. So that continuing committee really is there in order that this machinery can be kept available when it will be needed.

While I am discussing Ontario's relations with the other governments of Canada, I would like, at this time, to express my own personal sorrow, and I think the sorrow of the people of Ontario, at the heavy loss suffered by Canada and Quebec in the death of the hon. Daniel Johnson, a month or so ago. He was Prime Minister of Quebec for only two years, but he became very well known to the rest of Canada. I think he displayed moderate views, but he certainly was insistent on establishing the rights and the needs as he saw them for his own people in Quebec, and in his support of all the rights of French Canadians, wherever they might live. I think all of us will remember how he used the Confederation of Tomorrow conference to put his point of view in Ontario and across Canada, and certainly it was a great loss to all of us when he died.

I wish also at the same time to offer my congratulations to his successor, the hon. Jean-Jacques Bertrand, on his appointment as the leader of the party and the government. I have known Mr. Bertrand for some years, and I am quite confident that the close relationship that has existed between Quebec and Ontario will not be in any way diminished by the fact that he has replaced Mr. Johnson. We will, of course, continue to do anything in our power to develop a close relationship, in order that we may find solutions to the problems that beset us.

I suppose also, while I am referring to people in other provinces, I might refer to Premier Manning of Alberta who is retiring after 25 years as the leader of the government in that province. You see what is possible, gentlemen. We always refer to him as the senior member of the Premiers' club, but that very fine man indeed did so much for his province, in so many ways, and I would take this opportunity to congratulate him on the record of service he has to Canada, and to his own people in Alberta, and to wish him well on his retirement. I think one thing retirement is costing him is attendance at the Grey Cup game here on Saturday, the first time in 20 years that Calgary has been able to come east. In any event, I guess they are getting ready to choose his successor; it happens in all jurisdictions.

Sir, I am pleased to have had this opportunity to review some of these matters, and the progress that has been made since we last discussed these matters here in the House. I would say that in some way significant advances have been made in the question of languages, and intergovernmental contacts have proven generally more sophisticated. Such difficulties as have inevitably been encountered in the process of constitutional review will be discussed, and, I would hope, faced squarely at next month's meeting of the constitutional conference and at the meeting of Ministers of Finance which will immediately follow. The fact that these two meetings will be held during the same week helps to emphasize the fact that constitutional review and fiscal economic problems of Canada are inextricably linked together. A satisfactory solution of either is impossible without a satisfactory solution of both, and we intend to pursue the crucial matters with renewed vigour.

I am very aware of the leader of the Opposition's comment, when he said that we were using our participation in constitutional reform in this country as a threat in connection with our discussions about fiscal matters with the federal government. Mr. Speaker, I will only say this, that I think we have a reputation for co-operation and desire in the field of constitutional reform, and certainly we will not use the term "opt out". I do not know whether it was intended in this way, but in my ears that was quite offensive. This province will never opt out of any discussion which is for the benefit of Canada.

But I must tell you, if the Confederation of Tomorrow conference proves one thing and nothing else, it proves that there are great areas of this country that are vastly more interested in what is going to happen to them economically than they are in what is going to happen to the constitution. To wander around in the theoretical areas of certain forms of constitutional reform, when you have not solved the economic imbalances from one region to another in this country, will be a very bad exercise indeed. These matters have to proceed together, and we have to solve the problems of our people, whatever they may be. We cannot separate them out.

I will deal with this with some other remarks I have to make, but I will point out now the constitutional implications in some of the discussions that have taken place with the federal government just recently. I think the leader of the New Democratic Party has a good grasp of this, as I read in his remarks yesterday.

I would say that the process of arriving at solutions depends to a great extent on the attitudes of the governments involved. At conferences on these questions, the federal government and the provinces must regard each other as partners in an enormously complex federal system. There can be no room for paternalism, or unilateral action, and provided that attitudes of reason and moderation prevail—and we should do our utmost to encourage those attitudes—the government of Ontario is optimistic about the outcome of the continuing financial and constitutional discussions.

But we are not interested in going to Ottawa to any conference to be faced with a cut-and-dried position which has never been discussed, and where we are told to take it or leave it. I think it must be obvious to anyone that this is an attitude that will get us no place, and certainly will not solve the problems of this country. I think every day it becomes more obvious that for Mr. Sharp and Mr. Benson and his cronies to turn to us and say, "Go and impose your own taxes, do what you like, but do not ask us to give you any more room because we are not going to. Get your taxes where you like," can lead to situations that I think are very destructive indeed.

In this province, I suppose, we could establish without too much difficulty a very sophisticated fiscal bureaucracy. We could collect our own personal income tax and our own corporation tax. We are big enough to do it, we have the resources and manpower to do it. But what would we create? We could very easily create something that in the hands of some government some day could effectively block any fiscal or monetary policy that the federal government might choose to introduce. This is the type of thing we want to avoid. We do not want to be put in the position where we create competing systems, we must co-operate.

In a country the size of this one with the problems it has and with the 20 million it has, the whole secret to our survival is co-operation and not unilateral action, because the provinces have grown up whether the federal government wants to accept the fact or not.

Now, sir, I am into, of course, the next section of my remarks and that is that the major problem—and I believe this has been said by both the other leaders in the last two or three days—the major problems that we have to face during this current session will relate one way or another to finance. Perhaps of all these, the most important is the way in which Ontario will restructure its taxation system. Hand in hand with it is the more immediate financial problem with which the government is dealing and which has been made more difficult by our failure to achieve what we feel is a reasonable balance of taxing room between the federal and the provincial governments. Believe me, this is not a request for a hand-out. This a request for room, for elbow room to manoeuvre, and I think this is getting through at long last. We do not go to Ottawa asking for hand-outs, we go to Ottawa looking for room to raise the money that we have to raise to provide the services that our people not only want, but need.

A number of important measures will also be placed before the Legislature during the session relating to the rationalization of our taxation system. Chief among these are measures relating to our relations with the municipalities and the structure of local governments in Ontario. There is, as I have said, a direct relationship between federal-provincial financial problems and the forthcoming constitutional discussions where one of the main items on the agenda will be an approach to the distribution of powers between the federal and provincial governments. The meeting ground for these intergovernmental relationships will be found in the decisions we take on the tax structure. The relationship is direct because the extent to which the province can meet the major recommendations of the report of the Ontario committee on taxation—that is, the Smith committee—and transfer part of the burden on the regressive property tax to more progressive tax fields now shared by the federal and provincial governments will be dependent in large part on the division of revenue from these shared tax fields between the federal and provincial governments. In other words, if we are to relieve the homeowner of the regressive taxes that presently rest on him, we have to have more space in the progressive tax field, because we have to replace that money from tax from another source. Surely this is what the exercise is all about—where the incidence of tax lies. This is the question really.

Now, if we are to restructure our tax system in the province to benefit the homeowner and to relieve him of the tax on property, then we are looking for more elbow room, if I may put it that way. We are looking for more areas of funds to make the replacement in the field of the progressive tax. I do not consider this in any way to be looking for a handout. If it is necessary, if the federal government want it, if they force us into it, we will impose our own income tax system. I have pointed out some reasons why I do not agree with it. I do not think it is a good thing from an administrative point of view. But on the other hand, there is this question about "he who spends should tax" and we are prepared to accept our responsibility in this area. But, I think we should all be aware of the fact that it is not really a very effective solution to the problem.

Mr. Nixon: Just a point of clarification, if the Prime Minister will permit. Are we to assume then that if the federal position remains unchanged, that we will have separate provincial income tax from what the Premier has just said?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: No. I must make it very clear that there are such discussions going on here and, no, the government has come to no decision. All I point out to you is that if it proves to be necessary to accomplish the purposes of the government we are able to do it. That is the burden of my—

Mr. Nixon: It was my understanding of what the Prime Minister had read.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: No, I am not, and I would not want to leave that impression because I do not think it is a proper position to take. What we are examining here are the alternatives and the courses that are open to us.

Mr. MacDonald: The "shut" case at the moment is the federal case?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well, there is a degree of rigidity there that we hope might change. In any event, this is not an open and shut matter as far as this government is concerned. But if we are to—I loathe reading speeches but sometimes, Mr. Speaker, it is necessary.

Mr. Sargent: Who wrote it, or does he write his own speeches?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I do not know where the member could assume that, because I have been ad libbing all the way through between the sentences.

Mr. Nixon: Maybe that is what did it.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Yes. Well, maybe that is what did it. We will have to go to Hansard.

However, federal-provincial—now I am reading—federal-provincial tax sharing is not only important to finance this shift from the property tax so that we may increase the equity of the overall tax structure, it is also important if we are to contain total provincial-municipal tax levels and, at the same time, maintain our commitments. In other words, if we are to keep the total amount of taxes collected by the municipalities and by the province within reasonable bounds, if we are to meet our commitments, this whole question of federal-provincial tax sharing must enter into the picture, it just simply cannot be excluded. We are faced with a situation where the distribution of powers cannot mean much if one level of government has the superior revenue capacity and unlimited spending capacity and at the same time is able to initiate new programmes and determine the expenditure priorities of other levels of government. The government of Ontario believes we must simultaneously come to an agreement on the most equitable and efficient distribution of both revenue and expenditure powers.

I would just point this out to you, we are being pushed into Medicare, which from the point of view of this government is not necessary in the province at this time, and is not one of our top priorities. We are going to be pushed into it by a level of government that is taxing us for it before we get it, and then it has already served notice that five years from now it will through some arrangement push the whole thing back on us. Now, what can we expect at the end of five years? The introduction of another programme? The imposition of another programme here that we may not agree with or whatever government may be in power here does not agree with? And then we go through this whole exercise again. This is the worrying thing. Because, I would suggest to you that with the tax increases the federal government is putting on presently and with its withdrawal from the shared-cost programmes, as it is indicating it is going to, it is going to have very substantial surpluses in a relatively short number of years. What political party can withstand the political pressure of spending surpluses? We will be sitting here, if we cannot get some rational solution to this problem, fighting with a real financial problem with another level of government sitting there ready to repeat the whole performance. It is related directly to the constitutional question of what powers the various levels of government have as well as what their revenue sources are.

The thing that astonishes me is that here we are about to sit down to try to decide how we are going or what we are going to do to amend our constitution and we have never been able to agree on the method by which we are going to do it. Now does that not come first? In my opinion that should be the first:

Mr. Nixon: Federal leaders tried to scuttle it right here—Diefenbaker.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well, Mr. Speaker, I am responsible for the government of this province. I stand in my chair here speaking for Ontario and—in my humble opinion there are no politics in this—there are no party politics in it at all. I have had the same arguments with several governments of my own political stripe that I am having with this government, and frankly I hope we will be able to keep partisan politics out of this because it is too important to get involved here.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): What powers are you seeking that you have not got now?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: None.

Mr. Singer: Well then you—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: The hon. member has missed the point. He might have gone ahead to ask the question "what powers are you prepared to surrender if you do not get the revenue?" That would have been a much smarter question to have asked. However, having asked it myself I do not feel compelled to answer it.

So when we participate in the meeting of Prime Ministers and Premiers on December 16, we will then present the basic position of the Ontario government. This is: If we want to live in a federal country we must respect the central tenet of federalism that central and regional governments should each be responsible and sovereign in their own fields. At the same time we recognize that we will never be able to agree on watertight compartments between federal and provincial responsibilities, but I think we can do a great deal better than we have done to date. As I have said on many occasions in the past, governmental activities in all countries are becoming increasingly interdependent. We just have to look at the international monetary system today to have some appreciation of the necessity for co-operation internationally as well as nationally.

We must acquire more sophisticated means of inter-governmental co-operation and co-ordination of policies. Nevertheless, if co-operation and co-ordination are to work, there cannot be an assumption of superior power which will upset the priorities and decisions of the other governments. There cannot be an automatic assumption that the federal government, the central government in a federal system of government, is the superior power. It is this unstated assumption that leads to most of our difficulties in the field of federal-provincial relations at the present time, because there seems to be an automatic assumption that our decisions can be made in Ottawa and we can still have a federal system that will function. This means that you change from a federal system to a central system, and this is what we would wish to avoid.

Three weeks ago the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. MacNaughton) asked the Minister of Finance a series of very blunt questions about the federal view of federalism in federal-provincial financial matters. The unmistakable reply of the federal government was that the provinces should look to their own resources if they have financial problems. On the other hand the federal government has implied by its actions on the question of Medicare and its general attitude, as expressed in many fields, for example, securities and legislation regarding pollution, that it regards the provinces as branch plants of the federal government.

These branch plants are expected to carry out programmes and policies devised in Ottawa and financially assisted by the federal treasury. The option which the government of Ontario proposed is to sit down together and jointly work out our spending priorities; to share our revenues on the basis of our spending responsibilities. This position that we have advanced on so many occasions, which is really right out in the open now, seems to have been rejected.

Mr. Speaker, we now have a choice and we may act as a responsible government by planning our own programmes and setting our own priorities, or we may act as a branch plant of the federal government and react to, and fall in line with, federal initiatives. This is really what is being offered to us. And our choice, of course, is very clear, and I think we have made it clear over these last few years. We will take what we consider to be the responsible approach on behalf of the people of this province.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would deal with several matters connected with the plans of the government to overhaul the taxation structure of the province. Since we last met the select committee on taxation carried out its public hearings and submitted its report—which I have already commented upon in part. I should like to take this opportunity to congratulate and express the appreciation of all members of the House for what this committee did and the members who served on it. In all my time around here I have never seen a select committee act with more despatch, do more work, get more done, in a lesser period of time, and I think that each member of the committee is fully justified in being proud of what he did in his participation in this work.

At the same time that committee was at work, a special task force within the government was conducting an evaluation of the report of the Ontario Committee on Taxation and subsequently took over the recommendations of the select committee. The task force examined the financial implications and their relationship to an overall government approach to the restructuring of our taxation system, as well as inter-governmental financial relations. This work has now been completed. It provides a comprehensive body of technical information which will allow the government to formulate its decision on the reform of a tax structure within the context of emerging federal-provincial developments. That is why we are unable to come forward now, of course, right at the moment, with a firm and positive recommendation as to what we are going to do. It all plays itself out against the background of what will eventually happen between the federal and the provincial governments.

In a few minutes I shall speak in some detail about one of the main recommendations of the Ontario Committee on Taxation, namely, regional government. The government has decided to deal with regional government at this time because we believe that the reform of our municipal system of taxation and provincial-municipal financial relations depend upon a rational base of local government.

During the course of this debate — the Throne Debate — the Minister of Education (Mr. Davis) will make announcements related to the structure of school grants in the context of the new consolidated boards of education. Because education is the largest single item in the budgets of both the province and the municipalities, the financing of education is fundamental to any reform of taxation in this province.

The establishment of regional school boards is basic to the rationalization of our system of school financing—it had to be done first—and therefore through the school boards to the rationalization of the entire municipal tax structure. As I point out, it is the largest single item there. It is important, therefore, to understand that these developments on regional government and the financial structure of the boards of education represent important and essential moves in a long-range plan dealing with the problems set out in the reports of the Smith committee and the select committee. Decisions on the tax structure cannot properly be taken until we know more fully the context of the complete federal provincial fiscal situation within which our decisions, of course, must be made. Once this is determined, the province can then make decisions in all these areas and begin to implement a programme of tax structure reform designed to increase the equity of the total provincial-municipal tax system, and to provide a viable base for financing required public expenditures.

In advance of the meeting of the Ministers of Finance and Provincial Treasurers next month, the hon. Provincial Treasurer will be making a more detailed report to this House on the position that this government has adopted in its discussions with the federal government, and we will give you notice, Mr. Speaker. Subsequently the Treasurer will draw together all the areas which I have mentioned relating to our financial land taxation policies in a statement giving the government's overall position on the reports of the Ontario Committee on Taxation and the select committee, and this probably will be embodied in the budget statement and budget papers.

Mr. Nixon: Would this be called a white paper?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well, Mr. Speaker, we do not—a white paper is not an instrument that has been widely used in this House.

Mr. Nixon: The Treasurer has promised a white paper.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well, you can call it anything you like. What I am saying is that it will be put before the House in the form of statements of policy, but they may come from several directions. They must all be taken together because there are so many departments involved; for instance, the Minister of Municipal Affairs will make a very long statement on regional government which is certainly inexplicably bound up with the reform of taxation.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): It was promised for November which has almost fled.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Who promised anything?

Mr. Sopha: Well did not the Treasurer say—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: The government did not promise anything.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: He tried to pin this on us at the last election, and we proved that we had never promised anything.

Mr. Singer: He has just given us an—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I think you are getting a pretty good background on just what is—

Mr. Singer: When do we get into the foreground?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Oh, be patient; in the fullness of time.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: The other side of the financial picture deals with government expenses. As I stated when I participated in the Throne Debate during the last session, and as the Provincial Treasurer outlined in his budget statement, the government is developing a much more sophisticated approach to the establishment of expenditure priorities. It is also developing a system to ensure that costs are controlled, and that we are achieving the most efficient use of tax dollars. At the heart of this system is the Cabinet committee on policy development. This committee has been meeting frequently since the last session adjourned in July, and in August this committee established general targets for use by the Treasury Board in its consideration of departmental estimates. These targets related to the aggregate amount of expenditures which will be allowed in the forthcoming budget, and to general priorities among expenditure programmes presented by the various departments. In other words we are here looking at the total picture of expenditures and the priorities into which those expenditures must fit. These decisions were based on an analysis of the first year of the five-year expenditure projection taken from the various departments and agencies of the government. During the summer many meetings were held between the Provincial Treasurer, the Ministers and the officials of various operating departments to explain the financial problems and priorities that the government had established.

Following the decisions of the Cabinet committee, letters were sent to all departments by the Provincial Treasurer, setting out guidelines for the preparation of the 1969/70 estimates of each department. Throughout this entire process the staff of The Department of Treasury and Economics and the Treasury Board secretariat dealt with the total fiscal problems and economic expenditure priorities, the analysis of departmental estimates and forecasts, and the means of promoting operational efficiency. As a result, the decision-making process for governmental expenditures this year marks the beginning of the programme-planning budgeting system which is being introduced generally into the entire government budgetary process. I can assure you that these changes in techniques and the development of these administrative techniques in an organization the size of the government cannot be done overnight.

In addition to the work in the current budgetary cycle, the Cabinet committee on policy development has been active in other areas. Among other subjects it has discussed the work prepared within the government on the two taxation reports, the questions of regional government and the relationship of regional government with regional development. We have dealt with position papers on transportation policy, the relationships between the government and Hydro, external aid, immigration, social security programmes and a whole host of educational policy matters.

A new practice, Mr. Speaker, to those who are interested in how the government functions has also been established whereby the Treasury Board refers to the Cabinet committee on policy development matters coming before it which require policy clarification or decision. In other words, the Treasury Board is not a policy-making body. It is a body designed to ensure that the money is spent within the policies laid down by the government.

Mr. Singer: That means that they talk to each other?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Yes.

Mr. Sargent: Who lays down the policy?

An hon. member: He just told the member a moment ago.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: What I say falls on some deaf ears. However, that is all right, it will all be in Hansard. I am pleased to report that the new system is working smoothly and we are getting some of the bugs out of it. It will provide us with a very systematic approach to overall governmental decisions, which becomes more and more difficult, of course, as the government grows larger. I had some discussion with one Treasurer of this province in days gone by and he told me how he did the budgeting in those days when the budget was small. He could do it at his own desk and in his own office in about an hour and a half. It is not that simple today.

Well now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to get into the whole question of regional government. The whole political structure of our province, indeed of our country, is shifting and changing. Sometimes it is a fact that we are slow to recognize some of these changes and the need for them, and sometimes they have in fact taken place before governmental structures catch up with the changes that have actually occurred.

During the last session of this House, legislation was introduced, which I mentioned, to consolidate into larger, more efficient units the more than 1,500 boards of education of this province. I pointed out here when I was Minister of Education about ten years ago there were over 4,000 boards of education in this province. Today there are slightly over 100. That consolidation becomes effective on January 1, and I think we would all join in saying a word of appreciation to the people outside this Legislature in the local municipalities who have worked so hard to make this thing possible. We have had excellent co-operation from the local school boards, from people who saw their jobs disappearing and who were faced with the inevitable fear that the human animal has of the unknown. They had to deal with something new and they did it well, and we are grateful to them because without their co-operation it never would have gone as smoothly as it has.

The result of all this is, of course, that we will have an enormously strengthened and a more equally distributed system of education. In 1966 I had the honour of introducing the policy of the government of Ontario on regional development. That policy statement, which I have here some place in this pile of paper, is known as "Design for Development", and it sets forth the plans of the government to achieve for all economic regions of the province an equitable share in a purposeful provincial development programme.

Much has been accomplished since "Design for Development" was outlined in this House. The greatest change, in my opinion, has been in the degree of acceptance by the public and local officials of regional activities and regional planning, as opposed to purely local parochial activities and planning. I was interested to read in a recent report of the Erie region economic council the results of a questionnaire the council had drawn up to gather "grass roots" opinion on regional development. Based on the questionnaire and subsequent discussion at a series of meetings throughout the region, the Erie economic council came to such conclusions as these about "grass roots" attitudes:

There is a general realization that society is actually living on a regional scale now; there is a genuine willingness to study developmental problems objectively; a sharing of assessment and dormitory expenditures will bring about regional thinking and budgeting faster than any other single influence; that urban areas should not be separated from rural areas surrounding them; and that annexation as an adjustment factor in territory is of limited value today. May I say that the regional development councils are doing an excellent job in the essential task of communicating to the government the requirements of the people of their region?

For some time, Mr. Speaker, the government of Ontario has been engaged in planning a closer relationship of regional economic development and the structure of local government. We have been moving forward on two fronts: the analysis of regional economic development, as outlined in "Design for Development", and through the local government reviews undertaken in various parts of the province. They are, of course, interrelated. We have now reached the point where both must be carried forward together, in concert with one another in a single, unified policy.

I should like at this time—

Mr. Sargent: What a lot of nonsense. Is this your 1956 speech?

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): The hon. member does not understand it.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I suppose anything one does not understand is automatically categorized as nonsense.

I should like at this—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: "Design for Development", that is what the hon. member told me four years ago; to update my thinking! I have sat here for a good many years. I have been told when the great takeover was going to come. I have not seen it yet.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: When the hon. member for Grey-Bruce becomes leader.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well, we wish the hon. member luck the next time round.

Now, the objectives of regional development are the "provision of the best possible environment for our people" and the "creation and maintenance of an atmosphere which will encourage economic growth and development throughout the province". In so stating, the government emphasized that it has the responsibility to carry out and give direction to regional land use and economic development planning. These were spelled out in three principles which the government considers to be essential to regional economic development.

First, the government accepts the responsibility of guiding, encouraging and assisting the orderly and rational development of the province.

Second, the efforts of the government should be complementary to the private sector of the economy in helping to create an atmosphere for growth and development.

Third, policies must be cast in the mould of Ontario's conditions and not simply borrowed from other jurisdictions where fundamental characteristics and institutions may differ.

Further, Design for Development states that the regional plans and priorities of the government should contribute to the total environmental development and economic performance of the province.

Mr. Speaker, as I have stated in this House on other occasions, we are determined to produce guidelines for our regions so that both the public and private decisions which affect our development can have realistic relationships to one another.

The government of Ontario has pursued the objectives of Design for Development with vigour. The government has encouraged each region of Ontario to achieve its social and economic potential within the overall framework of the province. The government has encouraged the care and conservation of our natural environment. The government has achieved greater efficiency and effectiveness in its service to the people of Ontario through closer co-ordination of departmental activities.

Since Design for Development was announced, the regional development programme has moved forward rapidly. The first task, of course, was to bring together an inventory of all the programmes, policies and information of the various departments of the government which would be of value in an emerging regional programme. This was completed in 1967. The next task was the evaluation and projection of detailed basic economic trends of each region in the province. This is just now in the process of being completed.

Our analysis of the basic trends throughout the province has led us to group our regional potentials into three categories. One category will be that of a region of self-sustained growth, where the major problems are those of urban expansion. The second will be a region of inconsistent or fluctuating growth, where some assistance may be necessary in order that the region may achieve its full potential. The third category is that of slow growth, where major assistance may be necessary if the region is to achieve its full potential.

While this research and evaluation has been carried out within the regional development branch of The Department of Treasury and Economics, the regional development programme has involved many other activities, all leading to the formulation of plans for economic growth in each region of the province. These activities have resulted directly from the measures that were announced in Design for Development.

As an example, the Cabinet committee on policy development is dealing with the relationship between regional development policy and the establishment of regional governments. The advisory committee on regional development has met frequently this year, and has before it a wide variety of regional programmes put forward by departments of government which have regional interests.

These include the master tourist plan of the province being undertaken by The Department of Tourism and Information; the review of the recommendations of the goals plan of the Metropolitan Toronto and Region Transportation Study, which is now being conducted by a special subcommittee chaired by the director of the regional development branch; and the special study on the future development of the Niagara Escarpment, which is now before the government.

A large part of the committee's time has been spent discussing the strategies to be followed in developing regional plans and in co-ordinating these plans with the regional activities of the various governmental departments and agencies.

The regional development councils have been an integral part of the planning process and are now submitting to the government their own proposals for strategy of development within their own regions to cover the next five years. Along with the intensive research taking place within the regional development branch, the university research programme in regional development is now beginning to bear fruit. I am certain that before the end of this session the hon. members will have an opportunity to see the results of some of the studies conducted by 14 universities. In addition to this I am sure that the members will be pleased to know that the "Economic Atlas of Ontario", which is the most complex publishing project ever undertaken by the University of Toronto Press, will be released in a few months.

The co-ordination of the regional activities of various departments and agencies in the field is also progressing. The regional advisory boards of civil servants have been meeting regularly in each of the ten economic regions and, like the regional development councils, the advisory boards have prepared their own views about the course development should take in their own regions during the next five years.

So, fortified by the results of these activities, the government will begin within weeks the formulation of actual plans for the regional development programme. Work has already begun in three regions: northwestern Ontario, where special ARDA regional development programmes are being carried out; the central Ontario region, which has had the benefit of the MTARTS study; and the mid-western Ontario region, which has selected by the regional development branch for a pilot approach to regional planning. The first stage will emphasize solutions to problems of an economic and social nature. The second stage will deal with the improved use of our natural environment. From these plans will come targets for broad use of our land, the character and amount of economic activity in each region and recommendations for the most effective implementation of regional programmes by both provincial and local departments and agencies.

Since Ontario is becoming increasingly an urban society, with the largest proportion of our people living in urban areas and many others employed in urban areas I believe we shall be seeking many of our solutions in the urban centres. A substantial share of the potential of all regions of the province will be provided by the urban centres. One of the challenges in establishing our regional development plans will be to select those urban centres, both large and small, which will be appropriate growth points for the type of region in which the centre is located.

Having reached this stage, Mr. Speaker, we have brought together two separate streams of government action: those dealing with regional economic development and those dealing with the structure of local government throughout Ontario. I am sure that you will agree that the delineation of regional government areas will, in all likelihood, be centred on these urban-centred growth points.

In "Design for Development" it is clearly stated that the implementation of the regional development policy of the government could lay the groundwork for changes in area government which might be considered appropriate. As I have said, Mr. Speaker, that moment has now come. Regional government and a regional development programme are closely associated. We believe that in Ontario we must have strong local government coupled with a meaningful regional economic programme. We have been discussing these matters in terms of phases and stages; perhaps we might well consider that we are now embarking on phase two of "Design for Development".

You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that in the recent Speech from the Throne, his honour, the Lieutenant Governor, stated that:

Among the measures to be placed before the hon. members will be proposals to institute regional government in various areas of the province where sufficient study has been completed.

The rationalization of our structure of local government has occupied the attention of the government for some time. As our province has become more and more urbanized, it has become increasingly apparent that the mechanism of several hundreds of small municipalities has become an inadequate means of meeting the requirements of the people of Ontario in the second half of this century. We envisage in the restructuring of municipal government on a regional basis that there will be an accompanying significant reduction in the total number of municipalities now existing in Ontario.

In recent years we have received and considered the report of the select committee on The Municipal Act and related Acts, known as the Beckett report, the report of the Ontario committee on taxation, the Smith committee, and the advice of the select committee which considered the recommendations of the committee on taxation. The need for larger units of local government was expressed in each of these studies. In the case of the Smith committee and the subsequent select committee report, it was emphasized that the restructuring of municipal financing can achieve maximum benefit only if, at the same time, we can achieve a more rational approach to the numbers and size of local governments. Indeed, both committees made it clear that the reform of municipal financing and municipal structure are required if we are to overcome the basic problems of local governments.

In our planning for regional governments, we can draw upon the considerable advice and expertise resulting from the local government reviews ordered by the government in recent years and the detailed work of the Metropolitan Toronto and region transportation study. We can draw upon the experience in Metropolitan Toronto where, since 1954 we have had one of the most successful forms of local government in operation anywhere. We can draw upon the experience of the new regional municipality of Ottawa-Carleton, which is the first of what can be described as a true regional government.

As I have indicated, there is also a wide public acceptance of the need for governmental responsibility on a regional basis. Almost every conference in recent months related to our current urban challenges has suggested that a major barrier to municipal solutions is the fragmentation of our municipal structure.

The basic aim of the government in arriving at the policy of establishing regional governments is to make local government as strong and meaningful as possible. As our society becomes more complex, the people of Ontario to whom governments are responsible, must be able to participate in the decisions and direction of their government. If our municipal partners are unable to cope with the problems they face because of their small size, limited financial resources and inability to provide the services which all residents of Ontario should expect, participation becomes meaningless.

British journalist Alistair Cooke emphasized the situation recently when he said the "breakdown in society comes when people cannot recognize any public obligations beyond their family." Surely we must ensure that the people of Ontario have an opportunity to participate in local units of government which are large enough to be meaningful and which will have a resource base sufficient to their responsibilities. We have the opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to avoid the difficulties which are besetting the cities to our south. We have the opportunity to provide for the people of Ontario horizons of such breadth that a person will feel an obligation to his community beyond his obligation to his family. Indeed, we must provide a framework within which he will be eager to participate in the further strengthening of local government.

Having established that regional governments are the best means so far designed to achieve this aim, I can assure the hon. members that the government will move toward the implementation of our objective as quickly as possible.

In establishing a series of regional governments, the government of Ontario has established specific guidelines. The government accepts the five criteria for regional government set out by the Ontario committee on taxation. They are: 1. A region should exhibit a sense of community; 2. A region should have a balance of interests; 3. There must be an adequate financial base; 4. The region should be large enough so that local responsibilities can be performed efficiently; and 5. Regional boundaries should make possible maximum co-operation between regions.

To these criteria put forward by the Smith committee, the government has added three others of immense importance. First, we shall seek community participation in the formation of regional governments and, where possible, we shall strive to achieve community acceptability of the proposal. Second, we shall seek to have the new regional boundaries, or combinations of them, usable by other institutions. And third, we propose that in cases where there are to be two tiers of government within a region, the smaller units would be designed using the same criteria used at the regional level.

In announcing the policy of the government to establish a series of regional governments across Ontario, I should like to emphasize that we do not propose to put regional governments into effect in all parts of Ontario at one time. The Speech from the Throne indicated that they will be established first in those areas where sufficient study has been completed. For example, the regional municipality of Ottawa-Carleton becomes effective on January 1, 1969. But we have been working on that for probably five years. Other local government studies have been completed or are nearing completion. Basically, we shall establish regional governments on the basis of priority of need. As one looks about the province it is apparent that not all areas are in urgent need of immediate regional government. We shall respond first where the present structure of local government is obviously not adequate to meet existing change.

At the next opportunity during the debate of the reply to the Speech from the Throne, the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. McKeough) will outline a schedule of proposals for the establishment of regional governments. He will also deal further and in some detail with the rationale which will be used in deciding where and how a regional government will be established.

Mr. Speaker, in my discussion today I have been referring primarily to the requirements of southern Ontario. In doing so, I am also mindful of the pressing needs of the people of northern Ontario. As the hon. members are aware, during the tour of northwestern Ontario by members of the Legislature in September, I announced that an interdepartmental committee had been established to examine government at the district level in northern Ontario. We expect to have the committee's report by mid-1969 and will proceed quickly with the formulation of policy. The Minister of Municipal Affairs will have more to say on some specific structures of government in northern Ontario when he takes part in this debate.

The primary responsibility for carrying out the programme of regional government will rest with The Department of Municipal Affairs and the Minister. He and his department will work closely with the policy development committee of Cabinet which, appropriately, resulted from Design for Development. Through the policy development committee we shall achieve close co-ordination of the regional government plans of The Department of Municipal Affairs, the programme of regional economic development, the overall programme of provincial development administered by The Department of Treasury and Economics and the related programmes of other departments.

Now, sir, I have put this on the record although I fully recognize that this is not one of the most stimulating addresses that one could make. None the less it is a broad and detailed statement of what the government proposes to do and I would suggest to you that as we go through this, as we debate the various matters that will come before this House as a result of these policies we are putting before you, you will have an opportunity, if you understand it and you wish to, to participate in what is really a very exciting and very stimulating period in the history of our province. These are very fundamental matters. The restructuring of our entire system of local government through a system of regional governments; the consolidation of our school districts; the programme of regional economic development; the rationalization of our provincial-municipal system of taxation; must be, in the final analysis, a tribute to the people of this province.

All these things are interrelated and all must be carried forward together. The people of Ontario recognize this and, I am confident, are prepared to accept the substantial challenge of accomplishing all of these tasks simultaneously, and the fact that, of course, they are going to involve a great deal of change from present structures and present ways of doing things to which many people may have become accustomed.

We are embarking on the greatest restructuring of local government in the history of this province. We shall be altering a system of municipal government begun by Governor John Graves Simcoe in 1792. The establishment of regional government will be, in my opinion anyway, as major a change in our day as was The Baldwin Act of 1849 which set up the basic municipal structure as we now know it.

So, sir, we must succeed in what we have set out to accomplish if we are to meet the aspirations and the needs of the people of this province. Indeed, if we are to develop the tremendous potential of this province and all its people, we must be successful in these things we are proposing, because we are building here not only for today and tomorrow, but for many decades to come.

Mr. Sopha moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will move as indicated. There will be none of the routine business of the House. We will assemble here at 10 o'clock.

On Monday afternoon we will resume this debate. On Tuesday I would propose to deal with second reading of the expropriation bill in order that we may get it into committee and on its way.

I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Speaker, before that motion is put, could the Prime Minister tell us when it is expected that that bill will get into committee? Before Christmas? After Christmas?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: It would be my hope that it will get to committee as soon as we can complete the debate on second reading.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Wednesday of next week!

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I will arrange the committee meeting as soon as it is read. I am very anxious to get that bill through and let it get Royal Assent by Christmas. There are a great many expropriations going on in the province and the sooner this becomes law the better.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 6.05 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

---

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 29, 1968

The House met at 10 o'clock, a.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: This morning we have students with us, in the east gallery, from Wilcox public school in Toronto, and in the west gallery from the International Institute, Toronto, and Woodbine junior high school in Don Mills.

Hon. W. G. Davis (Minister of Education and University Affairs): Mr. Speaker, one of the most significant and really encouraging features of our observance of the 150th anniversary of the birth of the Hon. George Brown has been the active and enthusiastic participation of the board of governors, the faculty and the student body of the community college which bears the name of the great Canadian statesman.

I should like you Mr. Speaker, and the hon. members, to be aware of the fact that it was on the initiative of the college that the city of Toronto designated this week as George Brown Week.

I believe that over 150 students and faculty members served on the various committees which developed a whole week of special activities. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that they are certainly entitled to our gratitude.

So Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased indeed to have occupying seats in your gallery members of the board of governors of George Brown College; its chairman, Mr. Barry Lowes; its president, Mr. C. C. Lloyd; and also Mr. Ron Lessley, the president of the students' administrative council. With your permission Mr. Speaker I should like to have them all stand to receive our greeting.

Mr. Speaker we are also privileged to have with us a very distinguished member of the faculty of the University of Edinburgh in the person of Professor G. A. Shepperson, who has come to deliver the George Brown memorial lectures at the University of Toronto.

As you know sir, our own Professor Careless was in Edinburgh this fall to deliver these lectures at a number of Scottish universities. We are delighted to have Professor Shepperson with us on this occasion and I will ask him to stand as well to receive the greetings of this House.

Just one other point to observe, Mr. Speaker, having been somewhat involved with these ceremonies and having visited the University of Edinburgh myself, I should point out, particularly for the enlightenment of the members opposite, that in the ceremonies later on this morning the guard of honour will be composed of the Lorne Scots Regiment from the great counties of Peel, Dufferin and Halton, which constituencies, I think, are in their entirety represented on the Conservative or Tory side of the House on this occasion. I think this demonstrates very clearly just how non-partisan our observances are when the regiment from those great counties forms the guard of honour on this very special occasion.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the last opinion expressed was somewhat involved—I too will probably be working it out some time this afternoon. But I would like to join the hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Davis) in extending a very warm welcome from this Chamber to the chairman and the members of the board of governors of George Brown University, and also to Professor Shepperson.

Mr. Speaker, we also have with us Mr. George Brown, who is the grandson of the man we are honouring today. Mr. Brown, sir, if you would stand I would like to introduce you to the Chamber.

With Mr. Brown is Mr. James L. Cooper, publisher of the Globe and Mail which is the successor through several evolutions of the newspaper with which the original Mr. Brown was associated. Mr. Cooper would you stand please.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Not quite in the same tradition.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well that is a matter of opinion.

Also with us here is Dr. Ross Cameron, who officiated at the ceremonies at the graveside this morning.

I understand that Mr. Brown's home is in Argyleshire, Scotland; I also understand that in the tradition of his forefathers he is the treasurer of the local Liberal Party in that area and I am informed that the treasury contains about two pounds.

Now, sir, today, November 29, is the 150th anniversary of the birth of the Hon. George Brown, a Scottish immigrant who made Ontario and Toronto his home, who founded The Globe, who contributed as perhaps few other men have—or have been able—to the formation of this country in the 1860's, and who was a member of the great coalition that created Confederation.

He also attended the Charlettetown conference and the Quebec conference which led to Confederation. He was the representative of the people of this province at both those conferences and was subsequently a member of the Senate of Canada. Last, but certainly not least, he was probably the founder of the Liberal Party as we know it now in Canada.

You will recall, sir, that it was in 1964 the government announced, in the Speech from the Throne of that session, that we proposed to honour the memory of great Canadians in a formal way. This ceremony today is in continuation of that policy.

We celebrated and marked the 150th anniversary of the birth of Sir John A. Macdonald, who was of course a contemporary of Mr. Brown and probably his greatest political antagonist. On every member's desk has been placed this morning a bronze medallion which was struck by the government in honour of this event, and there is also a newspaper on everyone's desk which was published by the George Brown College of Applied Arts and Technology.

I would offer my congratulations to the student body. There are representatives of the student body here this morning and it will be present when we meet outside in a few minutes. I think this newspaper, plus the medallion and programme, which will be distributed when we go outside, will constitute, in the years that lie ahead, a very interesting and very living souvenir of this occasion.

Now as part of what we have done here to honour Mr. Brown and to mark this occasion we announced that we would present a George Brown collection of Canadiana to the University of Edinburgh, in the city in which Mr. Brown was born. This was done several weeks ago by the Minister of Education. We arranged, as the Minister has said, for lectures to be delivered in Edinburgh by Professor J. M. S. Careless, who was the biographer of Mr. Brown. This was done several weeks ago during the time the Minister was in Scotland. Professor Shepperson is here to deliver three George Brown memorial lectures to the University of Toronto. He has delivered two of them and the third will be delivered tonight.

It was, as hon. members will recall, at the instigation of the Minister of Education and University Affairs that the college of applied arts and technology recently created in Toronto was named after Mr. Brown. At the instigation of the board of governors of that institution, firmly supported by the students, the city of Toronto has by proclamation declared this week George Brown Week in Toronto. A large number of special activities began on Monday of this week and have been carried on throughout the whole week. So it has been a week of celebration and activity to honour the memory of this great Canadian.

Now, sir, I would also like to point out, finally, that we will, as a government, present a two-volume biography of Mr. Brown to some 500 secondary school students throughout the province; and we have, as well, established a George Brown graduate fellowship in journalism so that Mr. Brown's name will live on in the future and, we hope, with even more recognition than it has in the past.

Earlier this morning a service was held at the Necropolis where Mr. Brown, Mrs. Brown and his parents are buried, and shortly we will go outside for final ceremonies to mark the occasion.

Mr. Brown was born in 1818 in Alloa, near Edinburgh, and came to North America in 1838. He went originally to New York, where he engaged in various business ventures, and came to Toronto in 1843.

Shortly after his arrival, according to his biographers, he decided that this country, which he had adopted, required what he called "a purely political paper," and thus was born The Globe. It is interesting to go back into the history of this country and see how many newspapers did have their origin in the desire to have an organ to promote a certain political philosophy.

He founded The Globe in 1844 — he was then only 26 years of age — and he developed it into a very powerful organ of opinion indeed. Last year, as we were celebrating the 100th anniversary of Confederation, we did a lot of reading of old newspapers, and the early editions of that paper make very interesting reading.

Mr. Brown's grandson, who is here, informs me that Mr. Brown really was not personally terribly attracted to political life; but his involvement in political affairs, through his paper and the positions he took there, almost forced him to participate actively. He was very active in politics in Canada and in Ontario in the 1840's, '50's and '60's.

He entered Parliament in 1851. He represented several constituencies in Toronto, and some west of here, during the period. He was in the government some 20 years.

I think politics were perhaps more bitterly fought in those days than it is now. Reading those old papers one becomes aware of the personal animosities which were brought out into the open. If they exist today I think we manage to conceal them, but in those days there was no concealment of the personal animosities that men felt for one another. There were battles over ideas and ideals and parties and personalities; and of course George Brown and John A. Macdonald, on opposite sides of the political fence, were very bitter enemies indeed.

However the great thing about Brown, and the thing for which we remember him most, was that at the most critical and at the most bitter period of this whole affair, he rose above his personal position and set aside his differences with Macdonald in order to resolve what had become a true governmental impasse. Canada was very deeply divided and simply not functioning under The Act of Union, and this resulted in the whole series of short-lived and pretty ineffective governments. There were tensions and prejudices of course, that were very deep; and it was in this atmosphere that Brown took the initiative and set aside his personal position for the good of Canada. I would say his initiative at that time probably opened the road to Confederation and without it, had he not acted as he did, had he not been able to control his personal feelings for the good of the total country, perhaps we would not have the Canada we enjoy today.

I suppose there have been few moments more dramatic in our history than when this reconciliation took place.

John A. Macdonald stood in the centre of the Assembly room of Parliament on June 11, 1864, to give meaning to the truce, and Macdonald spoke first. He was followed by Brown who praised Macdonald and his followers for their approach to the question of Confederation and expressed the hope that the members too would approach the idea of Confederation with but one desire, to consider it in the interests of both sections of the province of Canada and to find a settlement of the difficulties—the political and governmental difficulties of that day.

In reading Brown's life you become aware that he had great respect for the parliamentary system. During the debates leading to Confederation he expressed his views on many occasions, and always in terms to stress they were endeavouring to adjust, harmoniously and with calm discussion, greater difficulties than had plunged other countries into the horrors of civil wars.

Mr. Brown and Mr. Macdonald, and those other Fathers of Confederation, brought together, really, what were scattered, lonely and widespread settlements in British North America. I think that the events of last year, and subsequent events relating to constitutional matters, can only lead one to the conclusion that these men really created something much greater than even they anticipated.

The great lesson we have to learn from those very stormy days of the 1860's preceding Confederation, is that in a country such as ours—which has such diversities in people, geography, area and living conditions—open dissent and conflict of opinion are both necessary and inevitable.

One of our leading educators pointed out not long ago, and I quote his words:

Under the right circumstances dissent becomes a creative, social force, and problem solving can be a constructive national experience lifting a society to new heights of achievement.

I do not think we should back away from the dissent and arguments of our own period in history, because out of it will be hammered a better and proper solution for problems we face. This of course was the approach taken by these men in the '60s. They fought mightily and eventually they sat down together to do the creative work, after the fighting had achieved as much as it could achieve in the production of new ideas, new attitudes after a very close examination of all the alternatives that were available.

We remember Brown for the great wisdom and foresight that he showed in knowing when to put aside partisan fighting and unite all efforts to the one common goal.

It seems somewhat ironic that a man who contributed so much to his country should have died what was really a needless death. He died from an infection resulting from a gunshot wound in the leg inflicted by a disgruntled former employee.

Now sir I would make one more point, which is that it is somewhat significant that we are paying tribute to George Brown in 1968 because this year is being observed by the United Nations and member countries as the International Year for Human Rights. When we look at this man's record, apart from politics and government, we find that he was one of the outstanding supporters of the American abolitionist movement in the 1850s, along with Sir Oliver Mowat, another very great Canadian whom we will honour in due course, and another great Liberal. Mowat and Brown helped to establish the Anti-Slavery Society of Canada.

Brown was very outspoken in his feelings about slavery. He used his paper to promote anti-slavery. He described his attitude towards slavery in very simple terms. He said: "It is a question of humanity".

I think we must think of him too in terms of that side of his character and what he did in the whole area of abolishing slavery.

So in a formal way, on the 150th anniversary of his birth, I should like to express the gratitude of the people of Ontario today for what we have and what we are able to enjoy because of the efforts of this man.

There was a tribute expressed at the time of his death, which I might place in the record of this House this morning:

No country is more indebted to its leading statesman than Canada is to George Brown.

This is not the place to discuss party questions in a party spirit, but it is a place to point to the life and labours of one of whom our country may well feel proud. He has done the work of a giant. His name and the mighty deeds he wrought for Canada are his grandest monument.

Mr. Speaker, may we in our time be worthy of the country and of the attitudes that were shown by this man and his colleagues of those days in creating what we are privileged to enjoy today.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am not used to hearing the Premier eulogizing Liberals and when he moved from George Brown to Oliver Mowat I thought for a moment he would have to begin counting on the fingers of his other hand.

Today, of course, is a specially important day for those of us representing Liberal principles and the Liberal Party in this House, since the Premier has correctly stated that we consider George Brown the founder of our party, and certainly a hero in the development of public life in the province.

I would agree also with the Premier when he points out that George Brown took a major role in the events leading up to Confederation. It was his selfless decision to co-operate with John A. Macdonald, rather than continuing the rivalry that had been a part of public life for so long in Canada that really caused the change in spirit that made Confederation possible.

I know you will recall, sir that the resolution for the committee to examine the possibilities for Confederation had been moved by Brown, and he in fact was chairman of the committee of the House that had investigated it. It was this committee's report, put before the House and agreed upon by Macdonald and Brown, which the Premier has recounted, that led to the great events that founded our nation.

I hope all visitors to the House, and others who perhaps have not done so recently, will take the opportunity to look at the outstanding portrait of George Brown that is in the hall just outside this Chamber. It is surely one of the finest in existence; and it shows him to be a very handsome man indeed, with a taste in style, particularly his haircut, which would fit in very much with modern fashion.

I was talking to the Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Grossman) just before the House began and he was saying that he was thinking of allowing his sideburns to grow in that fashion which I would say are most distinguished.

It was just, I think, two years ago, on examining the picture as I sometimes do when coming into the House that I found a hole punched in it and I thought perhaps one of the reactionary Progressive Conservatives, in thinking about those early days, had poked the tip of his umbrella through it. But I see that it was promptly and effectively repaired, because it is certainly one of the treasures we have in the halls of this particular building.

The Premier also has referred to the rivalry between John A. Macdonald and George Brown, which was a very real thing. It was not the sort of rivalry and animosity that was put aside when they left the House or when they left the platforms of public debate. I think it had a serious effect on the lives of both of them; and certainly on their parties and to some extent the course of public events in the united provinces of Canada before 1867. It was a great thing indeed that the two men were able to put aside this personal animosity, although it often was just below the surface, even during the period of Confederation negotiations.

George Brown did climb to the top of the pile on one occasion and he probably has the distinction of being the Prime Minister in our history, in the general sense, who occupied office for the shortest time of all. Somehow or other he was always just one down to John A. Macdonald.

Macdonald of course had great influence with the majority of the members of the House and particularly those who had no political affiliation, whom Macdonald called "loose fish"; and he seemed to have a great aptitude for netting those loose fish on important votes. But there was one occasion in 1858 when his aptitude let him down. It was on a resolution that would provide for a fixed capital of the united provinces. In order to keep all sections of the country calm, John A. Macdonald had up until that time decreed that the capital would move on occasion from Kingston to Montreal and sometimes to Quebec City. We can think of the problems that members would experience in travelling to Quebec City on the one hand, or for the French members in coming to Kingston on the other. John A. Macdonald found what I would think would be a rather typical solution to this problem when he decided they had to have a fixed capital. Since he could not safely nor successfully solve the problem politically, he decided he would send a petition to the Queen herself to make the decision.

I have no doubt that he wrote her a private letter at the same time expressing his views, but when this resolution to put the problem to the Crown, to the sovereign, for solution was put before the House, George Brown quite properly opposed it. During the debate which followed, which was not too long, he was successful in having the House agree with his resolution that it should be decided by the members themselves. In fact the government was defeated on the resolution and Brown, being a worthy politician, immediately jumped to his feet and moved the adjournment of Parliament.

This, I suppose, is the classic way that the leader of the Opposition hammers the nail home once the government has been defeated in the House. It is a lesson, I suppose, that has stood us in good stead. I think a similar attempt was carried out in this House in 1944 or '45, and it might well have been the procedure in the House of Commons a few months ago.

The point is, however, that John A. Macdonald was sustained in defeating the motion to adjourn, and after the House rose that day Macdonald, being a very clever politician, an intelligent man and an able public servant, thought the situation over and in fact decided he would tender his resignation to the governor, even though he had been supported in the final motion of the day. The governor, of course, had no recourse but to select the leader of the Opposition to form a new administration, since the Prime Minister did not ask for dissolution.

It is interesting to note that in the communication from the governor to George Brown, he explicitly said that the governor's invitation to form a new administration did not carry with it any commitment that if there were difficulties subsequently the new Prime Minister would have the right to a dissolution.

So George Brown, who had been fighting in Opposition for so many years, decided that he would accept the invitation. He himself as Prime Minister, and his very small Cabinet, were sworn into office the Saturday or Sunday following the defeat in the Legislature on Friday. The following Monday the new administration was defeated in the House, before the Prime Minister and his Cabinet had an opportunity to occupy their seats, since the rules in those days, of course, required the Prime Minister to resign and stand for re-election before he accepted the extra emolument.

This is a rather unfortunate situation. It is referred to by historians as the double shuffle. Conservatives normally think of it as an occasion where John A. Macdonald put it over on George Brown once more; and the Liberals tend to think of the honest, straightforward approach to public affairs that was so characteristic of George Brown's career.

I do want to say something more specific about George Brown the man. The Premier has already indicated the tragic end of his life. He did experience many difficulties, although he was extremely successful in business and as an author, publisher and editor. Certainly in many ways he was successful in politics although his letters to his wife—many of the most interesting ones were published in today's Globe and Mail—are full of the feeling shared by some politicians now that surely there is a life that is better than the one that binds the politician to public affairs day and night.

It has been indicated by some historians that it was the moderation of the political fire in his belly that was responsible for his ability to co-operate with John A Macdonald. This moderation can be traced to the fact that fairly late in life he met a Scottish girl and married her, and that he became so involved and appreciative of family life and the finer things of life, that perhaps his partisan stands were moderated somewhat.

He is normally considered not only a citizen of Canada, but one of the main citizens of Toronto in those days. However I think it should be remembered that he was also very much a citizen of the rural part of this province. His paper, the Toronto Globe, was referred to as the "Scotchman's Bible," before people became so careful about the pronunciation of the word "Scotsman". Happening to come from the township of Dumfries myself I can assure hon. members that he has many countrymen of similar views in my part of the world.

As a matter of fact he was the representative for North Oxford, a part of which I represent at this time, as well as a part of the county of Haldimand, from one time to another.

He also was most interested in the agricultural development of Ontario. He carved from the river flats near Brantford, a famous thousand-acre tract, still called Bow Park Farm, which he established as a model farm and to which experts from all over the world came to buy stock and to examine the new methods of agriculture that he fostered at that time. When I drive in from my own farm in that area day by day to Toronto I sometimes think of the many trips that he must have taken from the farm in Brantford to his responsibilities here in Toronto.

As a matter of fact, I was discussing this at the unveiling of a plaque to George Brown at Bow Park Farm this summer and a farmer who happened to be the reeve of Brantford township came up to me and showed me an old coin which had been passed to him by his father, and so on down the line, which had been given to one of the farmer's families years ago when he overtook George Brown on the way to the railway station in a rush trip down to Parliament. One of the horses in the team had dropped dead in its traces and Hon. Mr. Brown was marooned by the side of the road. The farmer had given him a lift into the station and George Brown had insisted on giving him some coins in payment and these coins have been passed down in the family ever since.

So while we think of George Brown as a great industrialist, a wealthy man, a man who appreciated the fine things of family life, and a politician in many ways par excellence, because his political ability was tempered by the spirit of co-operation to which the Premier has already referred, we must never forget that his associations were with the rural community in Ontario as well and these were much appreciated and are still remembered.

Assessing his career, there is no doubt that he was the major influence in making, let us say one of the major influences, in making possible Canadian Confederation. He lived a full and strenuous life; happily sometimes, honestly always. In George Brown and his career we recognize a good man and a great Canadian.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, today we honour the memory of a man who in a very real sense can be described as the first Father of Confederation.

He conceived the idea. Ten years before its ultimate achievement, the dream of bringing together the British colonies of North America into one nation captured his imagination and he promoted that dream when most people, including Sir John A. Macdonald, were unconvinced or even opposed.

Events conspired to support him in his promotion. The politics of the United Canadas were increasingly deadlocked. The British colonies were threatened by the American republic, aroused by its own civil war. As the 1860's wore on, many came to accept George Brown's dream as the only solution to the political impasse at home and to the external threat from abroad.

Men like Sir John A. Macdonald were won over to his view and with his consummate skills, Sir John A., became the architect of its realization. It is one of those episodes of our history, Mr. Speaker, that was high political drama. As the Prime Minister has indicated, two men of bitter political animosities buried their differences and their act of statesmanship did much to galvanize the divided peoples and pave the way for the creation of a new nation.

Vu dans la perspective de plus de cent ans, il y a un aspect de la carrière de George Brown qui mérite un nouvel examen.

Quand le Canada Uni fut établi en 1841, le Canada Est avait une plus grande population que le Canada Ouest. Mais avec le passage des années ce fut le Canada Ouest qui devint le plus peuplé des deux. George Brown préconisait la "représentation par population", un mouvement politique qui recherchait une plus grande représentation politique pour l'Ontario.

Il était inévitable que la poursuite ardente d'une telle cause gagnerait pour George Brown la réputation d'être anti-canadien français. Et il est certain que George Brown n'est pas aujourd'hui considéré comme héros du Canada français.

Mais je voudrais suggérer, Monsieur l'Orateur, qu'en réalité George Brown n'était pas anti-français. Le principe qu'il soutenait était un principe fondamental de la démocratie.

Peut-être que la meilleure preuve de son attitude envers le Canada français se trouve dans le fait qu'il appuyait avec tenacité le concept d'union fédérale qui permettrait aux Canadiens français au Québec et aux Canadiens anglais en Ontario d'être maîtres chez eux en formant une nation nouvelle et unie.

Au cours des premiers débats de la Confédération, Sir John A. Macdonald aborda l'idée d'un état unitaire, ce qui aurait certainement produit l'assimilation du Canada français dans une population croissante anglaise. Grâce à sa lutte implacable en faveur d'union fédérale, George Brown remporta la victoire qui devait créer les conditions dans lesquelles le Canada français pourrait survivre.

Many things have been said this morning, Mr. Speaker, about George Brown, and I shall not repeat them. The flavour of the man's ideas and the substance of those ideas, it always seemed to me, can best be gotten in that magnificent speech of his during the Confederation debates, perhaps the most significant political speech in Canadian political history. I would like to quote a few brief passages from that speech, Mr. Speaker.

I know it is rather impossible to recapture the original flavour. May I remind members of the House that it was delivered in the Parliament buildings in Quebec City in February of 1864. And this is the account of it from the official biographer, or the most definitive biographer, J. M. S. Careless.

He stood in his place at the forefront of the government benches and he looked out at the hushed assembly of the two Canadas, the packed shadowy galleries beyond, and beyond again the snows of Quebec and the iron-hard St. Lawrence. "The scene presented by this chamber at this moment," he said with quiet emotion, "I venture to affirm has few parallels in history. One hundred years have passed away since these provinces became by conquest part of the British Empire. I speak in no boastful spirit—I desire not for a moment to excite a painful thought. What was then the fortunes of war of the brave French nation might have been ours on that well fought field.

"I recall those olden times merely to mark the fact that here sit today the descendants of the victors and the vanquished in the fight of 1759 with all of the differences of language and religion, civil law and social habit, nearly as distinctly marked as they were a century ago. Here we sit today, seeking amicably to find a remedy for the constitutional evils and injustices complained of—by the vanquished?—No, but complained of by the conquerors!

"Here sit the representatives of the British population claiming justice, only justice; and here sit the representatives of the French population discussing, in the French tongue, whether we shall have it.

"One hundred years have passed away since the conquest of Quebec, but here sit the children of the victor and the vanquished, all avowing hearty attachment to the British Crown, all earnestly deliberating how we shall best extend the blessings of British institutions, how a great people may be established on this continent in close connection with Great Britain. Where in the pages of history shall we find a parallel for this?

"Look at the map," he urged. There was Newfoundland the size of Portugal; Nova Scotia as big as Greece; New Brunswick as big as Switzerland and Denmark combined; here, Lower Canada as large as France; Upper Canada larger than the British Isles; and beyond British Columbia equal to the Austrian Empire in extent—and the Northwest greater than the whole European realm of Russia.

"The bold scheme in your hands is nothing else than to gather all these countries into one—to establish a government that will seek to turn the tide of European emigration into this northern half of the American continent—that will strive to develop its great natural resources—and that will endeavour to maintain liberty and justice and Christianity throughout the land."

And he went on, Mr. Speaker, saying to people that if they rejected the Quebec resolutions they had the obligation not only to present alternatives, but alternatives that were acceptable. He built his case with what one chronicler of the times described as a "prodigious power". And he came to the close, as Careless says,

In deeper, quieter tones once more he appealed for fair consideration. "Let not hon. gentlemen approach this measure as a sharp critic deals with an abstract question striving to point out blemishes and display his ingenuity, but let us approach it as men having but one consideration before us; the establishment of the future peace and prosperity of our country."

And then came the peroration:—"It may be that some among us will live to see the day when a great and powerful people may have grown up on these lands and when one united government under the British flag shall extend from shore to shore. But who would desire to see that day if he could not recall with satisfaction the part he took in the discussion.

"I have done," he ended simply, "I leave the subject to the conscientious judgment of the House."

A speech, Mr. Speaker, which provoked thunderous applause; applause, I suggest, which is echoed down through the years and which has been shared in by every Canadian who has read it and drawn inspiration from it.

One of the leading Quebec papers said that it was the best of the ministerial speeches and it added:

Si nous étions haut-canadien, nous élèverions une statue de bronze à ce redoutable politicien.

If we were Upper Canadian we would raise a statue of bronze to this redoubtable politician.

Well Mr. Speaker, we have raised a statue of bronze. This morning we are going out to lay a wreath at its base—to commemorate the life of a man who was a giant in his day, who caught the original vision of this nation and did so much to translate that vision into a reality which we have inherited.

As we strive to reshape confederation today, may we be worthy of those who first created it.

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 11.00 o'clock, a.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

---

MONDAY, DECEMBER 2, 1968

The House met at 2.30 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: Today we have with us in the galleries students from several schools. In the east gallery from the T. L. Kennedy Collegiate Institute in Cooksville and Emery Junior High School in Weston; and in the west gallery from Macville Public School in Bolton.

Petitions.

Presenting reports.

Hon. R. S. Welch (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present to the House the annual report of the Hydro Electric Power Commission of Ontario 1967.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Introduction of bills.

GOVERNING BODIES OF UNIVERSITIES

Mr. T. Reid (Scarborough East) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to provide for the governing bodies of universities.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, the bill reconstructs the governing bodies of universities, replacing boards of governors and senates with one governing council having democratic representation of undergraduate and post-graduate students, faculty members, alumni, who would include the public community, and the administrative staff and including other appointed and ex-officio members representing governmental links.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose is to defuse the explosion building up on a university campus by instituting some reforms now.

THE OPHTHALMIC DISPENSERS ACT, 1960-1961

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Ophthalmic Dispensers Act, 1960-1961.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to prevent the sale of glasses in Ontario which have flammable frames.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister.

Will the Premier take steps to see that the standing committees of the House will be convened within the next few days so that the members of the committees will have an opportunity to indicate to the chairman their views on the work that their committees should undertake, besides simply the reviewing of bills, and that such decisions on the programme of work for the individual committees that are arrived at can be set in motion?

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Clerk of the House is in the process of organizing the committees and I assume they will all be set up within the next few days.

I would just like to point out that legislation and the way we deal with it in this House is the main purpose of being here, and of course this must be the primary function of the committees. There is no reason why these committees cannot do in their wisdom whatever they decide when there is no legislation before them.

The private bills committee will be dealing with private bills and the legal bills committee will be dealing with The Expropriations Act. Those two committees will take quite a few of the members; but in any event the committees will be organized and ready to function, I would think within a week.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Tourism and Information.

1. Has the Ontario Heritage Foundation, whose purpose it is to protect historic buildings in our province, taken any steps to purchase Lambton Lodge, on Beverley Street, the home of George Brown; and Earnscliffe in Ottawa, the home of Sir John A. Macdonald?

2. Since the George Brown home is located in close proximity to the George Brown

College, has any thought been given to purchasing this fine property so that it can be preserved and developed to serve the needs of that growing institution?

Hon. J. A. C. Auld (Minister of Tourism and Information): Mr. Speaker, in connection with the first question I would just explain to the leader of the Opposition that the George Brown house on Beverley Street is part of a larger property which is presently owned by the Metropolitan Toronto corporation and is leased to the retarded children's association for one dollar a year.

The property—that is the original Brown house and the land on which it originally stood—is one part of this entire property. There were some additions made to it over the years. We have been having discussions with Metropolitan Toronto at this point, on an informal basis, about the acquisition of this property and the possible leasing of it again to the retarded children's association until they find other suitable quarters.

There is a problem here of just how much property would be acquired, what would be done with the excess in the future and so on. I have also discussed this with the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, who has indicated to the heritage foundation and to the province that the federal government would be prepared to join with the province in acquisitions of properties of national historic importance.

As far as Earncliffe is concerned, the Ontario Heritage Foundation has not been involved in its acquisition. I understand it is presently the residence and office of the British High Commissioner, although there were several inquiries made about that several years ago.

If we are able to acquire this property—if the funds are available—the chances are, I would expect from what the Ontario Heritage Foundation has indicated, that it would be acquired and then leased, as I said, to the Retarded Children's Association but preserved so that at some time it might be used for some other purpose more associated with the memory and the affairs of the Hon. George Brown.

I hope that answers the questions of the leader of the Opposition. There are, as he can understand, some problems in these things where a number of jurisdictions are involved.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, if I might just ask a supplementary question. Is the Minister aware through communications which the Ontario Heritage Foundation might have had with Metropolitan Toronto that this is, in fact, a site which would be extremely valuable for razing and replacing with high-rise apartments? I have heard it indicated that it is within the realm of possibility that this particular property might be put to that use. It would certainly be a shame if the heritage foundation lost an opportunity to acquire it and let it go, thinking that because it was presently owned by Metropolitan Toronto it was going to be upgraded as an historic site.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I am not aware that any specific approach has been made to Metro to put it up for sale, but I think I can assure the leader of the Opposition that we are cognizant of its importance—that the heritage foundation is—and I would doubt that Metro would do anything without letting us know because they have been aware for some time of our interest.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I have two questions for the Minister of Energy and Resources Management, one remaining from last week when the Minister was absent. If I might put them he might answer them all at one time since they have to do with Ontario Hydro.

1. What are the projected electrical energy requirements for Ontario in December, and can the Minister assure the House that all electrical commitments and requests will be met over the month of December?

2. What will be the effect of the protracted strike of Consolidated Edison workers on power-sharing arrangements between Ontario Hydro and the Niagara Mohawk Power Corporation if the North East Power Co-ordinating Council directs either Ontario Hydro or Mohawk-generated power into Westchester county or New York City?

3. In what circumstances may Hydro decline to supply power to the international grid?

4. With supervisory rather than technical personnel control in New York City, is there any possibility of a repetition of a widespread blackout of November 9, 1965; is there still a possibility of equipment damage due to load demands from New York State?

5. Under what authority does Ontario Hydro enter into international agreement and understanding?

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the first question, No. 188, the first part: It is anticipated that the peak requirement for electrical energy for the total Ontario system of Ontario Hydro will be approximately 10 million kilowatts in December.

The second part: No one can guarantee an uninterrupted supply of energy at any time. Nevertheless, barring abnormal contingencies, Ontario Hydro expects to be able to meet its commitments.

On the second question, question No. 207, the first part: The North-East Power Coordinating Council is a voluntary association and has no authority to direct its members to allocate power in any way. Hydro may decline to supply power to any interconnected system under any circumstances which make such action desirable from its viewpoint.

The second part of that question: Hydro has no reason to believe that operation of the Consolidated Edison's system by supervisory personnel will increase the possibility of a wide-spread blackout such as that of November 9, 1965. Ontario Hydro cannot foresee any reason why equipment on its system should be damaged by New York load demands.

The third part of the question: Ontario Hydro enters into international agreements and understandings relating to the exchange of power and energy under the authority granted by the Lieutenant Governor of Ontario in Council, the National Energy Board of Canada, and in some respects the International Joint Commission.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I might ask a supplementary question of the Minister: Has a warning gone out from Ontario Hydro, similar to that which was sent out last year, indicating that the peak demands over December, which are usually the highest for the year, might possibly cause some special difficulties in the meeting of these requirements?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, the answer is yes!

Mr. Nixon: I would like to follow that up with a further question of the Minister. Am I right in assuming, Mr. Speaker, that the situation is very similar to what it was at this time a year ago?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether I can answer that question. I think that at one time it was felt there would be ample power this year, but due to technical problems in one of our plants, which they hope will be remedied, perhaps this week—but if not we could have a problem for a short time.

Mr. Nixon: Could the Minister tell us which plant that is?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, I understand that it is one unit at Lakeview and has to do with broken blades in a steam turbine.

Mr. Nixon: I have a question, Mr. Speaker, for the Minister of Health. Has the Minister of Health received representation from the township of Osgoode concerning air pollution; and if so what action is the Minister planning to take in the township of Osgoode and the county of Carleton?

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Speaker, the only communication we had from the township of Osgoode concerning possible air pollution had to do with road dust. Since the council was complaining and since we felt that they had responsibility to keep road dust down, they could deal with their own problem, and they were so advised.

Mr. Nixon: Might I ask the Minister, Mr. Speaker, if he sent no one down there from the air pollution control branch?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Yorkview has a question for the Minister of Trade and Development which he might place in view of the fact the Minister must leave shortly.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Trade and Development: In the land acquisition by the Ontario Housing Corporation in Waterloo county, how many acres were acquired from: one, Renmore Development Limited; and two, McDonald Sutherland Industries Limited?

What legal firm or firms acted for the Ontario Housing Corporation in these transactions?

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Trade and Development): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first question is 345.8 acres; and the answer to the second part is 2,432.

The legal firm which acted for the Ontario Housing Corporation on these transactions was McGibbon, Harper and Haney, 45 Erb Street East, Waterloo, Ontario.

Mr. Speaker: Today I would propose to have the questions answered by Ministries in order of precedence. In the last question period last week we did it by members, and until we have a decision on how to do it, I propose to alternate.

The hon. member for Sudbury East has a question from last Thursday for the Minister of Health.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): I have a question for the Minister of Health: Has the Minister received any complaints from workers at the Fecunis mill to the effect that dead fish have been removed on several occasions from the water intake pipe and that the water is almost undrinkable?

Is the Minister aware of the company's attitude in this matter, which was expressed in a letter to the union?

The company appreciates that there is somewhat of a problem with the taste of the Fecunis water; however any change in the present water system would necessitate a very considerable expenditure.

What action will the Minister take to rectify this matter?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, I have not had any such communication.

Mr. Martel: A supplementary question: Would the Minister then accept a sample of this water and have it analyzed to determine what the problems are and have this matter rectified?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I would suggest that the community likely knows where the water sample should go, sir. Our labs are always ready to deal with those things as they are referred to them.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville has a question from last week.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): In view of the recent announcement by the Ford Motor Company indicating that the company intends to increase its industrial activity by a very extensive expansion of production in Windsor, would the Minister of Health inform the House whether there have been consultations with the company to determine the effect of such expansion on air pollution in the Windsor area? If so, would he tell the House whether plans have been submitted by the Ford Motor Company and approved by him to abate the danger of a substantial increase in pollution?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, we have just opened our office in the Windsor-Essex area and I expect the regulation will be passed this week taking over responsibility for air pollution control in that area.

We have had no formal application from the Ford Motor Company so far, but we have been in consultation with them and have indicated to them what will be required of them before they can expand the plant.

Mr. B. Newman: Thank you.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Humber.

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have a number of questions to ask of the hon. Minister. First, has the Joe Gawa Motel at Gravenhurst been purchased as a nursing home?

If so, is that building satisfactory for such a home? Is it a satisfactory location? What was the cost of purchase per square foot? What is the cost of changes required to convert into a nursing home?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, the answer to one, two and three is "yes".

The answer to four and five is that this is a private transaction and I have no idea whatsoever of the cost involved, we have nothing to do with that.

Mr. Ben: I have another series of questions.

Does the Minister agree with the definition of "death" which was released by the Canadian Medical Association on Thursday, November 28, 1968?

Have there been any discussions with federal officials regarding the definition of death?

Does the Minister agree with the Canadian Medical Association that in the case of a transplant operation where death occurs that two physicians, independent of the transplant team, must determine death?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, the definition of "death" is very much to the fore at the present time. It is a combined medical and legal question and it is being discussed with medical and legal advisors. Until we have some guidance from our advisors in these fields, no discussion will be had with the federal government. When we have such advice, then we will enter into discussions with our federal counterparts.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): You are dead when you are dead!

Mr. Ben: Will the Minister accept a supplementary question?

In view of the Minister's statement, to which I subscribe, should the Canadian Medical Association be making the statements they did in the press over the weekend pertaining to their definition of death?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, I can think of no more appropriate body to offer public definition of "death", since one's death certificate can be signed only by a qualified physician. I can think of no body better qualified to define "death" than are my colleagues in the profession.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): This government is more qualified to define death.

Mr. Ben: Well why wait for a legal opinion if the Minister considers them to be the qualified body to make the definition?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member wants to become a little facetious and enter into a discussion.

We all know the reason for a new or modern or changed definition of death. I think every doctor knows when his patient is dead and yet, in the light of things that are transpiring today in medical science, I think it is quite necessary that this whole question be reviewed; if for no other reason than for academic interests.

Mr. Ben: How about that woman they revived at the coroner's office?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Downsview.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Speaker, I have two questions for the Minister of Health.

Would the Minister provide this House with details of the investigation by his department into the circumstances surrounding the death of Whitby Psychiatric Hospital patient George Manning?

Secondly, what are the regulations of the Whitby Psychiatric Hospital concerning patients' smoking?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, I have learned this morning that an inquest is likely to be ordered into his death, and therefore it would be quite inappropriate for me to comment upon the results of the department's investigation.

The rules in respect of smoking at Whitby Psychiatric Hospital are: Smoking permitted only in designated areas. Patients are not permitted to smoke in bed and the patients are not permitted to carry matches.

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Health.

Will the Minister in conjunction with the Minister of Social and Family Services (Mr. Yaremko) recommend to the Cabinet that Essex county be assisted in building a rest home or another home for the aged to alleviate the extreme shortage of facilities for senior citizens needing some form of bed care not available to them in local hospitals in the county?

Part two, would the Minister agree that if rest homes were available the need for continued expansion of our hospitals may be avoided to some extent?

I have another question and probably he could take it at the same time.

Has the Minister considered the matter of paying 100 per cent of Ontario Medical Association fees through OMSIP in order to avoid an increase in fees as announced recently by the Ontario Medical Association?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker in answer to the hon. member's first question: My department has nothing to do with the provision or approval of domiciliary care facilities, so I think this question should rightfully be placed with the Minister of Social and Family Services.

In respect to question 192: Yes, I have considered this possibility, but I do not think that it should naturally follow that the action anticipated by the hon. member would be followed by the Ontario Medical Association.

Mr. Ruston: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the Minister believe that the medical profession is being fair in accepting 90 per cent of their rates for some of their services while at the same time accepting 100 per cent from other payees?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, I did not get the hon. member's question. Would he like to ask it again?

Mr. Ruston: Does the Minister believe the medical profession is being fair in accepting 90 per cent of their rates for some of their services while—at the same time—accepting 100 per cent from other sources?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, I am neither qualified nor permitted to answer for the Ontario Medical Association.

Mr. Speaker: I still have questions to be asked of the Minister of Health. The member for Humber has a question of the Minister of Social and Family Services.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Speaker, does the Minister of Social and Family Services rate higher in priority than the Minister of Education (Mr. Davis)?

Mr. Speaker: Yes, indeed. If you would consult the table of precedence in the Executive Council.

Mr. Ben: What is the parental cost of maintaining a child under the children's aid society? How many children from the Ontario housing complex at Thistle town have become wards of the children's aid society during the past two years?

Hon. J. Yaremko (Minister of Social and Family Services): Mr. Speaker, $1,780; and 49.

Mr. Ben: Forty-nine cents?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: No, that is 49 children. Again, $1,780 even; and 49 children.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Yes?

Mr. Ben: Does the Minister know how many of the 49 are still wards of the children's aid society?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I will have to check into it. That is the figure for the past two years.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Waterloo North has a question for the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs.

Mr. E. R. Good (Waterloo North): A question, Mr. Speaker, for the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs: What was the total cost to the province of Ontario for the consumer affairs conference held at the Coronet Motel, Kitchener, early this November?

Secondly, why was no registration fee charged to help defray the cost of dinner and entertainment?

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the total cost to the province of the consumer affairs conference held at the Coronet Motel in Kitchener on November 12 to 13, was approximately $4,270.

In order to answer the second part of the question, Mr. Speaker, it is necessary to elaborate briefly on the intent of the conferences. The programme, which began early this year with a conference at the Lakehead and has included others at Woodstock, North Bay and Kingston—prior to the most recent and largest at Kitchener—has a bilateral intent.

In the department we are, on the one hand, seeking to disseminate and distribute information to a cross-section of the buying and selling public, and at the same time we wish to accumulate as much information for our own purposes as possible from those who attend. Simply put, we recognize that the entire area of consumer affairs has become more complex and diverse in the past few years than at any time in our history, and though we have had consumer-oriented legislation in Ontario dating back to the early 1930s, much of our consumer law is of recent vintage.

It is because we accept that the public cannot always be expected to be aware of every change that happens and because consumer legislation affects all of our citizens that we embarked on a programme to try to educate as many people as possible.

When we went to Kitchener, as at the other centres mentioned, our aim was to tell our story and at the same time listen and learn from those present.

In effect, we said: Here is our programme. We want you to know about it. We hope you will carry its content back to your neighbours and organizations. We hope also that you will tell us your views and suggestions with respect to where we might improve our present approach.

Having invited people to take part, disseminate information and give their views, it was decided that we should, in fact, treat them as guests of the province for this purpose. That is why—as we have proceeded through this first phase of a pilot project to involve the people in our activities—we have not seen fit to charge a registration fee. Officials of The Department of Financial and Commercial Affairs are presently evaluating this first phase of our educational programme.

A decision based on this study will determine whether we should proceed with this approach, or if some other method should be adopted to make the public aware of its consumer rights and responsibilities under the laws of Ontario.

Mr. Good: Thank you.

Would the Minister answer a supplementary question? Does he have the figures of the number of people registered?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: It was approximately 500.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Yorkview had a question of the hon. Minister of Transport.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, in view of the charge by Ralph Nader that tires manufactured by six major tire firms failed to meet the standard set up by the United States government, what assurance have we that tires being sold in Ontario are meeting our standards?

Hon. I. Haskett (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, tire safety standards were first adopted in Ontario on February 13, 1967, and subsequently the new Canadian Standards Association performance specifications were made effective on July 1, 1968, after we had initiated arrangements with all other provinces that would allow them to take uniform and simultaneous action.

We have had no complaint under either set of standards that I am aware of. I might add, sir, that the Canadian Rubber Association is under direction to report immediately to me any such complaints that it may receive.

Mr. Young: Could I ask a supplementary question through you, Mr. Speaker? Is The Department of Transport doing any tests in respect to the standards of this province?

Hon. Mr. Haskett: Mr. Speaker, no.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Humber has a question from last week of the Minister of Education.

Mr. Ben: How many adults have completed the course in occult science at the Centennial College of Applied Arts and Technology in Scarborough?

Of the graduates, how many are specializing in alchemy, vampirism or lycanthropy; and how many are just plain witches?

Hon. W. G. Davis (Minister of Education): Mr. Speaker, one is prompted to ask whether this type of question comes under the guise of great public urgency and importance, but I shall answer it nonetheless.

I think it should be pointed out at the outset that I am really a little bit interested in part four of the question, but I will come to that when I finish answering the first three. That is logical, I guess, Mr. Speaker.

The course referred to is an extension course given in the evening by the college and as such is in response to local interest. In other words, the initiative came from outside the college itself and as a result is not subject to review by the board of regents, as are the courses for credit in the regular programme. I would think the hon. member might enquire from the president or the director of the extension programme of Centennial college regarding any of the details, the curriculum, and so on. I am really not in a position to help the hon. member with that.

I am informed that there are 70 presently enrolled; and this, of course, will come as a great surprise to the hon. member; there is a waiting list for the next session of this particular course.

I am a little concerned about section four of the question, Mr. Speaker, because it would indicate to me that the hon. member is suggesting that perhaps some of the 70 people who have taken an interest in this course are just plain witches. One might even observe that surely this is almost a contravention of the Ontario Human Rights Code to suggest that these people might be just plain witches who wished to study this course. I have to confess, Mr. Speaker, I have no personal interest in pursuing such a course, but I say with respect to the hon. member that I know the fourth part was asked perhaps in a facetious way. If it was meant seriously, it really is not becoming to the hon. member.

Mr. Ben: With your permission, Mr. Speaker, does the Minister of Education think it appropriate in the province of Ontario that a college run a course with public money called "occult science" and imply that it is a science?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member should be well aware that one of the great advantages of the community college programme, as we call it in this province, is for the colleges to respond to areas of interest; particularly when this is not subject to the review of the council of regents, that is when it is not for credit and where there are a number of people within the area who wish to pursue this particular study. Surely one of the responsibilities of the community college programme is to react to the interests of the citizens that the college serves.

Mr. Ben: The Minister is evading the question. I am not passing judgment on the merit of entertaining the citizens of Scarborough. Should the provincial money be spent on a project called "occult science" when the—

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. Minister has answered that question as he prefers to answer it. The hon. member for Sandwich-Riverside has a question for the Minister.

Mr. F. A. Burr (Sandwich-Riverside): Mr. Speaker, a question for the Minister of Education. How many copies of the report of the Ontario College of Art, September, 1968, were published? How many copies were distributed, and who printed the report?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, 5,000 copies were published; 3,000 copies have been distributed to date and the printer was Cape and Company Limited.

Mr. Burr: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary? Does the Minister not feel that if we had an auditor general in Ontario this publication might have been printed more cheaply at a saving to the taxpayers?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I do not know just what relevance an auditor general would have with respect to the cost. If the hon. member is suggesting that the cost of the publication itself was excessive, I would be prepared to discuss this with him during the estimates of the department. I do not know what relevance an auditor general per se would have with respect to this.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough East has a question?

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Education. When will the Minister of Education make available to the Legislature and the public the evaluation of educational television programmes by the Ontario Institute for Studies in Education which was to be done last year? Does this evaluation by OISE include evaluation of programme planning and programme production as well as the actual ETV programmes themselves? Who is in charge of this non-departmental evaluation at OISE?

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member for Peterborough would place his question, No. 200, which also has to do with ETV, and the Minister might answer them—

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I do not think that this question has any relationship with the working of the Ontario Institute for Studies in Education, but perhaps the Minister would like to answer both of these questions at the same time.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, to answer the question of the member for Scarborough East. The evaluation statistics which were collected by the institute in co-operation with the ETV branch have now been completed and are under study in the department. I am informed that the initial reaction has been most favourable and I would suggest that we will be in a position to make these available prior to—or certainly during—the discussion of these estimates of the department.

The answer to the second part of the question: "No." The study was really in the form of a survey of the recipients and the users of the programme. With respect to the personnel involved, I am endeavouring to obtain this information for the hon. member. There were several people at the institute involved and I shall endeavour to find out these people for him.

Mr. T. Reid: If the Minister allows, a short supplementary: Is an evaluation taking place outside The Department of Education on programme planning and on programme production?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member would have to be more specific on whether he is referring to an evaluation with respect to content or costs or what have you. I am not really sure what the hon. member is asking.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I will not prolong this. I am referring to the Minister's remarks on June 6, 1968 Hansard, pages 4039 and 4040 in which I asked the Minister if he was having an outside evaluation done on programme planning and programme production as well as the programmes themselves. At that time, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Education said that he would endeavour to make his own definitions of these and let me know what type of evaluation is taking place.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Yes, Mr. Speaker. As I recall the question, I was under the impression, and I think properly so, that we were relating this to the quality or content of the programme, which is really part of the institute's study.

On the question of, shall we say, cost and so on—this is not being studied by an outside agency at the moment, because we are still very much in the beginning stages with respect to our own productions.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I think we could continue this during the estimates.

I have a second question for the Minister of Education.

When will the report on pre-school programmes for culturally disadvantaged children prepared by Professor David W. Brison, of the Ontario Institute for Studies in Education, be made available to the members of the education committee of the Ontario Legislature?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, a preliminary report has in fact been published and is available now from the institute. I am also informed that these studies are continuing and that a second report will be available probably in the summer of 1969.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, the third question for the Minister: How many straps have been purchased by Ontario schools so far in 1968?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I guess I will not provoke any sort of discussion. I will just say, to the hon. member that this information is not available to the department. Our grant regulations do not incorporate within the operating or capital grant structure any allowance for the purchase of straps within the school system. We do not know.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, could I ask a supplementary: Does the Minister believe in corporal punishment?

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I fully recognized what the hon. member was trying to do and I say with respect, that surely the question period is not one for provocative questions leading to debate—

Mr. Speaker: Order, order!

Hon. Mr. Davis: Obviously it cannot be answered.

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member's supplementary question is quite out of order and therefore calls for no reply from the Minister.

The hon. member for Peterborough has the—

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, could I ask the Minister a supplementary?

Mr. Speaker: If it is supplementary to the original question, yes.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, do I understand correctly from the Minister's remarks that he accepts no responsibilities for schools in Ontario purchasing straps?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I would make it abundantly clear that the department does not provide finances whereby straps may or may not be purchased by the schools. I thought that even for the hon. member my answer was relatively clear and I have said nothing more or nothing less.

Mr. T. Reid: A lot less!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Peterborough.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): It is abundantly clear.

Mr. T. Reid: But the department supports corporal punishment.

Hon. Mr. Davis: That is not what I said.

Mr. Speaker: Order! Order!

Mr. T. Reid: How about Sutton District High School?

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member for Peterborough has the floor.

Mr. Sopha: Will you tell us; what did he say?

Mr. Pitman: Mr. Speaker, I would like to address my question to the—

Mr. Sopha: I couldn't understand whether he was for or against strapping.

Mr. Pitman: Once the debate between the Minister and the member for Sudbury is completed I would like to address my—

Mr. Sopha: Well, it is important to know.

Mr. Pitman: I would like to address my questions—

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Pitman: I would like to address my questions to the Minister of Education.

In view of the recent report released by META indicating that students, even in Metro Toronto, see only one to two hours of educational television a month, on the average, has the Minister made any decision in regard to making grants to schools for equipment, such as video tape recorders and coaxial cables, making it possible for schools to make efficient use of this medium?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I really thought I had answered this question a few days ago here in the House, but perhaps I did not. It was asked by one of the other hon. members when we were discussing the question of availability.

I indicated at that time that the question of grants for VTRs was presently under consideration. The problem that exists with VTRs is that there are four or five, perhaps more, being produced that are not necessarily compatible one with the other or with the other hardware that is available in ETV.

The department is in the process now of analysing and preparing specifications for a VTR that is compatible. Of course, then the decision will be made as to whether there will be grants available.

Obviously, in order to have a comprehensive approach to ETV, there must be VTRs available for the school system. I have said this before in the House. The type of machine—the specifications—have not as yet been determined and, of course, the decision relevant to grants and amounts available will have to be made at that time.

Mr. Pitman: I wonder if the Minister would answer a supplementary question, perhaps to assure the House that this whole question of VTRs is not related to the wider problem of providing the network, which I think is in the works, in relation to the speech from the Throne and the legislation proposed.

Hon. Mr. Davis: No, Mr. Speaker, the problem of VTRs relates to the greater flexibility needed in timetabling. It does not relate to the transmission, which is the key or core to whatever programme is developed.

Mr. Pitman: The second question, Mr. Speaker.

Is the Minister aware that residents of Cowper, Conger, Gibson and Baxter townships, in the Parry Sound-Muskoka area, will not be given an opportunity to vote in the election of the county school board—elections that are going on at the present time?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, persons who live in school sections in the territory without municipal organization are able to vote since secretaries in the school boards in such areas have the same responsibility with respect to the election as clerks of municipalities. This is a problem that occurs only in areas where there is no municipal council or no school section and hence, perhaps very few, if any, permanent residents.

Under section 81(4) of Bill 44, which makes the divisional board responsible for elections in such areas in the future, this problem cannot then recur.

Mr. Pitman: This is a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Is there any possibility of providing these people with any kind of representation, in view of the fact that they will be taxed in the next two years without any representation?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I think this is a matter that would have to be studied after we see just what the experience is today. As I say there will be very few permanent residents affected in any way.

Mr. Pitman: About 2,000 in these townships.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Being a part time resident in one of the townships mentioned in this particular question, I am relatively familiar with the problem. As I say, it is something that cannot recur, but there was no school board and no municipal organization in a portion of the four townships that were mentioned.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Welland South has two questions.

Mr. R. Haggerty (Welland South): Mr. Speaker, I have two questions for the hon. Minister of Energy and Resources Management.

When will the report be tabled on the joint programme being done by the Ontario Water Resources Commission and United States agencies at the Canadian Centre for Inland Waters, investigating the technical input required by the International Joint Commission on Lake Erie and Lake Ontario?

Question No. 2, will the Minister advise the House if the report which the Ontario Water Resources Commission is presently preparing on the feasibility of exporting water, our most valuable resource, is completed and the date when it will be tabled in the House?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, I have these as two separate and distinct questions, 166 and 167, so I answer 166, your last question, first.

The Ontario Water Resources Commission is not engaged in any study on the feasibility of exporting water. The commission is carrying out a survey of its northern water resources, which will include an inventory of ground and surface waters presently discharging to James Bay and Hudson Bay, as well as a study of the existing and future socio-economic water requirements of the area.

The federal government is carrying out at the same time a series of hydrologic engineering studies to investigate the feasibility of the various possibilities of diverting water from one water basin to another, or from one water course to another. These studies are being co-ordinated by the federal-provincial committee to ensure that there is no unnecessary duplication of effort. The studies commenced in 1966, and are expected to be completed in 1975.

In answer to question No. 167: The Ontario Water Resources Commission has collaborated with other agencies in the United States and Canada, including the federal Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, of which the Canada Centre for Inland Waters is a part, in conducting studies on the pollution of Lake Erie, Lake Ontario and the St. Lawrence River being sponsored by the International Joint Commission.

These studies have been undertaken by the Ontario Water Resources Commission as part of its own water quality survey programme, as well as in connection with its contribution to the report on the International Joint Commission study. This report is now in preparation, and it is expected that it will be completed in April of next year.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Downsview has questions for the Attorney General.

Mr. Singer: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have two questions for the Attorney General. Will the Attorney General state the position of his department with respect to the decision of Oshawa Coroner J. A. Patterson that an inquest into the death of Whitby Psychiatric Hospital patient George Manning is not necessary?

The second question: Will the Attorney General comment on the fact that this death occurred on Saturday, November 23, and was not reported until late the following week?

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, the position of the department is that of the supervising coroner, the chief coroner for Ontario. The inquest has been ordered. It was ordered on November 29, and the matter was also reported to the police with a request for an investigation.

The death occurred, as the hon. member said, on November 23. Dr. Patterson, the official coroner, immediately examined the situation. His opinion was that an inquest was not necessary.

He did, however, report the matter to Dr. Cotnam on November 27—four days later. After reviewing the matter, Dr. Cotnam decided that an inquest should be held and that there should be a police investigation.

That police investigation is going on. I think there was, perhaps, a lapse of time which may not have been reasonable, but the report was looked into immediately.

Mr. Singer: By way of a supplementary question: Does the Attorney General intend to have a chat—or have someone have a chat—with the local coroner, which would seem to be indicated?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think it having been reported to the chief coroner and he having taken the action he has, I am quite sure this covers the situation. I think the fact that the hon. member brought it to the attention of the House will perhaps have some effect.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for High Park.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, before bringing up my questions to the Attorney General, I have a matter of privilege which I wish to raise. On November 27 in this House, I asked a series of questions to various Ministers in connection with the raceway which has been proposed for this city.

It is one of the privileges of this House to have our remarks recorded in Hansard, and we are also given the privilege of making changes if there is an error in punctuation, or in diction. But, of course, it is quite important that the sense of the reply or the question not be changed.

One of the questions which I asked at that time to the Minister of Highways—I am sorry he has just left the House—was whether Metro could close the Lake Shore Road without the Minister's permission.

The Minister replied—and I quote from the preliminary Hansard which was reported widely in the press:

Metro Toronto cannot close the Lake Shore Boulevard under conditions referred to in the question without the approval of the Minister.

This reply was printed in all three Toronto newspapers, and was not followed by any comment in the House by the Minister nor any retraction.

Today, I found to my shock when I received the final Hansard, his remark has been changed to read as follows, Mr. Speaker:

Metro Toronto can close the Lakeshore Boulevard under conditions referred to in the question without the approval of the Minister.

This, sir, is exactly the opposite of the reply given. I wish to draw this to your attention sir, so you will take whatever action you feel is necessary.

Mr. Speaker: Thank you, I shall.

Mr. Shulman: Questions for the Attorney General: Does the Attorney General intend to take any action in connection with Magistrate Kenneth Langdon's refusal to jail 16-year-old offenders? And will the Attorney General follow Magistrate Langdon's advice and advise the government to raise the age limit for juvenile offenders as has been done in other provinces?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the procedure followed by Magistrate Langdon in this case and others. At present, at least, I do not intend to review the matter in my jurisdiction. The situation rises from the fact that the Criminal Code does not permit persons being placed on probation prior to conviction.

We have discussed this with the federal authorities, and it is my understanding that this matter is being reviewed with the possibility of amendment. The question of changing the age limit of juvenile offenders from sixteen to some higher age is also under consideration at the federal level.

I think the hon. member knows that amendments to the federal code are before the federal House. A bill is before the federal House. We have discussed it, and I understand the matter is being considered there.

Mr. Shulman: I have two supplementary questions to follow on your reply, sir.

First, is the Minister aware that Justice Minister Turner was reported in the press of November 29, 1968, as saying that magistrates:

Come under provincial jurisdiction and it would not be proper for him to interfere in any way with the matter in which they conduct their courts.

The only way he could become involved in the Langdon matter, he explained, would be if the Ontario Attorney General would send him a report on the matter and ask for advice or direction.

In the light of this comment, would the Attorney General follow up this matter?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the article the hon. member is reading and I am not sure, of course, as to its exactitude. But I reiterate that it is a provision of the code which prevents a magistrate from placing people on probation except after conviction. And I reiterate that we have discussed this with the federal authorities. It is my understanding that the question of changing the code in this respect is being considered at the federal level.

Mr. Shulman: Does the Attorney General agree with me that it is very bad for justice in this province to have different sentences given out for the same offences, depending on whether a person is sentenced in Halton or some other part of the province?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, I think I would agree with that, Mr. Speaker. And if this were not being considered now with a view of change, I would be more greatly concerned than I am. In fact, we are discussing it and asking the federal authorities in whose hands it lies to make the change.

Mr. Shulman: I have a second question, Mr. Speaker, for the Attorney General. Has the Minister investigated the usurious charges by illegal bail bondsmen as reported on page 38 of the Telegram of August 8, 1968? What were the results of that investigation? Does the Minister intend to take steps to wipe out this practice? And if so, what steps?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, this matter is under investigation by the Crown attorney for the county of York, Mr. Grayburn, who has been asked to undertake it.

Mr. Shulman: Will the Attorney General inform the House of the results of that investigation?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I think I shall await the report before I decide what to do with it.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Wentworth has a question of the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Yes, Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Municipal Affairs: When will the residents living in full recovery Ontario housing projects receive their municipal tax rebate?

Secondly, will people receiving mother's allowance and the like be receiving this rebate?

Hon. W. D. McKeough (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think the member refers to housing projects under section 8(1) of The Residential Property Tax Reduction Act. The eligibility or otherwise for the rebate is the responsibility of the Ontario Housing Corporation and I would suggest if there are specific examples or questions, then the hon. member might question the Minister of Trade and Development (Mr. Randall), because in the first instance that is where the rebates will come from, not directly from Municipal Affairs.

In reply to the second part of the question, with regard to mother's allowance or other such allowance, the receipt of a mother's allowance by the tenant, or for that matter by a landlord, will not disqualify—

Mr. Deans: Might I ask the Minister a supplementary question?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Does the member want the answer? He has asked two questions, and I am on the second part.

Mr. Deans: I am sorry. I was going to ask him to repeat it first of all because I did not catch the ending of it, and then I want to ask another question. I could not hear the Minister's answer.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: All right.

Mr. Deans: Does that make sense?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: What I said was—yes, the member could not hear, all right—what I said was that the determination under section 8(1) is the responsibility of the Ontario Housing Corporation and I would therefore suggest the member ask the Minister of Trade and Development, particularly if the member has some specific examples.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Are the Minister and he members of the same Cabinet?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: We are members of the same Cabinet but if the member would look at the legislation he would find out that it is the responsibility of the Ontario Housing Corporation.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The member seems to be awfully touchy that he has asked the wrong Minister the wrong question.

Mr. Lewis: Has the Minister ever tried to get an answer from the Minister of Trade and Development?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: No, I am not asking the questions, the hon. member is, so try it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Does the member mean that is why he asked this Minister?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Is the member ready for the second part of the question? Does he want the second part of the question answered?

Mr. Deans: I even want the first part answered.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Then ask the Minister of Trade and Development.

Mr. Deans: I might point out if I may, I am quite sure—

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member will take his seat. The hon. member has the privilege of asking questions but not making statements at this time. Now, does he wish to ask a supplementary question of the Minister?

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I would like the question that I asked answered.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member asked the question in the manner in which he thinks best, the hon. Minister has answered the questions in the way he thinks best. I believe the hon. Minister has answered.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister has not yet answered the second part. He said he had an answer—

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. Minister asked if the hon. member wished the answer to the second part of the question and as I recall it the hon. member said he wanted the answer to the first part. I have already pointed out to him that the first part has been answered so far as the Minister is prepared or wishes to answer it at this time, so perhaps the hon. Minister would now answer the second part.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I would be delighted to, Mr. Speaker. The answer to the second part of the question is that the receipt of a mother's allowance by the tenant or any other similar allowance would not disqualify her or him from receiving the rebate.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The first order; resuming the adjourned debate on the amendment to the amendment to the motion for an address in reply to the speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor at the opening of the session.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Hon. W. D. McKeough (Minister of Municipal Affairs): In rising to take part in this debate, Mr. Speaker, I join with others in complimenting you at the beginning of this new session on the wise and judicious manner in which you chair the deliberations of the House.

I of course join in congratulating the mover and seconder of the address in reply, the hon. member for Prescott and Russell (Mr. Belanger) and the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Jessiman).

Interestingly enough, in the matter which I propose to deal with today, that of regional government, I suppose it is safe to say that those two members have had as much to do with the regional government proposals which have been announced as any two members in the House. The member for Prescott and Russell was very much involved in the deliberations leading up to the bill entitled An Act to establish the regional municipality of Ottawa-Carleton; and certainly the hon. member for Fort William has been most involved in the discussions and the deliberations leading up to the announcement a week ago today with regard to the Lakehead cities.

I want to just mention one other matter of concern or record, I think, Mr. Speaker, pertaining to my own riding and that is to record in Hansard the death of my predecessor, Mr. George Parry, who is, of course, very well known to many members of this House.

He served as the member for Kent West from 1945 to 1963, a period of 18 years. He was a good member. I think all members on both sides would agree with that statement. He represented his constituents well, he was a loyal member of the government and of the party and it is a loss indeed to all of us in the Chatham area, to his family and to me, because I counted him very much as a mentor and as a good friend. I did want to record those thoughts in Hansard.

Mr. Speaker, I now turn to really a follow-up on what the Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) had to say at the close of his contribution to the debate on Thursday pertaining to regional government. I want to amplify somewhat the remarks which he made and perhaps chart some direction for us in these months ahead.

Mr. Speaker, this is an historic time for local government in Ontario. This province is embarking on a programme which will recast and reform our entire municipal system in a way more fundamental than any ever attempted since the present system was organized. I think, Mr. Speaker, that observers will look back and say that local government in Ontario was established in 1849 and re-established in 1968.

Let me briefly restate the main point in the Prime Minister's statement of last Thursday so there will be no misunderstanding here, or outside this House. The government of Ontario has accepted the objective of regionalization of municipal government in Ontario, and will move toward the implementation of this objective as quickly as possible. I shall have more to say about the schedule of implementation later on.

As the Prime Minister has said, we will use several criteria as our guidelines in designing regional governments. Five of these criteria have been spelled out in the report of the Ontario committee on taxation, the Smith committee, and we accept these as entirely valid. For the record, let me say that the criteria suggested by the Smith committee, and accepted by this government are:

1. A region should exhibit a sense of community identity based on sociological characteristics, economics, geography and history;
2. A region should have a balance of interests so that no one group or interest can completely dominate the region;
3. There must be a financial base adequate to carry out regional programmes at a satisfactory level;
4. The region should be large enough so that local responsibilities can be performed efficiently by taking advantage of economies of scale; and
5. Regional boundaries should facilitate maximum interregional co-operation.

We accept as I have said, Mr. Speaker, these criteria as part of our guidelines for the design of regional governments.

However, we have also adopted three additional criteria. The first of these is community participation and, where possible, community acceptability. This does not mean that any municipality will have a veto over regional government proposals in its area. What we do want is participation by all communities in an area in the discussions leading to the formation of a regional government.

While we, in this House, must accept final responsibility for any regional government legislation, we will work with communities in developing specific proposals. This important criterion was implicitly recognized by the select committee on the Smith report when it said:

We think that every opportunity should be given to local initiative, experience, and wisdom in establishing new regional governments.

The second additional criterion is that the new regional government boundaries should be useable by other institutions in the regional administration of their programme. We have in mind two types of institutions. The first includes provincial departments and agencies; the second local units of education.

As pointed out many times in this House, particularly in the white paper "Design for Development", there are a multitude of varying overlapping and unco-ordinated boundaries being used by different provincial departments for regional administration purposes. We hope that the new regional government boundaries will provide all government departments and agencies with a set of rational, economically sound, "building blocks" which they can use in drawing up their administrative boundaries.

Some departments and agencies may not want to have the same number of administrative or planning regions as we expect to have regional governments. A recent study, supported by the regional development branch of The Department of Treasury and Economics, suggested that most departments used between five and 15 regions in their work. Nowhere are the varying needs of the government departments and agencies more important than in the relationship of local governments to the province's regional development programme.

Hon. members will remember that one of the points in "Design for Development" was that the government would be moving towards the establishment of more uniform administrative regions for government purposes. As the Prime Minister said in his statement, the key to the relationship between the two programmes is the use by both the urban-centred regions.

For economic development and planning purposes, the province need only be divided into a small number of regions—at present, of course, there are ten economic regions—but these regions will be composed of two or more regional government areas.

The second type of institution is the local unit of education. Up to now county boundaries have been the basic format for the re-organization of school boards. It is our aim, and that of The Department of Education, that as new regional governments are formed, we will attempt to design them so that they and the school authorities will be co-terminous, or will have co-terminous outer boundaries.

The third and final additional criterion we propose is this: In cases where there are to be two tiers of government within a region, both tiers should be designed with the same criteria.

The implications of adopting this could be far-reaching. Accepting this approach means that regional government is not simply a strengthening of the existing county-local municipality system, nor is it the superimposing of a new tier of regional government upon the existing local municipal structure. Rather, we are saying that the region and the subordinate local municipalities must be designed together using the same guidelines.

Mr. Speaker, I would now like to discuss briefly a few of the salient characteristics which our new regional governments will exhibit. I shall do this by describing regional government characteristics under four headings: 1. The size; 2. The shape; 3. The internal structure; and 4. Representation on regional governing bodies.

Size: The Ontario committee on taxation observed that the size of a regional government should be the result of the interplay of two factors—service and access.

On the service side the major determinant of size is the population base needed to carry out effective local government programmes. Our experience and discussions with other departments and with municipalities suggest conclusively that a minimum regional population of from 150,000 to 200,000 is required for the efficient provision of most local services.

Access is described by the Ontario committee on taxation in the following terms:

The most widespread participation possible on the part of all, or virtually all, individual citizens . . . in terms of capacity to influence public policy decisions and to enforce responsive and responsible administration.

Obviously, access becomes virtually impossible in many rural and northern areas if we adhere rigidly to our minimum desirable population figures—areas would be so large that individual access to regional decision-making would be meaningless. To this extent, our regional governments will show variations in population and size.

However—and I wish to emphasize this—our objective is a set of regional governments with a population of at least 150,000 to 200,000.

If we adopt a similar line of reasoning for the lower tier in a two-tier system of regional government, I suggest that the minimum population of local municipalities in a region should be from 8,000 to 10,000.

Shape: The shape of a regional government will depend ultimately on the nature of the area we define as appropriate for regional government purposes.

The definition of the appropriate regional complex entails some significant decisions. Most important, should we, as implied in the Smith report, sharply distinguish between rural and urban areas or should we try to combine rural and urban within one region?

The government proposes that regional government must be viewed in terms of the urban-centred region. By this I mean that the region will cover the major urban centres and the surrounding areas which together share social, economic and physical services.

We accept this definition of the region. The old distinction between urban and rural interests is breaking down—rural and urban attitudes are moving closer together all the time. In earlier times when transportation was primitive and economic activity was on a small scale, we could think of Ontario as a series of small self-contained communities divided into two identifiable societies—city and country. Each of these societies had its own values and aims.

Now, however, we are one society where some live in big communities and others live in towns, villages or rural areas. But our aims—the education we seek for our children and the services we expect from our governments—in other words—the quality of life we all strive for—is not so different regardless of the type of community we live in.

Another reason for accepting the urban-centred region is a trend which I have already mentioned. There is a great common sharing of services between rural and urban Ontario. I refer to a sharing of services not only at the municipal level, but also hospitals, schools, commercial services, employment and a variety of other activities.

Because of this emerging community of interest, the shape our regional governments will take covers the urban centre and its rural hinterland, both of which are, in fact, mutually interdependent.

Internal structure: When we turn to the internal structure of our new regional government, one question is paramount—one-tier or two-tier regions?

One-tier regional government means that a region will have its municipal services administered by one municipality covering the entire region. Two-tier regional government will divide municipal functional responsibilities between two levels of local government—a regional municipality and a group of smaller local municipalities.

It is, Mr. Speaker, our decision that judgments respecting the question of one- or two-tier regional governments must be made on an individual regional basis following detailed study and consultation in each area.

When we make this decision in each area it will be based on the following factors:

Size of the proposed region—a very large region may require lower-tier municipalities in order to retain the vital element of accessibility.

Population distribution within the proposed region—the degree of concentration of population will be an important factor in determining the form of the regional government structure.

Distribution of fiscal resources—these may well determine whether it is possible to have financially viable lower-tier units.

Physical and social geography—a range of hills, a lake, a river or cultural and linguistic differences in a region, may lead to a decision to have two tiers in order to provide effective services and to preserve existing social communities in a region.

These, together with local attitudes, Mr. Speaker, are the things we shall take into account when deciding whether a particular area will have one- or two-tier regional government.

This leads me into another point on internal structure. If we are to have two-tier systems in parts of Ontario, how is the total package of municipal functions to be distributed between the regional and local municipalities? There will, of course, be some variation among regions, but in general we accept the distribution of functions recommended by the Ontario committee on taxation and endorsed by the recent select committee.

Before we discuss the matter of representation, it might be useful at this point to list briefly those functions where we see the new regional governments as having paramount or complete jurisdiction.

Property assessment: To ensure uniformity of the tax base, assessment can be administered most efficiently when covering a large number of properties.

Taxation billing and collection: Tax billing is closely tied to assessment in a procedural sense. Tax collection could be regional or local; we can see no overwhelming argument favouring either tier.

Capital borrowing: This must a regional responsibility for several reasons, including the desirability of pooling credit and the need for a unified long-range capital plan.

Planning: In the two-tier system there is a division of responsibility for various public services.

There will also be a division of responsibility for the preparation and implementation of planning policy within the region. The regional municipality will be responsible for the broad, overall physical and economic framework for regional growth, and for the planning of those facilities under their direct jurisdiction. Within this general framework the local municipality will prepare more detailed plans.

The local plans prepared will be consistent with and complementary to the development policies expressed in the broader plans of the regional municipality.

In turn these plans must be consistent with and support the policies enunciated from time to time in the province's regional development programme.

To this end, my department is working closely with The Department of Treasury and Economics.

Police and fire protection: We agree with the Ontario committee on taxation that this could be either a local function or shared between the local and regional municipalities. Police protection, preferably, will be on a regional basis.

Arterial roads: Roads and related traffic control designed to provide service to the entire region must be under regional jurisdiction.

Transit: We agree with the Smith committee and the select committee that the planning for public transit must be integrated with the planning for the entire region. To this extent the regional government must be involved in the transit function. Whether the actual operation of a transit system is a regional or localized responsibility will vary.

Sewage and garbage collection and disposal: These two functions lend themselves to a sharing of responsibilities between tiers. The lower tier municipalities are appropriate for the initial collection of sewage and garbage, while the region is best suited to provide the necessary large centralized disposal and sewage treatment plants.

Water supply and distribution: Water intake and purification, and primary trunk distribution are large-scale operations which should be at the regional level. On the other hand, secondary distribution could be a lower-tier function.

Health and welfare: We are now moving towards larger units of local administration for these functions through regional health units, county welfare units and district welfare administration boards. This is happening because these functions require a large population base in order to provide the complex specialized services our society demands. For this reason, I visualize health and welfare as regional government functions. In addition, to the extent that municipalities participate in the planning and financing of hospitals, this is also a legitimate regional responsibility.

Conservation: It may prove impossible to integrate the conservation authorities completely within a regional government system. The problem is that conservation authorities must use watershed boundaries reflecting their very specialized role.

If a conservation authority is entirely within a regional government we might consider the possibility of making the authority directly responsible to the regional government council, or perhaps making the authority a special committee of council.

If, as will often be the case, the conservation authority has boundaries covering all or parts of two or more regional governments, municipal representation on the conservation authority governing body, perhaps, should be from the regional government.

Parks: Parks should be a shared function with the regional municipality having jurisdiction over parks serving the whole region.

We visualize all other functions remaining at the local tier in any two-tier regional government.

One further point remains to be noted in our discussion of the internal structure of the new regional governments. As these governments are formed, we will adopt a vigorous policy of strengthening the municipal councils by removing powers from existing special-purpose bodies and turning these powers over to the regional or local municipality.

Examples of the fields we have in mind for a more direct role by the municipality are—parks, recreation, planning and community centres. These functions could be carried out effectively by committees of council, perhaps including appointed citizens, and would be directly accountable to the council on all matters of policy, including finances.

Representation: The fourth subject I wish to refer to in describing our concept of regional government is representation. The new regional government councils will be the most important policy-making bodies in local government, indeed, second only to this House.

There is no doubt in my mind that the only acceptable principle today is representation by population. In the past, the principle of "rep-by-pop" has been honoured in theory and violated in practice by all levels of government. However, we have seen recently a significant movement toward recognition of this concept both in this House and in the federal Parliament. We expect a similar movement at the municipal level as regional governments are organized.

I accept the validity of the argument that rural ridings with fewer voters than urban ridings must be assured of adequate representation. However, I must emphasize that in our regional government system we will place a high priority on a system of representation giving all residents a reasonably equal voice in regional decisions.

Another aspect of representation deals with the special problems of a two-tier regional system. Two methods of selecting regional council members can be used: They may be directly elected to the regional council, or they may be indirectly elected by becoming elected members of lower tier units and then being designated to sit on the regional council. Members will note that the present county system is a form of indirect election, as it is indeed in Metropolitan Toronto.

I must say, in all frankness, that we do not know at this time which system is superior. Convincing arguments have been advanced for both forms of election. In view of this we hope to experiment with two-tier regional governments embodying both principles in order to see which form does, in fact, work better.

These, then, are the major elements we hope to see in our regional government system. To summarize, we are working toward regional governments which will embody the following characteristics:—

1. A regional size which balances accessibility and the efficient provision of services. A minimum regional population of from 150,000 to 200,000 and, if two-tier, a minimum local population of from 8,000 to 10,000.
2. The region will cover both the urban community and the rural hinterland with which it shares economic, social and physical services.
3. Regions may be one- or two-tiered, depending on local circumstances.
4. If two-tiered, the regional level will have many significant responsibilities including assessment, planning, arterial roads, health and welfare.
5. Municipal councils will be strengthened by removing the powers from any special-purpose bodies and turning these powers over to regional or local municipal councils.
6. Regional government representation will be based on population.

7. In the two-tier regions, regional council representatives may be directly or indirectly elected.

Implementation: I come now, Mr. Speaker, to the second major field I wish to discuss—how we propose to implement our regional government programme.

As stated by the Prime Minister earlier, we do not propose the uniform establishment of regional government at the same time in all parts of Ontario. I should point out that this is where we part company with both the Ontario committee on taxation and the select committee, which recommended the establishment of a firm inflexible schedule leading to full implementation of regional government by a fixed target date.

Our approach is somewhat different although the result—full regional government—will be the same. We do not propose to tie ourselves down to a fixed target date, for three very basic reasons.

Firstly, we do not believe that all areas in Ontario are in equal need of immediate regional government. The critical areas are those where local government institutions are not responding to existing or anticipated change. The reasons for this non-responsiveness are inherent in the structure, and are beyond the influence of any one municipality acting alone.

The symptoms of this critical stage may take one of many forms such as increasing fiscal difficulties, a retardation of necessary growth, or a decline in the level of municipal services. In general, these areas tend to be in the urban and urbanizing parts of southern Ontario.

We will establish regional governments on a problem-area priority basis, concentrating our attention on these parts of Ontario where the situation is most serious.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Is that all the select committee advised?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: No, they tied the whole of Ontario to a specific deadline at the end of 1971.

Mr. Singer: Not the select committee on municipal affairs.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Well I suspected that too.

The second reason for not accepting an inflexible deadline is that we do not yet have sufficient trained and experienced personnel to cover all Ontario. We see the importance of concentrating our talents in those areas where the need for change is greatest.

The third reason for not accepting a fixed target date for full implementation is probably the most important of all. One of the cardinal principles we are following during implementation is the meaningful involvement of the local communities. Our desire for local participation is such that we will, in some cases, endure delays in the establishing process in order to give local opinion time to form and express itself.

While this will not become an excuse for inaction, it does mean that we should not begin the process by setting inflexible target dates which will inhibit, or could even prevent, the local participation we all want.

I cannot overemphasize the importance of the role to be played by local communities—and indeed by the hon. members on both sides of this House. In a very real sense, the entire programme of regional government will fail if the people in the region are not convinced of the programme's merits. These are the people who will have to live with and run the regions once they are established.

To repeat then. In scheduling implementation of regional government, our approach is to concentrate on priority areas with the objective of making regional government universal in the shortest possible time.

In general, the procedure we propose to use is very close to that recommended by the select committee. It will be a four-stage process in most cases:

Stage 1: Discussion and consultation between the province and municipalities in a region. This may take the form of a joint study, a series of joint meetings, a local or a provincially directed study. In many respects, this stage will be similar to the local government review concept with which we are familiar.

Stage 2: Preparation of a specific proposal by the province which I will formally present to the municipalities in the region.

Stage 3: The development of a final proposal and draft legislation based on reactions to the proposals in stage 2.

Stage 4: Presentation of legislation to this House, passage, and establishment of the regional government.

There will be great variations on how this approach is used throughout the province, so the hon. members should not be surprised when the process appears in some cases to become telescoped or elongated.

At this point Mr. Speaker, I would like to outline those areas where we are now concentrating our attention and indicate some of the concrete steps we propose to take over the next two years.

I should make one point here. In what follows I shall be referring to areas by naming counties. In doing this I do not wish to leave the impression that the existing county boundaries are to be used in all cases for regional government purposes. At this time boundaries are not fixed.

As I said recently to the Association of Ontario Counties,

Regional government . . . will probably involve many departures from the existing set of county boundaries . . . in some instances the existing county boundaries may represent a logical regional unit, but this may prove to be the exception rather than the rule.

Niagara region: In the Niagara region, covering the present counties of Lincoln and Welland, a comprehensive local government review was completed over two years ago. We have now finished our study of the review and are preparing a concrete proposal to present to the municipalities in the area. I will be making this presentation in January and legislation creating regional government in the area will be introduced during the course of this session.

Ottawa-Carleton: As the hon. members are aware, legislation was introduced earlier this year to establish the regional municipality of Ottawa-Carleton. This legislation becomes fully effective on January 1, 1969. The regional municipality comprises the county of Carleton, cities of Ottawa and Eastview and the adjoining township of Cumberland.

Metro Toronto: The area on the three sides of Metropolitan Toronto is probably the key area of the province in terms of the need for changes in the structure of local government.

To the east of Metro I have arranged an early meeting with representatives from municipalities in Ontario county and the extreme western portion of Durham county. Within twelve months I hope to be able to present specific proposals on regional government to the municipalities in that area. An important planning and development study has begun in Ontario county. I expect that the data generated from this study will be most useful in the framing of regional government proposals.

On the west side of Metro, a local government review was completed in 1966. Evaluation of this review has led me to the conclusion that the recommendations embody a concept of regional government with which we cannot agree. In part, we reached this conclusion because the review visualized a distinct separation of the area into one urban and one largely rural region. This is not in accord with our principle of the urban-centred region covering both urban and rural areas.

In addition, the virtually unanimous rejection of the review recommendations by local opinion was a factor in our decision. We have now had preliminary discussions with Peel county on their proposal for a regional government, and I intend to have similar discussions shortly with Halton county.

At this stage it is not clear whether there will be one or two regional governments in the area, although I believe that in the long run one region will prove to be a better solution. In any case, I hope to be able to present specific proposals in this area within the next few months. The timing of these proposals is contingent upon the completion of the Hamilton-Wentworth local government review, which includes the town of Burlington, now part of Halton county.

North of Metro there has been much public discussion about regional government for York county. I have had several meetings with various groups in this area and hope to enter into discussions with municipalities within the next two months. It appears that we may be in a position to make a proposal for regional government north of Metro in 1969.

I should note that our discussions with municipalities on the three sides of Metro will be greatly aided by the work done through the Metropolitan Toronto and Region Transportation Study. Accurately described as the first example of truly regional planning in Canada, MTRTS is proving valuable in establishing the developmental framework within which we can test our regional government proposals.

There is an additional benefit as well. In other areas of Ontario we have had to start regional government studies with an extensive process of basic data gathering and interpretation. This will not be necessary in this area because of MTRTS, so the whole schedule of regional government can be accelerated, east, west and north of Metro.

We have long recognized the desirability of inter-municipal co-operation in defining and solving problems common to a number of adjoining municipalities. During the past twenty years, with the advent of rapid urban growth and unprecedented mobility of people and goods, this co-operation is no longer merely desirable but absolutely necessary.

One of the techniques we have used in the past to facilitate co-operation between groups of municipalities in the Toronto region and other areas of the province has been the joint planning board. It has been criticized on the basis that few comprehensive plans have been produced. This I grant, but the inter-municipal discussions which it has generated have been extremely influential in creating a favourable climate for planning, in developing an understanding of the "region", and the urgency of looking at things on a broader scale than the single municipality.

It must be understood that it never was considered to be the final answer in handling problems of common interest to several municipalities, but rather an intermediate step to be used until we are able to rationalize local government in the province.

The establishment of regional government units with the resulting new relationship between local municipalities, will permit many joint planning boards to be eliminated because their raison d'être will have disappeared. Many other boards will have their boundaries adjusted to coincide with the boundaries of the new regional municipalities.

The common boundaries of the planning area and the area of regional government jurisdiction will permit delegation of a number of planning approval functions to the regional authority. Such delegation will occur when we are assured that the regional authority has formulated development policies expressed in an official plan under The Planning Act.

It is my expectation that, following the establishment of regional municipalities around Metro Toronto, the present boundaries of the Metro Toronto planning area will be revised to bring about an exact relationship with regional government boundaries. When Metro Toronto brings forward an official plan, this will permit the delegation of certain planning powers which Metro does not presently enjoy.

I expect to enter into discussions with Metropolitan Toronto on these matters within the next two months.

Hamilton-Wentworth: Regional government for the Hamilton-Wentworth area is now under study by a local government review commission. The commissioners expect to hold public hearings early in the new year and to report to me within six to eight months. Following this report, I shall hold discussions with the municipalities in the area and then present them with a specific proposal. One of the first decisions which must be made is whether Burlington should be part of a Peel-Halton region or part of the Hamilton-Wentworth region.

Waterloo area: Another detailed study which we expect to receive shortly is the final Waterloo area local government review. Within six months I hope to be able to offer a regional government proposal to this area. We should be in a position to present legislation to this House within 12 to 14 months.

Brant area: Intensive local and provincial-local discussions are now taking place in the Brant county area. In our discussions, I have suggested that the possibility of a larger regional unit should be considered.

Norfolk-Haldimand: A detailed study of planning in Haldimand and Norfolk is now beginning, prompted in part by new industrial development in that area. The results of this study may well point to a need for a larger regional government.

Northern Ontario: The question of regional government in northern Ontario poses special problems because of the dispersion of population and the primary resource base of the northern economy. We are devoting particular attention to municipal government reform in that area.

In September the Prime Minister announced the formation of a special committee to report on the issue of how regional government could be introduced in northern Ontario. The terms of reference are broad. Some of the questions the committee will be examining are:

What structural form should local government reform take in the north?

Is it feasible to adopt the proposals of the Ontario committee on taxation for contract municipalities in areas where regional government is not possible?

Is the Lakehead local government review proposal, for a district regional government with limited powers, applicable in that and other areas of the north?

What special provision must be made for municipal services in unorganized areas?

The committee is now at work and has been asked to report by July 1, 1969 to a special committee of Cabinet. Until receiving and studying this report I do not intend to make any regional government policy proposals of general application to northern Ontario.

In the interim, however, we do propose to proceed with a local government reform programme in three northern areas.

The Lakehead area: On Monday, November 25, I announced our intention to proceed with the amalgamation of the cities of Fort William and Port Arthur, and parts of the townships of Neebing and Shuniah. I intend to introduce legislation implementing this decision as soon as possible in this session.

Prior to the introduction of this legislation I shall go to the Lakehead in January with specific proposals arising from our discussions with the local inter-municipal committee and from studies in my department. The regional aspects of the Lakehead local government review are part of the terms of reference of the committee on local government in northern Ontario, and no decision will be made on this aspect until after the report of the committee.

Muskoka district: A local government review is now underway in the Muskoka district. A preliminary report has been made and I expect a final report in early 1969. If all goes well, I should be able to introduce legislation for reform of local government in Muskoka during this session.

Sudbury area: Finally, the question of local government reform in the Sudbury area has been occupying much of my attention recently. Several local hearings on regional matters have already been held by the Sudbury Municipal Association, and the Nickel Basin Planning Board assisted in the preparation of the Nickel Basin planning study completed in early 1967.

The province has now decided to proceed with regional government in this area on a priority basis. As a first step I have asked the chairman of the Ontario Municipal Board, Mr. J. A. Kennedy, QC, under section 45 of The Ontario Municipal Board Act, to undertake a detailed study of local government in the Sudbury area—

Mr. Singer: Is this the Minister's way of getting rid of Kennedy? The only way he can get him off the municipal board?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: He is not leaving the board.

Mr. Singer: Oh, how is he going to do both?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: If the member would read section 45 of The Municipal Board Act he would find that out.

To continue: —and to report his findings to me in six to nine months. He has agreed to do this and will begin this task immediately.

I have offered Mr. Kennedy full access to the staff and information of my department, and I know that municipalities in the Sudbury area will act in a similar fashion. With Mr. Kennedy's great background in the field of local government, I am sure that he will provide me with valuable guidance in determining the shape and nature of regional government in the Sudbury area.

We are now working with Mr. Kennedy on the terms of reference for his study and I hope to make a further announcement in a few days outlining the physical area and the precise questions to be considered.

I shall be announcing specific proposals in other areas during the course of the programme. I think you will agree, Mr. Speaker, that the implementation schedule I have outlined is more than enough to keep us busy, in the short-run at least.

Closely related to the programme of regional government is our programme to encourage the consolidation of existing municipal units. Most local municipalities are now far too small to be viable units of local government, even at the lower tier of a regional system. For example, I mentioned before that the minimum acceptable population for a lower-tier municipality is from 8,000 to 10,000.

At the moment 90 per cent of our municipalities are below this minimum figure, and 270 have a population of less than 1,000. The median population of an Ontario local municipality is only 1,775.

The effects of such a limited population base are shown when we consider that one in three of our local municipalities spends less than $100,000 annually on municipal programmes. This small size and the restricted fiscal base means that with, or even without, regional government in an area, we must pursue a vigorous policy of municipal consolidation.

As a first step, I have ordered an inquiry into the structure, organization, and methods of operation of all the municipalities of Ontario; and I shall invoke section 25A of The Municipal Act. This means that all proposed changes in municipal boundaries, such as annexations or amalgamations, which are submitted to the Ontario Municipal Board, will now be referred to my department for study. We will examine each proposal to see if it is in agreement with our regional programme and results in the creation of more viable municipal units. Only when we are satisfied on these grounds will such applications proceed through the Ontario Municipal Board.

I should also add that the creation of larger more viable units through municipal consolidation will greatly simplify one problem we face in the new two-tier regions. Earlier, I referred to the principle of representation by population as an essential ingredient of regional government. With consolidation at the local level, there will be greater uniformity in population among lower-tier units, and it will be much easier to have equitable representation at the regional level.

As the Prime Minister noted in his statement, the primary responsibility for the regional government programme will rest with the Minister of Municipal Affairs. In doing this, I will be working very closely with the policy development committee of Cabinet.

I have asked the municipal research branch to assume day-to-day responsibility for regional government studies and implementation. The municipal research branch will, of course, be working in very close liaison with the other branches of my department and with other departments and agencies of government. This is a programme which, by its very nature, cuts across branch and departmental lines and can only succeed with the understanding and co-operation of all departments of government.

Mr. Speaker, I have outlined in some detail our plans for the necessary changes in the municipal system of Ontario. These changes are fundamental to the future well-being of local government, and thus to the social and economic health of the whole province.

To bring these plans to their ultimate success will require the deep involvement, not only of every member of this House, but of every responsible human being within the boundaries of Ontario.

It will take much dedication to perform these tasks, but I fervently believe, Mr. Speaker, that this day will stand out as a great landmark in the perspective of municipal history in this province of Ontario.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, if you will allow me to postpone for a moment the traditional pledge of fealty to you, I should like to say that we in the official Opposition welcome this announcement by the Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. McKeough) which marks a significant step forward in the political life of Ontario.

You will appreciate, Mr. Speaker, that one of the greatest marks of discouragement for people in public life—and you and I can have a private exchange, in the absence of the press, as only a few of their members are presently in the gallery, so we can sort of have an ex cathedra exchange about it. One of the greatest items of discouragement—as I was saying to you—is that there is not much, at least from this press gallery which attends us here, in the way of analytical approach to political developments within the province.

It is particularly germane to say that in the realm of regional government, because I do well recall the first year that I sat in this House with my colleagues, the member for Downsview (Mr. Singer), and the member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Bukator)—that will be ten years ago this June. It was in the first year that they became members of this legislative assembly that they began to advocate the inauguration of regional government in Ontario. And every year after the initial impetus those two members gave it, they returned to that theme. I think both of them—I may not be correct but certainly the member for Downsview—became a member of the so-called Beckett committee. That was a committee attended with great longevity; I think it was reappointed three times—

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Four times.

Mr. Sopha: Thank you, four times. I think perhaps it marks a record in an age that keeps records, that on four different occasions it sat between sessions and its report was interlaced with many specific proposals about the implementation of regional government. And, my friend, the member for Downsview, on times too numerous to mention returned to that theme and pointed to the report of the Beckett committee and urged the government and, indeed, successive Ministers of Municipal Affairs—I think there have been something like three or four in our time, in the last decade—urged upon all of them that forthright steps be taken.

He spoke out of a sense of urgency to get ahead with the task of creating rational economical and sensible units of regional government in this province. So he, at least, can have the satisfaction that today, December 2, 1968, after ten years of efforts, that the Minister of Municipal Affairs—the fourth one, he should bear that in mind—gets up in his place and finally announces a concrete programme for the development of that useful tool of governing the political life of the people in this province.

Now, from the general I go to the particular and take note of the Minister's remarks made in relation to the Sudbury basin. And I preface what I have to say by referring to the fact that my colleague, the hon. member for Sudbury East (Mr. Martel) and my colleague, the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Demers)—the three of us—have been involved in a very intimate way in the studies that have taken place up to this time in the Nickel basin toward the end which the Minister now assists in a very concrete way today.

The Minister properly takes note of the role played by the Sudbury and District Municipal Association under the leadership of Mr. Solski, the mayor of Coniston, and other municipal leaders in the area. What they did was hold public hearings in all parts of the basin. This, of course, was commensurate with the remarks made by the Minister last spring when he said that he would like to see the initiative come from the local area. His remarks fell on fertile ground in Sudbury because the municipal association carried on a very active, very dynamic programme of acquainting the people of the area, the municipal leaders and the councillors about the necessity for creating a rational system for the management of the affairs of the Basin.

Now, I say two things: Throughout the province, not only in Sudbury—I am more familiar with it in that area—but throughout the province for a long time we have had regional services. One of the themes, of course, of that system, in welfare and children's aid—and more recently in education—has been that the boundaries of them have not been coterminous. I am rather of the opinion that this in itself has created a disparity and somewhat of a chaos in the minds of people who, after all, seek to identify with geographical areas. Now, I hope, that will come to an end.

It is unique in the Sudbury basin, of course—and I never lose the opportunity to make mention of this fact—that The Department of Municipal Affairs came along and installed the care of our senior citizens, homes for the aged, welfare and children's aid on a regional basis. That has been a fact of life for a good many years in some of those areas. And, significantly, The Department of Municipal Affairs always had its mind made up, Mr. Speaker, that the mining companies ought to pay their fair share of municipal taxation. The trouble was that The Department of Municipal Affairs never let anyone else know about its thinking. In a very sinister way—I do not think that is too strong a word—that department came in and for the purposes of homes for aged and welfare, it assessed the mining companies and made them contribute as is proper. But, in all the other important areas attached to human beings: education, sewer and water, such relatively minor things as street lighting, police protection and the multiple services that people living in municipal units demand and require in a civilized society, The Department of Municipal Affairs vacillated in its dedication to the principle that the mining companies should pay a just and equitable proportion of the cost thereof.

As a result, of course, it gave the mining companies a free ride, imposing the burden on the human beings as distinct from the corporate enterprise. The human beings, the workers, had to pick up the cost of these very expensive services without assistance from those who organized the exploitation of the vast and rich ore bodies that exist in the Sudbury basin.

Now, it is hoped—and I have always thought this way—that life will change and from this day forward we will make a new approach to this problem. I always envisaged regional government as being the sole method by which we, in the Sudbury basin, could envelop the mining companies, once we got them in a political unit. Then from that time on, the government could no longer be oblivious to the pressure of municipal leaders and would have to remove the legislative exemption to municipal taxation that now exists.

The second thing I would say to the Minister—and I note that I stayed for his speech whereas he has departed as I make mine—the second thing is—and I hope it will be reported to him—that having left the boundaries in the Sudbury basin open I would seriously recommend to him that the unit which is most amenable, in a rational way, to regional government is that geographical area we connote with the term “Nickel basin”. If you will, Mr. Speaker, the Sudbury basin—that remarkable geological anomaly which is so rich in base metal ores—can be pictured as being shaped somewhat as a saucer with the ore bodies to be found around the rim. Sudbury is situated on the southern rim of the Laurentian Shield. Lake Wanapitei is more or less on the northern rim. The united townships of Drury, Denison and Graham are on the western edge and the hamlet of Wanapitei is on the eastern edge. The ore body, of course, is encountered as far away as Onaping, to the north-west.

Well that, if I have drawn you a visual picture Mr. Speaker, is the Sudbury basin, comprising some 20-odd municipalities. And I hope the Minister will indicate to Mr. Kennedy that that is the area that ought to be studied.

The danger of course, and here is where the Smith committee fell into error, the danger is in sending people from southern Ontario who most usually and habitually think that northern Ontario begins at the Jolly Miller in Hogg's Hollow. That is where they think it begins.

They fail to appreciate the vast area of these judicial districts. Sudbury is some 17,000 square miles. I calculated—let me see if I can remember—nine out of every 10 people, live within the Nickel basin as I have defined it. The danger is that larger boundaries, containing a good deal of wilderness area will be defined as being the appropriate unit.

In any event, I will leave the subject and say that I myself, and I am sure my hon. friends from Nickel Belt and from Sudbury East, will avail ourselves of the opportunity to make representation to Mr. Kennedy when he comes.

It is to be noticed, of course, that the Minister has chosen well, because he has chosen a native of the area, a man who is very familiar with the characteristics of the Sudbury basin.

Now, sir, forgive me for digressing in a parochial manner in referring to my own constituency in the light of this important announcement.

I pledge my annual oath of fealty to you, sir, and am delighted to see you robust and in good health and occupying that chair as you do. I want to indicate to you that I myself, sometimes acting under great restraint, will do everything I can to make your life as pleasant as possible in the difficult role that you carry out in managing the affairs in such a desperate lot as there are among the 117 here.

I was delighted to see the member for Waterloo South (Mr. Reuter) named as chairman of the committee. He handles that difficult task very well, his success no doubt was the reason that he was chosen.

I am going to return to the theme of the committees in a moment, but first, before leaving yourself, I want to note to you, sir, that the pecking order that you have lighted upon in the asking of questions is very interesting. You keep referring to the fact that you will continue to allow them to be asked in the order of seniority over there among that raft of 22 that we face every day, until this is finally determined. You say that discussions are on the way. I know very well that I will not be invited to those discussions when this very important decision is made, so I have to give my advice publicly in the Legislature.

I think with the greatest respect—now I speak to you as a judge, you will appreciate what I mean—with the greatest respect sir, you err in your pecking order in that it does not recognize the power centres in the Conservative Party. What you have done, you see, is seem oblivious to the fact that the people from London and Middlesex come first. They are absolutely first.

You have accorded to the one who sits to the Premier's (Mr. Robarts') right seventh position. And this is bad, mark you.

I well recall the Sunday afternoon, motor-ing down from Sudbury, when I was listening to CFRB and they were interviewing the first citizen about his government and the people around him. They said, near the end of the programme—I think it was Gordon Sinclair, who is always capable of the most varied, and the most penetrating questions—Gordon Sinclair asked how much these guys get. That's a very important thing to him.

He said: "Now how many Cabinet ministers have you got, Mr. Robarts?" And he said, "I've got 22". He should have shud-dered when he thought of them.

Mr. Sinclair pursued and he said, now of the 22 who do you think of as being of the greatest assistance to you, of having the keenest mind, the most ability? And without stopping so much as to swallow his bubble gum, the Premier said: "The hon. Charles MacNaughton."

You see, he designated him as the heir apparent, the successor. And his attitude, so far as I can see, has not changed one whit.

So I do not think that you really can follow it up, Mr. Speaker, keeping Lin Piao in that position. You have to recognize that there is a new foundling, the one left on the doorstep by the Smith committee. You know what I mean, and it is opportune to find this out.

You see had the Prime Minister encountered the same response among the electorate of Ontario in other parts of the province as he did in northern Ontario, he would have been the leader of the Opposition. Not a very good one, which is why he did not go to Ottawa. But that is where he would have ended up, because of the 15 members from north of the French River, he only came back with six, the other nine are in the Opposition.

And the only Cabinet ministers that were defeated of course were from northern Ontario. So he did not appoint any more. We remain with the Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Brunelle) and the Attorney General (Mr. Wishart). For the Ministry of Mines which ought to be a northern portfolio, he picked a man literally from Bay Street. That is where his office is and that is his constituency. What is more fitting than for Bay Street to be running the mining industry; they have been doing it for 60 years in this province.

He did not appoint one from northern Ontario. He deprived us, passed over the member for Nickel Belt, who sat there, frantic, almost. He goes home and he waits by the phone, waiting for John P. to call.

The member for Kenora (Mr. Bernier) expected to get a call. But none from northern Ontario.

Well what is more just to a man who rules the province from London, but that he pick another from London? After all this fellow has been doing the constituency work for the last 10 years and an effort must be rewarded.

So really, I wish you success, but I venture to predict that by about Thursday that pecking order of yours will have gone the way of others of the like.

Now it is unfortunate that the Prime Minister is not here. I do not really see that he should come in and listen to my speeches, even though I must say the other day I stayed and listened to his.

I am going to delay the remarks I wanted to make on the constitution and the financial affairs until, hopefully, he returns when I resume on Wednesday, but I do want to say this about the committees.

To anyone sir, who thinks about it, the method of handling the estimates in this House is unsatisfactory. I believe entirely in, and I am glad to follow in every way that I can, the remarks of the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nixon) when he calls for a change in our method of determination on that important part of our work.

Now the Prime Minister said just today, and you ought to have heard him, sir, that the reason this House is called is to pass bills. He seems to say that is the prime and basic reason for assembling this Legislature. I say to him, in greatest respect, not so. That is one of our duties, but surely of equal stature with that duty, is the imposition of the responsibility of the official Opposition with our friends to the left, to examine into the gathering and spending of money in this province. And were I asked to establish them in order, I would put the second, as I have defined it, as of more importance.

The Department of the Treasury and the new Department of National Revenue I single out for special attention. And I say this about those two departments' handling of the estimates: Not only do they deserve the closest inspection, but they also ought to accord to members of the Opposition the greatest flexibility in making complaints and stating their grievances about almost any aspect of the life of the province.

And it is with a great deal of sadness that I recall last year, toward the end of that long hot summer, in the estimates of The Department of the Treasury, that I rose to my feet and I wanted to make some observations about the federal/provincial tax relations. They were a matter of great concern to the government and to thinking people of this province at that time.

But I did not get very far until both the Premier and the Treasurer (Mr. MacNaughton) got up, and with the assistance of the Chairman had me cut short, saying that the leader of the Opposition, as the lead-off speaker, had dealt with that subject and it was appropriate only to a lead-off speech, and accordingly I should not be allowed to continue; and I was not.

Now having protested that; it rather denigrates, I am sure you will agree, from the freedom, the capacity of any private member of this House to have something to say about the very vexing problems that face this nation and its provinces about the ordering of financial affairs in relation to that person out on the street who pays 35 cents out of every dollar he earns. If he earns between $5,000 and $10,000, he pays 35 cents of it to the three levels of government.

Hon. J. H. White (Minister of Revenue): That is a misleading statement.

Mr. Sopha: Well he does—35 cents of each dollar of his income. I checked that today with the director of statistics of the province. If the Minister wants to argue with him, his name is Dr. Cheng. He might call him up.

Hon. Mr. White: That is the proportion of the gross national product.

Mr. Sopha: I am not going to get sidetracked into an alley. If the Minister takes another view of it, he may do so when he gets up to speak.

Did you notice, sir, that since he has become a Minister, he has become even more raucous than he was before, even more? You would have thought the heights of power would have mollified and mitigated him somewhat.

In any event, six months ago, when I presumed to make some remarks about the relations of the two levels of government, I was going to say very quietly, as I am going to say now, that a matter of very anxious concern to the taxpayers of this province is the vast amount of money the federal government spends on national defence.

I make that statement in the light of the remarks made by the Hon. Eric Kierans on television recently, about which he has been questioned in the House of Commons. In the light of his observations, it is open to a member of the Liberal Party to announce three cheers for the forthright way in which he treats it—telling the Canadian people that, as one member of the Cabinet in Ottawa, he believes that Canada might well examine its role in NATO and NORAD.

It can be put very simply this way—if, as a Canadian, you are faced with the choice between supplying a Browning rifle to a Turkish tribesman in Anatolia, and providing medical care to an Indian child at home, then the preference becomes pretty obvious.

The fact is that we as Canadians have deprived ourselves to a large extent of the capacity to make the good life for our people, because of the towering oppression of that $1.7 billion, amounting to 16 per cent of their budget, spent by Ottawa on defence.

Quite in contrast to the debate at the Oxford Union in the 1930's—some members will know to what I refer—but quite in contrast to the climate of thought at that time, it seems to me as I look around the world in which we live that there is a greater disposition on the part of civilized people to shy away from the warlike and the military, and a greater disposition to see if we cannot resolve the great conflicts of the world by ratiocination—by the spirit of compromise and by open mindedness.

Now I submit to you, sir, that to say those things is not to cast oneself in the role of a peacemonger, if that is a dirty word. It is a plea to fellow human beings that maybe in 1968 we can finally determine that the major problems besetting the world are not military, they are not military or defence—the major problems are sociological and economic. They surround the starvation, misery, ignorance, disease that afflict the greater proportion of the inhabitants of this world.

If faced with the choice, I am able to make it easily. To be faced with the choice of paying for this hardware that is poured into NATO or supplying wheat, industrial machinery, medical supplies, school supplies—as a Canadian I am ready to make that choice. Among the people we represent there are a good many who question the spending of that 16 per cent of the federal budget.

If that figure could be reduced, then I dare say there would be greater flexibility at the senior level of government in dealing with the financial problems of the provinces. That figure of $1.7 billion would be somewhere—I recall the Premier saying—would be somewhere in the neighbourhood of the deficit of all 10 provinces. I do not know, but the Minister of National Revenue will speedily correct me on that.

In other words, if that were treated as a surplus, it would just about equal the deficit of the provinces.

I am glad I had the opportunity to say that. I wanted to say those things last spring. Probably they are not very significant, but I say them because, Mr. Speaker, there are a good many people out in the streets who feel the same way.

I just have time to say wistfully that it was a pity that the Globe and Mail, in its article of Friday, following the Premier's speech and its editorial of this morning, so completely distorted the position that we have always taken on this side. The Globe and Mail emphasized a remark that was made off the cuff here directed to the Premier as an aside as indicating that the Official Opposition was chiding him about wanting more powers from Ottawa.

Well, let it be said that the Official Opposition has long ago recognized that one of the most anxious problems of our Confederation—and it is a wonder that we have survived after 100 years of facing one of the greatest problems—perhaps the root problem of our Confederation has been that the provinces are too powerful. They have too many powers. Perhaps if I look back, maybe it would be 10 years ago that I advocated in this House that in a rewriting of the constitution, the provinces might well decide to give up some of their powers to the central government; and I enumerated some of them.

For example, labour relations with industry organized on a nation-wide basis. I do not see why it should not be governed by the central authority. It would certainly do away with the dangers implicit in the Act of the government of British Columbia this day, when a law goes into force saying that the Cabinet of British Columbia has the power to declare an industry to be essential, any industry, and to direct compulsory arbitration.

We have seen irresponsible labour legislation in various parts of this province.

Another area in which I advocated giving up legislative authority was over the trust companies and other financial institutions, so as to make power over the monetary system—the federal government now has it over banks—a composite matter so that government could truly and effectively influence the monetary policy of this country.

The Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs (Mr. Rowntree) has recently come into this by way of recent announcements of his.

The third one is marketing. I do not see why two different inspectors should look at the same apple and determine who has the right to grade it on the basis of whether it is going to be sold in Belgium or whether it is going to be sold in Duntroon. It seems to me rather a silly duplication of effort.

A fourth one of course is national securities legislation. The charade that goes on in this country of the disparate jurisdiction over the marketing of securities is just bewildering and the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs is making progress in that area.

One of the banes, one of the great inhibitions and the limitations to the political development of this country—as I said in an aside to the first citizen on Thursday last—has been the failure of the politicians in this country, in the 68 years of this century, to come to some resolution around the common round table in the Canadian way as to what shall be the most meaningful and efficient distribution of legislative power!

That is the great inhibition on our political development, and I hope and pray that at the conference—to take place in mid-month—that the politicians will begin from the springboard of saying to each other, Mr. Speaker: Now look, let us see whether we cannot set out rational, intelligent and effective areas over which each of the levels of government should be responsible.

I want the federal government to have legislative authority over all those things that concern Canada as a nation. I want the provincial governments to have legislative authority over those things that affect Canadians as human beings, all those intimate matters of concern that are personal to the human. We have many of them now.

It is from that basis that I see a sensible approach to the final resolution of these great constitutional difficulties that have beset us over the first seven decades of this century.

Mr. Speaker, should I move the adjournment?

Mr. Sopha moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): I move resolution No. 1, standing in my name, which has just been read.

Clerk of the House: Notice of motion No. 9, by Mr. Deans.

RESOLUTION: That this government should introduce legislation for the protection of tenants of self-contained units in multiple dwelling accommodation and single family dwellings to include: 1. Abolishing the landlord's right of distress. 10. Authorizing the courts to delete any clause of a lease which, in the court's opinion, is unreasonable. And further, the government should so amend The Municipal Act as to permit municipalities to pass by-laws governing and controlling terminations of leases and the levels of rents imposed on rental properties within these municipalities.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): I move resolution No. 9, standing in my name, which has just been read.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Downsview has the floor.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, in speaking to this resolution and in following my hon. colleague from Sudbury (Mr. Sopha)—as he was talking about what happened in the north last October 17—it recalled to my mind the remarks of one Ernie Jackson, who I think is well known to members on that side of the House, when he was reviewing the events of last October 17. His remark apparently to his leader was: "We are losing in the cities."

I think as you look around the membership of this House you will recognize that the Tories are losing in the cities and they are losing in the north. Their base of power is rapidly being reduced from centres where there are concentrations of people. Why, Mr. Speaker? Because the Tory party does not seem to care about individual rights and the protection of those rights.

I am very sorry that the Minister of Trade and Development (Mr. Randall) is not in his seat because he has been assigned the responsibility for providing housing in this province. There has not been a more dismal failure by any Minister—in my opinion and in my experience in this House—than that exhibited by this Minister in the provision of housing for the people of Ontario.

It is government policy apparently that housing does not have a high priority. The end result, Mr. Speaker, here in Metropolitan Toronto is that we probably have a housing crisis of the gravest consequences that has existed since Toronto came about. The end result of it is that we are selling 50-foot serviced lots in the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto as far north as Finch and Sheppard for $15,000 a lot. This is one of the results of the lack of a housing policy of this government.

Then, of course, once you get the lot—if you can afford it, Mr. Speaker—you have to put a house on it and by the time you finish with the house you are up to $30,000. Where then do people go to live? How do they acquire houses? How do people build apartment buildings? What kind of rents have to be charged? What kind of treatment is given to tenants?

Well, Mr. Speaker, this again is where the government exhibits its crass lack of concern about the interests of the people who live in our cities. This is what Mr. Jackson was talking about when he told his Premier that "We are losing in the cities." This is why they were losing in the cities.

What has happened, Mr. Speaker, in the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto? It is as though one small group of people had cornered all the coffee in the world and people continued to want to buy coffee. The people who controlled it then decided since they have the monopoly they can charge as much for it as they want, and the price of coffee went up. This has happened occasionally in our economic system.

What has happened here in Metropolitan Toronto is that a small group of people have managed to control all of the land on which you can build apartments. The price is so high that very few other people can get into that kind of economic endeavour. The end result—land being so scarce, the cost being so high and there being no alternative—is that the tenants of this province unfortunately are at the mercy of the people who control all of the coffee in the world. They are at the mercy of the people who control the buildings. When we have a vacancy rate of a fraction of 1 per cent of all of the apartment units in this great city, it is small wonder that the law is the law as determined by the landlords, particularly when the government sits silent and will not change the law.

It was more than nine months ago, Mr. Speaker, when I debated and put forward the same resolution that stands in my name today and what was the action of government? Well, there was a reference to the law reform commission. The Attorney General (Mr. Wishart) advised us a few days ago the law reform commission will report and, hopefully, some day soon someone might get down to examining the report.

Maybe it is going to follow the programme adopted, insofar as our financial crisis is concerned. There will be a select committee to examine the report of the law reform committee. There will be a Cabinet committee to examine those two committees' reports. We will get white papers and blue papers, and so on, and maybe in a year, two years, five years—who knows—we are going to have a new law affecting the rights of landlords and tenants.

Well, Mr. Speaker, it is going to be a little late, as so many actions of this government are more than a little late. It was eight months ago, Mr. Speaker—something over eight months ago—the date was March 20 of this year—that I read to this House extracts from this document—the wonderful lease used by the Ontario Housing Corporation. With some embarrassment, I guess, the government suggested they were going to have it revised.

I asked the Minister of Trade and Development when we would be likely to see that revision. That was just a few days ago. He said, "Hopefully, within a month we are going to see a new form of lease for the Ontario Housing Corporation."

Mr. Speaker, you are a member of the Law Society of Upper Canada. I would suspect that on occasion when you were in private practice clients came to you and said, "Will you draft me a lease?" I would suspect that you would not have kept those clients very long if you had to say, "It is going to take nine months to prepare a new draft of a lease." Yet the government, with all of the authority it has at its command—with legal departments in every single branch—nine months having gone by, are unable to bring for the tenants of the Ontario Housing Corporation a lease that is fair and a lease that is equitable.

What other answer can there be, Mr. Speaker, than that the government does not care—that the idea of protecting tenants in public housing just is not very high on their priority list? Either that, or they have not enough talent at their command to get somebody to redraft one of the most unjust documents that I have ever had the misfortune to deal with. It just does not make sense.

Mr. Speaker, there was another thing added in recent months to the problems affecting tenants. The government, during the last election campaign, talked about the rebate that was going to result to landlords and tenants and so on insofar as municipal taxes were concerned. Some $150 million of our money is being spent on this and it may be that some of the financial nightmare that we face is a result of this intemperate decision.

However, you will recall, sir; that at the time this announcement was made, some of us pointed out immediately that the ability to get this money back to tenants was very, very limited. We were assured by the Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. McKeough) and others: "Do not worry about it, everything will be fine." My attention is drawn to an article that appeared on the front page of today's Star under the by-line of one John Doig. He quotes at some length an official—I gather in The Department of Municipal Affairs—and just let me read a very few brief extracts from that:

"But some smaller landlords are trying to pocket the government handout," says Leonard Wood—

And he is that official, sir,

—who is running a special rebate information service at Queen's Park.

And the telephone number is there for anyone who wants it.

"A few tenants have told us their landlords have just flatly refused to pay," says Mr. Wood.

Mr. Wood, an official apparently charged by the Minister of Municipal Affairs, relates this to the gentleman who wrote the article. This does not seem to bother Mr. Wood very much—because things are really difficult. Mr. Wood gets on a little further and says:

"Some of the calls are dealt with. Other calls during the last few months indicate that perhaps about 150 smaller landlords have refused point blank to pass on the rebate."

Another paragraph says:

"But securing a conviction against a landlord would involve the tenant in time consuming trouble. He would have to swear an information at a police station and be prepared to appear in court as a witness if a prosecution follows. Many tenants do not want to take that action to get back their $55."

These are all things we warned the government about, Mr. Speaker, and these are all things the government did not see fit to take any action about.

The poor tenants again are left to their own devices if they are going to get any protection. We have this horrible statute and there is no remedy, apparently, in this time of crisis—government created crisis—which will allow tenants to adequately protect themselves.

My leader, sir, in his remarks in the Throne debate a few days ago, said that we, with great reluctance, were going to support a form of selective and voluntary rent control by municipalities, somewhat along the lines suggested by the city of Ottawa in its application for a private bill.

Let me say, sir, it is with great regret that my colleagues and I came to that conclusion that we must do this. We must do this because of the woeful ineptitude of the government in providing proper protection for tenants and proper accommodation so that they can be a free market when it comes to finding apartment accommodation for themselves. This speaks for itself and must follow as night the day that this unusual kind of action would not have to be even put forward in this House if the government had been doing its job.

Mr. Speaker, we hear from the Treasurer (Mr. MacNaughton) of the province of Ontario about the sad financial situation in which we find ourselves. The resolution we now put forward is not going to cost the government any money. All they have to do is get some intelligent legal draftsmen and perhaps a few students of the law to sit down for a concentrated period and rewrite unfair leases and redraft a statute that, by reason of its old fashioned approach, obviously screams for reform.

There must be a new law of landlord and tenant written in accordance with conditions as they exist today and designed to alleviate the aggravated conditions promoted by this government.

You know, sir, the law that we have here in this province. And you well know this was brought over from England. It was originally drafted to protect the landed gentry against the peons—against the people who would dare interfere with the rights of landed gentry in the use and enjoyment of their property in keeping the mass of the people subjugated. The English, in their good sense, had changed that law many years ago, but not in Ontario.

Why is this matter current today? It is important today because the tenant has no opportunity to bargain in the free market for accommodation. He is lucky if he can find an apartment and, once he gets in, then he is at the mercy, in so many cases, of the ruthless apartment owner.

Let me say quickly, sir—

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): Time.

Mr. Singer: No, it is not time. I will be good for a few minutes yet.

Let me say quickly, sir, that there are many responsible landlords who treat tenants properly and fairly and who, once having made a bargain, stick with it.

Let me say in addition, sir, that there are occasionally irresponsible tenants—some people will say there are many irresponsible tenants—who destroy landlords' property—who do not take any great interest in the landlords' property. These facts are true. The obvious fact, however, is that the majority of tenants are no longer in a position in which they are able to bargain, and bargain fairly, for a choice in accommodation and for a contract in which they are going to have reasonable protection.

An Act, a new Act must be drafted and I cannot understand why the Attorney General lets the law reform commission dawdle so long about things that are so important.

Ask Jackson why you lost the seats in the city. This is one of the reasons why you lost the seats in the city—you are not concerned about tenants; you are not concerned about protecting their rights.

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): Is that the reason?

Mr. Singer: Wood—this fellow you have hired to try and help the tenants here—says tough, too bad, unfortunately if you want to get your rebate you will have to go to court. And if it is not worth your while in time and in money, then you are going to lose your $55.

This is so obvious, Mr. Speaker, but it is unfortunate in the timing of this private members' hour, that there are two resolutions on today. Even if I had the full hour to talk, I still could not cover this field adequately.

However, the various points made in my resolution, I think, speak for themselves. The ones made in the resolution put forward by the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. Deans) make good sense. The remarks that I put on the record and are in Hansard last year, about nine months ago, equally make sense. I am going to come back to this when it is my turn to participate in the Throne debate.

I would urge, Mr. Speaker, with all the power at my command, that the government begin to concern itself with the rights of people and maybe then, Mr. Jackson will not have to weep quite so loudly when the time of the next election rolls about.

I think it is too late for this government. It is just sad that a government that has been entrenched for 25 years has lost all sense of proportion and a real feeling of concern for the rights of people who, through no fault of their own, but really through the fault of government, are forced into an untenable position when it comes to having decent rental accommodation and decent protection in the law to help them.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak to this resolution I do so with the feeling of some frustration, knowing that the probable outcome of this effort and exercise will be complete government neglect.

I would point out though, to you, sir, and to the member for Downsview (Mr. Singer) and perhaps to the government, that the reason I have this on the order paper is not for the purpose of winning votes in urban communities, but for the purpose of ensuring that tenants in this province receive a fair and reasonable tenancy.

The tenants I talk about are tenants not only in apartment buildings owned by private developers, but also are tenants of the Ontario Housing Corporation. I was somewhat disturbed today to find that the Minister in charge of the Act which administers or which has embodied in it, the Municipal tax rebate, does not feel that it is his responsibility to ensure that every tenant, including those in Ontario housing, would be able to receive this. And he does not feel—I am sorry he is not here—he does not feel that it is his responsibility to ensure that the terms of the regulations presently being drafted, would be properly enforced even with those properties that are owned by Ontario Housing Corporation.

I want to direct my remarks in four areas this afternoon, because it is, as the member for Downsview said, a thing that could take us all day. We could quite conceivably discuss this from now until next week at this time and really not have arrived at the final conclusion.

I would begin so by suggesting that the matter of abolishing security deposits is one matter which must receive immediate attention. It is obvious from the amount of mail that one receives that the conditions imposed upon tenants with regard to security deposits are inhuman and outrageous.

I hold, for any member to see, the amount of mail that has been received, from people who have not received their security deposit upon leaving an apartment. If time was available, I would read to you all of these letters in order that you fully understand exactly what this problem is.

In the city of Toronto there is some $15 million being held by apartment owners; money that belongs to the tenants and it is being held as a deposit for what no one is quite sure and how you get it back is equally obscure.

It has become increasingly more difficult over the past two years to get the security deposit back even though you leave your apartment in what could be termed reasonable condition. I do not think that it is too much to ask that the entire area of security deposits be reviewed. I think it is abundantly reasonable to request that there be no provision in any lease drawn up that would suggest or demand that any person leave on deposit, with anyone else, any amount of money to show any kind of good faith or allow this person to claim for damages real or imagined.

If a person owning an apartment building finds that the apartment has been damaged in any way, the law is quite clear—the recourse is open and he can follow it the same as any other individual in this society. There is no right and no need for security deposits to be charged by any individual. Therefore, I call upon the government to enact legislation now, to eliminate and to do away with entirely, security deposits for apartment dwellers.

It might be said, just in passing, that in Toronto there is one apartment owner who boasts of the fact that he expects to make some $20,000 a year on security deposits. It has become a source of income—and a source that the people of this province can ill afford.

In regard to standard lease forms, I would suggest that this government should immediately draw up a standard lease form; one which is written in the English that is spoken by the majority of people of today, one that lays out exactly what can be expected of a person when he takes occupancy of an apartment, in order that it is clearly understood what the terms of this occupancy shall be.

In Ontario we have any number of leases. I have three here. There are probably dozens upon dozens. I have seen many others. Each one basically the same, but with slight differences and the slight differences are where the problem arises. Because, unless one is a lawyer or unless one is fairly well educated, it becomes increasingly more difficult to determine what is intended by the leases. Now, I understand that the Urban Development Institute has come up with a lease that is reasonable in its content. The unfortunate part, of course, is that all apartment owners in the area are not necessarily part of the Urban Development Institute. There is no guarantee if the building is sold from one to another, that it will be sold to another person who is a part of the Urban Development Institute. Because of this, we find cases where people have signed a lease that was reasonable only to find that the new owner will not abide by it. I suggest that if we were to draw up a proper standard lease form in this province, this kind of unscrupulous dealing could be done away with.

There are people who have signed: I have one here, for example, who signed a lease in April, the apartment was sold in April, and she discovered that the lease she had signed was of no real value. This is indeed an unfortunate circumstance.

The matter of adequate standard of maintenance and health is one that has come up in Toronto very recently and one in which the deputy leader of this party has taken a very active part and played a rather important role. I do not think one has to go to many apartments, particularly the newer ones—strange though it may seem—to discover that they are not being properly maintained. In any lease that is drawn up there must be adequate provision for the maintenance—both from the point of view of health and of maintenance of the building—in order that it be in a safe condition. I suggest that this could be a function of this government and they should immediately take action upon this.

Finally, I want to talk about the area of rental control. Over the past year and a half—perhaps going back as far as five years—rents have risen without any consideration for the ability to pay of the people who must rent accommodation. In the past six months rents have increased astronomically and much of this increase has been laid at the feet of the government—perhaps wrongly—because of the introduction of the tax rebate. There have been many landlords who have used this as a reason for raising the rents.

I have here a letter, if I can just put my hand on it, which is sent out by one development company called Garden View Properties Limited, in the city of Hamilton. I am quite sure that many members have read a letter not unlike this, but I will read it into the record. It says:

Due to the new Ontario legislation of assessing buildings, collecting of taxes and further rebating of taxes, we, the management have no other alternative than to increase the rent of apartments. The new rent will be . . .

And they state a figure of $135 for an apartment plus whatever it is for one reserved parking space or carport, making a total of $135.

This was an increase of some $12 a month. This was laid at the feet of this government—wrongly—but it was used against the dwellers of this particular apartment in order to try and force them to pay an additional premium for their apartment. This $12 is not a lot when one takes into consideration the fact that I attended a meeting not three weeks ago at which 25 out of the 50 apartments or the units in the apartment building are occupied by senior citizens on fixed incomes, and that they had their rents increased by a letter identical to this from the same company by $15 a month.

Another building in the east end of the city of Hamilton had rents increased by $50 a month. I suggest that reluctant though we might be to see rent controls imposed, it has become a necessity in this day and age. It is obvious that the apartment owners feel no sense of public responsibility, they have no feeling for the aged. Their only concern is to make more and more and more money. The time has come when we in this government and when you in that government there—I should say perhaps—must recognize, firstly, that accommodation is a necessity of life and is a right of every individual in this province. And secondly, that there is only one way that this can be guaranteed: that is, that the rents being charged will be within the ability of the people who must pay them to pay.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that the government will not feel the necessity to have us bring this up again one year hence. I hope that before the next session we will have legislation covering just these things that I have mentioned and that we will not have to stand in this House and make a plea on behalf of the people of this province for the things that are rightfully theirs. My colleague, the member for Lakeshore (Mr. Lawlor), has comments that he wishes to make on this matter and I will therefore yield the floor.

Mr. G. A. Kerr (Halton West): Mr. Speaker, I find myself in agreement with much of what is in these resolutions. For example, in the resolution of the hon. member for Downsview I agree with items 1, 2, 4, 5, 6 and 7. I think possibly they are similar to most of the ones contained in the resolution of the hon. member for Wentworth. He has added one or two more and time will not permit me, sir, to deal with them.

I think both hon. members have submitted valid reasons why these items should be considered by the government and I will ignore naturally the rather partisan remarks of the hon. member for Downsview, but I must say that the resolution that he has posed and he proposed a year ago should be taken very seriously. I think, for example, Mr. Speaker, that a lease that contains a clause whereby a tenant precludes or waives his right under The Landlord and Tenant Act or any Act of the province of Ontario is an affront and an insult to this Legislature. Certainly, for example, there should be a standard form of lease and its provisions should be an appendix or a schedule to a reformed Landlord and Tenant Act. These are the things that I favour; I have indicated what I do favour and I hope that they will be enacted very shortly.

However, Mr. Speaker, I have mixed feelings about incorporating protection for tenants in a bill of rights. Historically in Canada, the effectiveness of a bill of rights is not too satisfactory. It is subject to all kinds of interpretation and could become embroiled in some sort of a constitutional debate. I suggest that we amend The Landlord and Tenant Act where necessary and we reform the legislation that we have now—which is rather archaic—and introduce new legislation if it is necessary to meet, as has been suggested, our present day circumstances.

Regarding the third provision dealing with deposits, the hon. member for Wentworth spent some time on this point. I think we should remember, Mr. Speaker, that there are many landlords and many tenants in Ontario. Most of them are getting along, most of them are law-abiding and ethical and rarely does either party ever rely on or enforce some of the inequitable or harsh provisions of a lease. However, there are exceptions. There are both landlords and tenants who can make life difficult; it is important, therefore, that our laws and regulations between the parties be equitable. A tenant who is indifferent or contemptuous of property of others can put a landlord to a great deal of expense and trouble. We must remember that all landlords are not absentee property-holding barons, they are not all living in Toronto and many have large commitments to make. Many have mortgages—sometimes two or three—they have taxes to pay and repairs to make. If many tenants are late with their rent or cause excessive damage or vacate the premises without notice and leave the province, for example, other tenants will suffer. I suggest, therefore, that a small deposit is not unreasonable, say a maximum of about $50 and this will help in such circumstances. This amount should be set out in the lease; there should be an acknowledgment of payment at the time the lease is signed; and it should be held as a trust fund and interest should be credited to the tenant.

Landlords should be required to publish statements at least once a year of the deposits that they hold in trust and the individual amount or total of each deposit owing to each tenant. If the deposit is not returned when the premises are vacated because of damage, the landlord must inform the tenant in writing what amount is being deducted, what repairs have to be made, and the amount or cost of those repairs should be corroborated by a tradesman's estimate. This should be done before the tenant leaves and if the tenant is not satisfied I think he has his remedies in the courts.

Now this brings me to the part of the resolution regarding, Mr. Speaker, a tenants' appeal board. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that if the landlord and tenant laws are reformed there is less reason for an appeal board. I would think that the facilities, for example, of our division courts could be used for landlord and tenant cases. Possibly we could set aside a special day for such battles exclusively. I realize that we must have speedy justice and we must have a swift remedy. We have the necessary structure in our division courts for such claims—it should be utilized and streamlined so as to make such an appeal board unnecessary.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that such a board could be slower and more frustrating to all parties concerned than a judicial decision.

I understand that the Ontario Law Reform Commission is looking at the present time—and it has been mentioned by the hon. members opposite—looking at the whole field of laws affecting landlords and tenants. I also understand that the commission's recommendations will be available in a very short time to the Attorney General and I think that there is no reason, if that is the case, why we should not have new legislation at this session of the Legislature.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that other matters need attention which are not contained in either members' resolutions. I think, for example, that the provision in a lease whereby if the building is sold by the lessor the tenant may be required to vacate the premises within 90 days of such sale upon notice should be prohibited. This provision is not to obtain in vacant apartments or premises; all this is for is to allow new owners to raise rents and obtain new leases. In other words, to break the existing lease regardless of the length of its term or whether or not the tenant has abided by the terms of his lease.

I think the repair clause in present leases is inequitable. Landlords should be liable for damages that are caused by their negligence. The right to quiet enjoyment should mean that landlords should not be able to enter occupied apartments, at their own whim at any time of day without reasonable notice. The only exception should be in an emergency or a complaint by another tenant—there may be a fire, or a fight, or a tap causing a sink or tub to overflow.

All leases should be completed in full before a tenant signs it and the signed copy must be given to the tenant within a few days of possession. If there is a company involved, the company seal should be attached and anybody that signs as a lessor, or landlord, and the lease is in effect for three, four, or five months, whoever is the landlord should be bound by the terms of that lease. The lease, in my opinion, Mr. Speaker, should be the final document evidencing the rights and obligations of both parties. Any provisional lease allowing a landlord to make other or further rules or regulations should be prohibited.

When a landlord allows a tenant to sublet, the original tenant should no longer be obligated in any way to the landlord under the original lease.

Mr. Speaker, there are many other speakers to follow me and all I would like to say in closing is that as Ontario usually leads the way in Canada in all aspects of law reform the laws dealing with landlords and tenants I predict will be no exception.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, there is no greater urgency in the change of our laws than having to do with the laws between a landlord and tenant.

Now the last speaker, the member for Halton West (Mr. Kerr), has agreed in part with the two previous speakers and I only wish that the member for Halton West spoke for the government, but the way that the government has ignored the landlord and tenant situation in this province, he is pretty obviously speaking for himself.

The present landlord and tenant laws that we have today are basically the same as about the year 1200. They are nearly 800 years old. Now, when we think of the tremendous changes that have taken place, even in the last few years, it is very obvious that we need some vigorous measures that are going to restore some type of sanity and give a security to the living conditions of hundreds and thousands of tenants, particularly in the large urban areas.

A few years ago when a person would rent an apartment it was usually in a duplex or, in some cases, in buildings that at most had 20 suites. Today we have a situation in Metropolitan Toronto where we have somewhere in the neighbourhood of between 170,000 and 200,000 people living in apartments and as a result there is a new type of serf in our society. I say to you in all seriousness, Mr. Speaker, that the tenants in these modern complexes are becoming serfs. They are told if and when they can have a TV antenna. They are told who can deliver bread to their door; who can deliver milk. They can literally be locked out—even when they are in the right. I know of cases where people have paid their rent—the landlord has said, “you have not paid the rent”, and when the tenant has come back to his apartment in the evening his door is locked. Certainly, as the member from Halton West said, he has recourse to the courts. In one case I have in mind the tenant did go to the courts to prove that he had paid the rent, but in the meantime—it took months to prove the righteousness of his case. So I say that one of the major reforms among the many, and the time we have at our disposal, we certainly cannot go into all the details of the landlord and tenants situation, but one of the major reforms that should be made is that a landlord should no longer have the right to distress. It has become simply too involved.

The tenant is completely at the mercy of the landlord. Despite the fact that there are no doubt many individuals who own apartments and try to do their best, the type of landlord we seem to have today is as vicious and greedy an individual as you can find anywhere in our society. It is time for the government to step in.

There are many things in the two resolutions before us that you and I, 10 or 15 years ago would have abhorred because they interfere with private enterprise, with the freedom of choice. But for hundreds and thousands of people in this province today there is no freedom of choice. It is nonsense to talk about a freedom of choice. When the rent goes up they say: Move if you do not like the price. Where do they move to? And with the high cost of moving, it only adds to the cost of trying to live in this province of ours.

So I say to you, Mr. Speaker, and particularly through you to the members of the government bench—let us have some strong and vigorous action.

I am very happy that my leader has spoken out in favour of rent control. I am one of those individuals who think rent control is long overdue. We are fools to just sit around and get calls from constituents saying: “My rent has gone up three times this year. What can I do?”

They can do absolutely nothing but get out, and again where can they go? It is all right to talk about landlords facing the rising cost of living and rising taxes, but despite the fact that in Metropolitan Toronto the taxes went down this year as a result of the legislation that was passed in this House a year ago, the rents are still going up and up and up. Do we require any more evidence that the landlord today simply must be controlled? That is why I feel we need an appeal board, or a review board. I do not care what you call it, as long as we get some action. They must see to it that the right of distress is done away with, that we have standardized leases, that rents are properly controlled.

It is ridiculous that a landlord can come up with a detailed document like this lease I have here and literally enslave the individual that we call the tenant. This is why I again appeal, with all the fervour at my command, that we do everything we possibly can. Normally a landlord can plan on a vacancy of 10 per cent in his apartments and he can make it a real going concern.

Today there is a vacancy of less than 1 per cent, so do not let the landlords try to kid you they are faced with the high cost of living. They have never had it so good. The landlords have never had it so good—the tenants have never had it so bad. And remember this—when you have restrictions against children, and when people are paying such high rents that they cannot save to buy their own homes, what is going to happen to our communities when we bear in mind that many experts say that almost 85 per cent of the people of this province will live in apartments by the year 2000? It means that fewer and fewer people, that is the landlords, are going to control the living conditions of very many hundreds of thousands of people who are becoming the modern serf of the twentieth century.

So I urge, Mr. Speaker, through you, that the members in this House, and particularly the members on the government bench, not only support this resolution but bring in legislation with some guts. Let us quit talking out these important resolutions. Let us have some action from a government that has certainly delayed and delayed and delayed. It is time for action.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak to these resolutions today I would take a moment to remind you of a certain misadventure or peradventure, or some sort of thing that went on in the House a year ago today approximately, when speaking on the same issue, at the same time, with the same speaker following me. I have never been forgiven by the member for York East (Mr. Meen) for moving the adjournment of the debate in the light of the dearth of members opposite.

There are a goodly number of faces showing today; I shall restrain myself on this occasion, particularly in the light of the member for York East's desire to speak. I shall try to give him a few moments and get on with this.

At that time I said that while we have lots of stupid, inadequate, confused and interminable laws in this province—and I would mention in this context what Smith has to say about our succession duties statutes—and in connection even with things like mechanics liens actions and the stuff we will be dealing with tomorrow, Mr. Speaker, namely expropriation. What a tangled jungle of verbiage we are in the process of cleaning out—at least the underbrush—it is far from perfect even as it is, as we will find out. In any event, this landlord and tenant law is the single most vicious law in our statutes for some of the reasons indicated by the hon. members who have spoken before me.

The tenant in Ontario has only two rights—one which is nebulous, and the one which is conquering. He has the right to quiet possession, which does not mean "quiet" possession at all—it has something to do with titles. Secondly he has the right to pay his rent and to pay it on time.

Apart from that in the whole range of these leases and even as set forth in The Landlord and Tenant Act, he is responsible for practically everything else—for repairs, the business of securing the deposits. He cannot sign or sublet without leave. And whether we do anything else or not under this law, due to the present exigencies in Ontario, the notices to vacate must be extended—at least six months' notice to vacate must be given, and within that time the rents may not be raised.

Whether we do anything else or not, we must rectify the problems of evictions, particularly regarding the use of the bailiffs, that ancient institution which we—the member for Downsview and myself—took off on last year, with no effect that I can see thus far. Then the position with respect to distress—a most antiquated thing which does the landlord no good and which usually deprives the tenant of the little wherewithal he has.

The arrangements under these leases are fundamentally opposed to any concept of justice. Justice involves mutuality. Here you have the relative position of the two parties completely disproportioned and overbalanced. The economic power lies all on one side and the dictatorial influence falls one way to the detriment of the other fellow who is supposed to be bargaining in some kind of equality of relationship under contract. If that is the case, then the law itself, by that very factor, rules itself out.

Our whole legal structure is developed in the direction of increasing mutualities, of balancing out in labour relations, in the whole realm of the securities market. The whole theory is to put people in the position where they can deal justly, fairly and somewhat equally with each other.

For the rest of my remarks, Mr. Speaker, I shall concentrate on rental control. We have come from last year's position of asking for a rental review board simply to shame them into some form of decency, to a position where shame no longer counts.

This mentality, I suggest, is a product of this society, it is not something particularly out of the way. We all more or less suffer from it. But this happens to be where the rub is at the moment and we have to go from review boards to actual control. The argument is that to invoke rent control is self-defeating because it will drive capital out of that particular market and the number of units which will be available in future to meet the demand will decrease, rather than increase, under those circumstances.

I think we do have to meet that squarely, Mr. Speaker. The way I suggest in which it can be done is that, perhaps, while units presently being rented be placed under control, all new developmental units going into effect after a certain date are not placed under control—or at least, are not placed under such controls for a certain period of time. Then the economic advantages may flow back into the hands of the lessor and will stimulate, rather than decrease, the number of new units that will come on to the market.

It has been said to me that some landlords, particularly of large apartment blocks, are increasing their rents at the present time throughout all Ontario. Particularly in those areas like Ottawa, North York, Windsor, Kingston, and so on, which are appealing to or have passed by-laws to this Legislature to give them, in their municipal power, the option to impose these rental controls within their jurisdictions, which I certainly think we ought to give them.

In those particular areas, I say landlords are increasing rentals in anticipation of municipalities being given the power. If such is the case, then a fortiori, for all the more reason therefore, is it necessary that rental controls do be brought in to foreshorten and to catch and to roll back the particular viciousness that is involved in this particular anticipation.

Therefore, in order to give my friend a moment's time in any event, I would wind up on the basis that the extended notices ought to be given and that controls ought to be invoked, at least on a temporary basis. If they are rolled back to a certain date—say January 1, 1966, perhaps—in order to make for fairness certain rental escalation causes, based on cost of living or what not, might be written into them so that no injustices are done the opposite way.

Mr. A. K. Meen (York East): Mr. Speaker, to begin with may I express my appreciation to the hon. member for Lakeshore for so graciously extending a little bit of his 10-minute period toward the very end of this hour devoted to us private members.

However, I do not want to waste any more of it than that inasmuch as we do want to terminate as close to six as possible. I will complete my remarks as quickly as possible, Mr. Speaker.

I have been appalled, over the years, at the number of offers to lease I have encountered which had some reference to the tenant agreeing to execute a lease on "the lessor's standard form of lease." I am sure every lawyer in this House has seen that kind of offer. And of course, it is outrageous. You then come up with a lessor's form of lease with the most dreadful, most biased terms in favour of the landlord, of course.

To my mind there should be some standard form of lease; I am not convinced that it should be immutable. I do believe that the parties should be able, in some circumstances, to be able to alter those to suit. But I believe, nevertheless, as expressed by the hon. member for Halton West, that some standardized form should be included in a revised form of our landlord and tenant legislation. The sooner that is done the better. Then if the parties want to execute an offer to lease—generally they are very abbreviated in form—they can refer to that standard. Or, even better, they can attach a copy of it to the agreement to lease, which then becomes a part of the subject of being formally completed.

I would think, in dealing with the part of the resolution concerning deposits, that this is a sort of two way street. If you have tenants who are transitory in nature, and move out and leave rent unpaid or leave a damaged apartment, the inevitable beneficiaries of that law are the other tenants in that apartment. Because, inevitably, the landlord who has to bear that cost, who has to make those repairs and—despite the law that is in his favour entitling him to recovery of his claim from his erstwhile tenant—is unable to find that tenant, and has to bear that loss out of his revenues, eventually passes that along to his other tenants in the form of increased rental.

However, I do subscribe to the view that this $15 million mentioned by the hon. member for Wentworth—$15 million held by various landlords throughout this domain—might very well be accessible at an interest rate of, let us say 6 per cent, as a statutory form of interest to be paid to the tenant, and in that way, let us say acceded annually against his rental. He gets the benefit of the money that his landlord is holding. The landlord has to benefit from the use of the money; he has it there as security if such is required at some later time. The eventual beneficiaries of all of that are, of course, the 99 out of 100 perfectly satisfactory tenants.

Mr. Singer: Why not 9 per cent, the rate at which he has to borrow?

Mr. Meen: The hon. member is suggesting an annual rate.

I would suppose there might be some merit in setting it at a higher rate than 6 per cent. We have traditionally set interest rates by statute at somewhat less than going rates to avoid any large sums being taken into these accounts, as I understand it. But this would certainly, by setting it at a higher rate—the going rate at the banks, that sort of thing—might very well justify it. It might cut down the amount of deposits that are taken by the landlords, and certainly would hasten their return.

I agree with the member for Halton West when he observes that this money should be held in trust. Bankruptcies and the like would then not prejudice the moneys that had been held. But I would have some reservations about suggesting that they should be wiped out entirely. I think in the long run that could be detrimental to the tenant.

I wonder if I might ask the hon. member, through you, Mr. Speaker, if he has ever lived in an apartment in which there were two or three or four milk deliveries every morning? I can tell him that I have, and I think that this problem of limiting the deliveries in apartments to one milk delivery, one bread delivery, and that sort of thing, may have its advantages as well as its disadvantages. I have also lived in an apartment in which there was such a restriction and in my case I did not know about the restriction until after I had signed the lease. Well, that is not very good either. It can be very irritating and I would suggest that something ought to be done.

Mr. Lawlor: Did the member not read his lease first?

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): Lawyers never do.

Mr. Meen: That is a very good question, Mr. Speaker, I did not read the lease before I signed it. That is a shameful admission, but I think it might very well be said that a shoemaker's children sometimes go barefoot. In any event, this kind of clause may very well be an advantage to a tenant but it should be set out in bold face type in any lease, not in the regulations and not in the fine print of the lease. I would suggest, however, that it can lead to abuses. Some landlords, it is alleged, are taking commissions back from the people who get the concession in their apartment buildings. That should be outlawed. I do not know how one would police it but certainly it should be, it is contrary to good conscience and should not be permitted.

Mr. Speaker, we have passed the witching hour of six o'clock and I therefore, with regret because I did have some other observations to make, but with regret I think I should move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): Tomorrow we will continue with the Throne Debate.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) advised us that Tuesday was going to be second reading of The Expropriation Act. Is that not correct? Or have the plans changed again?

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister did mention that would be the order of business on Friday, I think. I am not sure whether that would interfere with the hon. member for Sudbury continuing his debate.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sudbury stated he would continue on Wednesday.

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): He said there would be a shuffle.

An hon. member: He will probably go from Tuesday to Wednesday.

Mr. Singer: It is clear then that we are debating second reading of The Expropriation Act?

Mr. Speaker: Yes.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Better get together over there.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 6.05 o'clock, p.m.

THE AIR POLLUTION CONTROL ACT, 1968-1969

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park) moves first reading of bill intituled, The Air Pollution Control Act, 1968-1969.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to set standards for the consumption of fuel in this province, which will lower the level of sulphur in that fuel so as to eliminate the air pollution problem in this province.

Mr. Speaker: Before we embark on the normal question period before the orders of the day, I would like to remind the hon. members that there are rules which govern the asking of questions orally before the orders of the day. It is most difficult for a member to expect an answer from the ministry if the question is not worded so that it is reasonably understood. Likewise, if it is a hypothetical question or a question of government policy, it is most unlikely that it would be answered. And if it is answered, the member can expect, of course, a hypothetical and perhaps long answer from the ministry.

I point these things out so that the members will understand that there are two sides to the question period.

I would also like to point out to the members that the rules specifically required—and

I must say that Mr. Speaker has not been strictly following the rules—the matters embraced in questions must be of urgent public importance.

I think the hon. members will agree with me that a great many of the questions asked are not of such urgent public importance that they should not be placed on the order paper. I shall endeavour from now on to put those questions which do not appear to be of urgent public importance on the order paper rather than have them asked here.

I would, therefore, respectfully ask that the government departments and Ministers to whom these questions are directed and appear on the order paper, would endeavour to ensure that an answer to the same is brought in within a reasonable time. Otherwise, there is no point whatsoever in having the question asked or placed on the order paper.

I am sure that both these matters will receive the co-operation of the members on all sides of the House.

I would say one thing further; that unless a question as directed to me is obviously in bad taste or in unparliamentary language or something that is not proper in Mr. Speaker's opinion, I certainly make no attempt to alter or change the question. If the ministry receiving it does not like the way the question is worded, the ministry will just have to answer it in the terms that they interpret it.

In my opinion, the question period is a period for the members to elicit the information which is very necessary to them and to the public at this particular time.

Now with that in mind, we will proceed on the questions today in the order in which the members catch my eye, after the hon. leader of the Opposition has asked his.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, you almost frighten me off from these questions today, but I will assume that they are in order until you rule otherwise.

My first question is to the Prime Minister.

Will the Prime Minister comment on the federal offer to share off-shore mineral rights with the province?

Secondly, is Ontario working out a joint approach to off-shore jurisdiction in Hudson Bay with Quebec and Manitoba?

Third, is it the intention of the government to raise the matter at the December Constitutional conference?

And if you will permit me, Mr. Speaker, I have a further question that is similar to the ones I have just read that perhaps I could add at this time.

Will the Prime Minister inform the House what items he has suggested for inclusion in the agenda of the Constitutional conference?

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there are two subjects here.

First, dealing with the offer made by the federal government, it was made by a statement in the House of Commons yesterday by the Prime Minister of Canada.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): I thought he wrote a letter.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: And he wrote a letter—just wait for it, wait for it—he wrote a letter on Friday which was delivered in my office about a half an hour before I walked into this House yesterday. So we have not had an—

Mr. Sopha: He could have given it to the Premier at the Grey Cup game.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: So we have not had an opportunity to examine the proposition fully as yet.

May I point out also that Ontario's interests, apart from the—

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): He is touchy today.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I am never touchy, Mr. Speaker.

Ontario's interests, apart from the possibility of sharing in that portion of the revenue the offer makes for minerals and oil on the off-shore—that is the salt water if I may use that term—our direct interest—is in Hudson Bay. If hon. members read Mr. Trudeau's statement they will see that he did not draw any lines in Hudson Bay, he said those would be drawn in the next two or three weeks. So we really do not know what we are speaking about in that regard.

The second part of the question: Is Ontario working out a joint approach to off-shore jurisdiction in Hudson Bay with Quebec and Manitoba? As I have said in this House before, the legal opinion we have obtained is that Hudson Bay is not an international waterway. In other words, it is entirely enclosed by the land mass of Canada and therefore is not in the same position as the ocean boundaries of Canada on the east coast and the west coast. This legal opinion may be good or bad, but it is the one we have.

What Quebec, Ontario and Manitoba have been doing for some years is discussing the possibility of extending the boundaries of the provinces out into the bay so that they would encompass the land beneath the waters. The bay just has our provincial boundary.

The Great Lakes extend to the international boundary which, in many cases, is some considerable number of miles off-shore from high or low water mark on the coast. So hon. members, our position in regard to Hudson Bay and James Bay is not comparable to that of the coastal provinces if I may put it that way. What we had been attempting to work out with the other provinces was a method of extending the boundaries into the bay.

I would say at the present time that the land underneath the Hudson Bay, I suppose, belongs to the territories, because the provincial boundary by description is the low-water mark of Hudson Bay. Where those negotiations rest at this moment in view of this present offer, you see, the federal government can change the boundaries of the province if it sees fit upon application by the provinces concerned, if they agree on the changes they want.

It does not need to but it can by statute. I do not recall the title of the statute but our situation in Hudson Bay really is not comparable to the situation on the east and west coasts.

The third part of the question: Is it the intention of the government to raise the matter at the December Constitutional conference? I am inclined to doubt it, simply because we will have a very full agenda for the time available.

There is a new proposition made in this very short time before that conference convenes and I think all provinces would be interested in examining the situation pretty carefully before we decided to raise it at this conference. I doubt that we would have a firm position to put in that period of time, and whatever we would do in regard to Hudson Bay would, no doubt, have to be done in co-operation with the two other provinces.

Mr. Sopha: He did not mention it at the Grey Cup game?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I did not sit beside him at the Grey Cup game.

Mr. Sopha: I saw them on TV and they sure looked cozy.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I think that was during the athletic part of the Grey Cup that the member saw me contiguous to the Prime Minister of Canada—

Mr. C. G. Pilkey (Oshawa): The Premier was not in Yorkville either!

Hon. Mr. Robarts: No, I was not in Yorkville with him either. But in any event—no, I did not discuss this with him; he did not mention it to me. His letter was in the mail at that time.

Now the next question the hon. leader of the Opposition asked concerns items we have added to the agenda. I have from the Prime Minister of Canada a letter marked "confidential" in which he sets out an agenda. I have not answered that letter as yet. I have a draft on my desk which I do not think is yet complete.

I would say this in general terms: The agenda submitted is fairly broad and in a general way will permit us to make a good many of the points we want to make. There may be some additions we will make and some general comments we might make on the conduct of the conference. Those I will reveal to the House when the decisions have been made and when it is proper to do so.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, if the Premier will permit us a supplementary question.

Does he not feel, from his comment this afternoon, that the land under the Bay is actually a part of territories? Does he not feel that it might undermine the legal position he has, that Ontario has a mineral right to that land?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, we have never advanced the position that we have the legal rights to the minerals under the Bay; there may be a question of the legal interpretation and so on. But our approach to it, going back to the days of Mr. Lesage in Quebec and Mr. Roblin in Manitoba, was to make a joint application to the federal government to revise the boundaries of the three provinces, to run those boundaries out into the Bay, and in this case the question of who had jurisdiction would not have—if our proposition had been acceded to, then the whole thing would have settled itself right there, because we would have made that part of the Bay a part of the province, just as I point out to you that portion of the Great Lakes is part of the province, that is the bottom of it which extends out to the international boundary.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): That was worked out at the breakfast table at the Royal York about four or five years ago.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: There was a news report—in actual fact it had been worked out at the breakfast table in a hotel in Winnipeg not at the Royal York. There is some slight element of truth in that, but there were many questions involved in the proposition at that time. The government has changed, but we have been examining this again. We do not admit it, one way or the other, but I point to members that we have a legal opinion which states that it is an inland waterway; therefore, not international, and by definition, in a statute setting up the boundaries of the province, the boundary of Ontario is the low water mark on Hudson Bay. That is a statutory fact, so that you cannot really argue that the province of Ontario extends a foot beyond.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, just one additional supplementary question. Is it not true that the recent findings of the Supreme Court of Canada indicate that those lands under Hudson Bay do in fact come under federal jurisdiction?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I would not say that. That was a reference to the Supreme Court concerning offshore mineral rights of the province of British Columbia extending into the Pacific. In other words the judgment can only apply to the particular case put before the court, although certain principles could be drawn from it. I think it could be argued that those principles might not apply to Hudson Bay, but you still have to get around the fact that the statutory boundary on the north of the province is the low water mark of Hudson Bay.

Mr. Nixon: My next question is for the Minister of Energy and Resources Management, but I am told that the Minister of Municipal Affairs is prepared to answer it.

Mr. Speaker: I was of that opinion also.

Mr. Nixon: I would ask, what is the text of the letter from Ontario Hydro warning of the possibility of an energy shortage in December, and second, to whom was such a warning sent?

Hon. W. D. McKeough (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the following is the text of the letter from Mr. George E. Gathercole, Chairman of the Hydro Electric Power Commission of Ontario, addressed to the chairmen of municipal electrical utilities, except the northwestern region.

Dear Mr. Chairman:

Throughout the fall, we reported to many of you at district OMEA meetings on our capability to meet increased demands on our system during the forthcoming peak season. At the time, we advised that our margin of power reserve, though much less than we would like to see, appeared to be slightly improved over a year ago.

This position has now been altered by the inability of one supplier to complete repairs to a 600,000 kilowatts of steam turbine capacity. Barring unforeseen breakdowns, we will have sufficient capacity to meet our primary power requirements. But because of the aforementioned delays, we are running closer to the line than we had originally anticipated. This, of course, is a temporary situation, and every effort is being made to get all equipment back on the line as soon as possible.

We do not expect any interruption of power service to your municipality, but should a serious breakdown in generation occur and it becomes necessary to shed some primary load, this will be carried out on a rotational basis with the object of limiting the length of interruptions to our customers to no more than 15 minutes.

Let me emphasize again that this is a temporary situation. The regional manager will keep your utility apprised of developments.

The second part is answered by No. 1.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Beaches-Woodbine has a question of the Prime Minister.

Mr. J. L. Brown (Beaches-Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, a question to the hon. Prime Minister:

Does the Prime Minister have a plan to utilize the vast resources of the private sector in close collaboration with the government in meeting the urgent needs of emotionally disturbed children? If not, what alternative does the Prime Minister propose to placing disturbed children in training-type institutions?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, the white paper on this whole subject was presented here in January, 1967, and the government has accepted the broad proposals contained in that white paper and we are in the process of implementing them.

In answer to the second part of the question, if the member refers to the Speech from the Throne, there is a sentence in there which states that legislation will be forthcoming, and I quote: ". . . which will allow the steady development of a programme to assist children with mental and emotional disorders." When that legislation is introduced in this House, the whole question of the government's programme will be discussed.

Mr. Brown: A supplementary question, please. Does that imply that there will be an alternative to the placing of children who are emotionally disturbed in reform institutions?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I think we will have to wait until the programme and legislation develop.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of Trade and Development has the answer to a question from yesterday.

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Trade and Development): Mr. Speaker, this is the answer to a question by the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) asked a couple of days ago:

The Ontario Housing Corporation has no exclusive right to the use of the HOME label. Since the introduction of the HOME plan, a number of builders have used it for advertising purposes. I believe I am correct in saying that Beaver Lumber used "Home Ownership Made Easy" in its catalogue this year to describe the arrangements which could be made for home ownership through that company. A number of builders have used the term HOME when advertising the availability of dwellings which they have constructed on lots leased or purchased from Ontario Housing Corporation under the HOME plan. It has also been used by builders advertising their willingness to build for lessees of HOME lots.

The particular advertisement to which the hon. member refers related to three detached dwellings which had been constructed on HOME lots in Bramalea.

In answer to question 2: Since the HOME plan was introduced in the Metropolitan Toronto area, homes have been made available at a cost which permitted families having incomes of less than $7,000 to purchase. Of the relatively few houses left for sale at Bramalea, the selling prices are such that an income of approximately $7,700 is required.

Mr. MacDonald: If the Minister would permit a supplementary question:

Since the term HOME was coined by the province and not designed in the original instance to assist private developers, has its use been with the authority and the approval of the government?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think I made it perfectly clear. We coined the phrase but the builders are using it because they are offering their services to build on HOME lots provided by the government or leased by the government to various builders. For instance, if an applicant made an application to rent a lot from us, there is nothing to prevent some builder, who has the techniques and the skills, from advertising that he is prepared to build a home on a HOME lot, and this is where I think some of the confusion may come in advertising. But in the long run what it has done has brought a lot of good, capable, small builders back into the building industry who formerly could not get lots to build on.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education has a statement and reply to some questions from the other day.

Hon. W. G. Davis (Minister of Education): Mr. Speaker, as a result of a supplementary question asked by the member for Scarborough East (Mr. T. Reid)—I sometimes get the Scarborougs a little bit confused—I just wish to read to the House a memorandum that has been under discussion in the department for a period of time and which will be going out to the principals and directors and secretaries of the boards.

Re corporal punishment:

Hitherto it generally has been assumed that while corporal punishment was not specifically authorized by any Act or regulation, it nevertheless was condoned under section 40, subsection 1(b) of Ontario regulation 339-66—

Mr. Speaker: Order, order!

The hon. member is rising on a point of order.

Mr. T. Reid (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, if I recall the rough copy of Hansard correctly, you ruled my supplementary question out of order yesterday. In view of the fact that the Minister is now responding to a question that you ruled out of order, and the fact that I have three questions relating to this, I was wondering if it would not be proper for me to place my questions before the Minister comments.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's question was ruled out of order yesterday and the Minister's reply yesterday was ruled out of order. I think those rulings were quite in order.

The hon. Minister is now making a statement which I think he is entitled to make; and in due course the hon. member may ask his questions when his turn comes or when he catches Mr. Speaker's eye.

The hon. Minister may proceed.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I repeat:

Re corporal punishment:

Hitherto it generally has been assumed that while corporal punishment was not specifically authorized by any Act or regulation, it nevertheless was condoned under section 40 (1b) of Ontario Regulation 339/66 which states that, "A pupil shall submit to such discipline as would be exercised by a kind, firm and judicious parent".

Without commenting in any way on the responsibilities or prerogatives of parents, it is suggested that this regulation should be interpreted as providing within the context of the schools, an atmosphere of respect, and trust between students and teachers with the cultivation of individual responsibility as a major goal.

The provincial committee on aims and objectives of education in the schools of Ontario in dealing with this matter made this observation, "A child is not a young adult, and just as we accept his need to increase in wisdom, we must assume his need to grow toward maturity of conduct. The application of punishment in the area of behavioral learning is not more defensible than its application in any other area of learning".

Consequently, it is considered that the use of corporal punishment, in any form is not appropriate in the schools of Ontario and it is recommended that principals and teachers refrain from its use.

This memorandum, Mr. Speaker, will be distributed to the schools, the latter part of this week or the early part of next week.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, could I ask the Minister a question pertaining to his statement?

Mr. Speaker: On a point of clarification yes.

Mr. T. Reid: Do I understand correctly, Mr. Speaker, I may ask my question now?

Mr. Speaker: If it is for purposes of clarification of something contained in the Minister's statement.

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. I believe I am correct in stating that you have not permitted questions from members on this side of the House in respect to Ministers' statements before orders of the day.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member would listen to what Mr. Speaker just said. I said that for purposes of clarification a question may be asked but not for the purposes of engaging in a debate or asking questions which are not of clarification.

Mr. Peacock: Mr. Speaker, further to my point of order, I did hear you say, for the purpose of clarification?

Through the last session of this House, which is the only session which I have attended, I understood the rule clearly that there were not to be questions from members on this side for the purpose of clarification following a Minister's statement and when attempts were made to ask such questions, you ruled them out of order.

Mr. Speaker: Well, I will be most pleased to check the matters raised by the hon. member. I am delighted to find that he is as well up in the rules and precedents as he is and I will be guided by what I find in the records of the House for last session.

I am firmly of the opinion that if there is a matter which needs to be clarified in a Minister's statement every member—any member, is entitled to ask for clarification. But I am also firmly of the opinion that the precedents of this House do not allow a debate to evolve from a Minister's statement and unless a question is merely for clarification, a debate must be evolved if the question is allowed.

So, the member is quite correct on the basic principle he is stating.

Mr. Peacock: Well, Mr. Speaker, that would be a very welcome precedent if members were permitted to ask questions of clarification.

Mr. Speaker: Except that unfortunately it would leave Mr. Speaker in a bad position with respect to his opinion of clarification and that of each member. Therefore, it having been drawn to my attention by the member I will rule today, until I have had the opportunity of looking it up, that there will be no questions on the Minister's statement, and I will be prepared to advise the House tomorrow.

The member for Scarborough East has my eye for questions, he has a series of questions.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, with your ruling I would like to place these questions separately although they all relate to the question of corporal punishment in schools, and I realize fully that with regard to my first question the Minister has already answered it in part.

What regulations, if any, has the Minister of Education of Ontario laid down concerning the use of corporal punishment in schools which receive financial assistance from the Minister's department? For example, can any teacher administer a strapping to a child with an approved strap?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the hon. member, if he has three questions all relating to this subject, he would perhaps like to ask all of them and I will answer all of them at the same time.

Mr. T. Reid: I would prefer to place them consecutively, separately.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Well, Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member has observed I have already answered that particular question.

Mr. T. Reid: Do I understand correctly, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister has answered the question about—"can any teacher administer a strapping to a child"—

Mr. Speaker: The Minister has stated that he has answered the question and it is within the Minister's powers or authority to answer a question how he wishes. The member may ask the question within the rules how he wishes so that question is answered as far as the Minister is concerned. The member will move to the next question.

Mr. T. Reid: The second question is this: How many strappings were administered in the 1967-68 school year to children attending schools which received financial assistance from the Minister's department? How many children received those strappings? How many were girls? How many of these children received medical treatment as a consequence of such strappings?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, The Department of Education does require a substantial amount of information from the local boards relating to their day-to-day operations, their economic problems, questions of quality, etc. I must say to the hon. member we do not require from each individual school in the province of Ontario the number of young people who have been disciplined by a particular teacher, how many of them happen to be young men or young ladies, and quite frankly I am just not in a position to give that information to the hon. member. We do not have it.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary, which I think is in order, because it does not require facts, it requires—

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the member will place his supplementary question.

Mr. T. Reid: Does the Minister agree with Dr. John Griffin, Director of the Canadian Mental Health Association, that "in point of fact there is little evidence that corporal punishment really does a child any good"?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I do not purport to be an expert in these matters. I think I have indicated the government's, the department's, and the Minister's own personal view in the statement I gave, which the hon. member has accepted as the answer to his first question. I think it is already self-evident.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I would reply on a point of clarification that I did not accept the Minister's first answer to the question. It is insufficient.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order.

Hon. Mr. Davis: To the hon. leader of the Opposition: Did he ever administer the strap?

Mr. Nixon: Never.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, another question on this subject. Does the Minister of Education of Ontario agree with city of Toronto school trustee William P. Ross that corporal punishment in the city's schools smacks of class distinction, that is, the instance of strapping is higher for children from lower-income homes than for children from higher-income homes?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I think with great respect that for the hon. member to ask me whether I agree or disagree with a trustee of the Toronto school board who may, or may not, have facts that are not available to me, really is asking a great deal. I just do not have the information upon which trustee Ross based his opinion so obviously I am not in a position to give one of my own.

Mr. T. Reid: I shall attempt to forward this information to the Minister of Education of this province.

Mr. Speaker: Does the member have further questions of the Minister of Education and University Affairs?

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, relating to a different area, the question is in two parts.

1. Will the staff members of Ontario's elementary school teachers' colleges receive special financial assistance to enable them "to take study leaves to improve their academic qualifications", in view of the expected assumption of academic and administrative control by the universities of teacher education—as reported in the second annual review of the committee of presidents of the universities of Ontario?

2. Will the capital and operating costs of education of elementary schoolteachers at universities be based on formula financing?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the hon. member wishes to proceed separately, but the member for Peterborough has a series of six questions which he coupled into one relating to the same report. I am quite prepared to answer them all individually but if we could treat them all together I would be delighted to do so.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I will ask the second question relating to the same report. Now that the presidents of Ontario universities have withdrawn their support for the Minister's proposed commission to study post-secondary education in Ontario—as stated in the second annual review of the committee of presidents of the Universities of Ontario, pages 4 and 5—is the Minister going to go ahead with the study?

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member for Peterborough would now place his question?

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): On the same question, Mr. Speaker, I asked: Have the presidents of the Ontario universities withdrawn their support of the commission to study post-secondary education, as suggested—and perhaps the member for Scarborough East's question might be a supplementary as to what the Minister will be doing if that indeed is the case. Would the Minister prefer that I ask all these questions in relation to the teachers' colleges?

1. Have tentative or final agreements been signed with all 14 Ontario universities with regard to the provision of teacher education on university campuses by 1969?

2. Will the province of Ontario make special provision for residential needs made necessary by the expansion of the universities to accommodate teacher-education students?

3. Will individuals applying to the universities as teacher-education students be identified as such on application?

4. Will these students be asked to meet the same admission standards as those identified as applicants for courses in arts and science?

5. Will there be any rebate in fees for teacher-education students?

6. Has any decision been made in relation to the affiliation of the Stratford Teachers' College?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, trying to answer them in some order that is related to the order in which they were asked, may I begin with respect to the question of staff and what will happen on the assumption by the universities of the responsibilities of teacher education: This matter is still under discussion between officials of the department and representatives of the committee of presidents. There has been no final decision on any of these matters, although perhaps in reading the report the hon. member feels that this is implied. In fact, no decision has been made and I am speaking here with respect to section 2 of this question because, once again, there has been no final decision made. It is contemplated, however, that formula financing will be employed for all programmes within the university; and this will extend, of course, to teacher-education where it can be applied.

I think there will have to be some preliminary study to determine what weighting should be given for teacher education; and this, of course, will be the responsibility of the committee on university affairs.

With respect to part one of the question from the member for Peterborough, my answer, I think, is indicated in the answer to the member for Scarborough East. The report from the committee of presidents indicates, perhaps, a greater finality than in fact has been achieved, there have been no tentative or final agreements signed with the 14 Ontario universities. Although I do say, Mr. Speaker, we are very encouraged at the progress that has been made.

Question 2: As a result there has been no decision with respect to Stratford.

Let us perhaps deal with 4, 5, 6, and 7, because really the answers here once again relate to the implied finality, or the indication of great progress as set out in the report. With respect to No. 4, we anticipate that the universities will treat the students going into the educational courses in the same way as they would students entering any other course at the universities, and make whatever provision is necessary for them, whether it be student residences or other ancillary services.

This would also apply, of course, to question No. 5. We anticipate the universities would set up their requirements for admissions. I think it is relevant to note that actually we have set for 1969-70—I believe it is, or 1970-71—minimum requirements for 1969-70 of 60 per cent average on grade 13, which would make this consistent with the general admission requirements of the universities in any event. This would be the requirement into our own teachers' colleges.

Then No. 7, will there be any rebate in fees? This, Mr. Speaker, has not been determined at this stage.

With respect to the second question asked by the member for Scarborough East, and that is question No. 3 from the member for Peterborough, we have had continuing discussions with the committee of presidents and with OCUFA with respect to the proposed commission. As I understand their report and our discussions with them, they feel, and we tend to agree, that there should be a reorientation of emphasis with respect to the proposed commission. We are waiting for some alternative proposals. We have some as well, which we are in the course of submitting to both the committee of presidents and to OCUFA to see just what orientation or what direction they should take.

I think the feeling of the committee of presidents—and I share this point of view—is that sometimes we tend to look to commissions to resolve certain problems that appear to be somewhat distant today. In fact, what we are attempting to achieve is a better way of making decisions more expeditiously than we have in the past. I could give an example, Mr. Speaker, of the decisions with respect to computers, the decisions with respect to libraries. These are matters that might ordinarily have been part of a broader study which had to be determined, you know, like yesterday. So they are still continuing discussions with both organizations, as the proposed study moves ahead, and I suggest that it will be somewhat different from that which was originally suggested.

Mr. Pitman: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might ask one or two supplementary questions. I think the news story this morning indicated that all teacher education would be on university campuses by 1969. Could the Minister give any indication on how many programmes it is expected there might be by 1969?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I am not prepared to guesstimate at this point, but I can say that all teacher education will not be, shall we say, done in conjunction with the university by 1969. This would be practically, technically and probably educationally impossible. I cannot say how many at this point.

Mr. Pitman: I wonder if I might ask the Minister whether he can assure the House that there is no priority to be given to those who are entering university in relation to applicants who apply for teacher education. Perhaps I might explain; it might well be that universities will have to raise their admissions—standards—in order to simply cut down the numbers. What I really wish to have is an assurance that there will not be priority given to teacher education on this basis as related to those applying for arts and science.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I would like to think that we would all be interested in giving teacher education some degree of priority; I certainly do. I confess I am not completely objective. I would like to think that it will not be done in this particular fashion.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough East; has he a supplementary?

Mr. T. Reid: Yes, Mr. Speaker, arising out of the Minister's remarks, the second review of the committee of presidents states that the main reason they have withdrawn their support from the commission is that they have their own commission which is studying the question of universities across Canada. I was wondering if the Minister could assure us that there will be a study? I interpreted his remarks to mean that; and that it will examine very closely, the relationship between the universities and the other institutions of post-secondary education in Ontario, in terms of libraries, accessibility to computer data, resource centres and so forth.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, as I say, there will be reorientation and the reason the hon. member gave is one of the reasons, because of the national study that is going on. When a decision is made as to the proposed terms of reference, I will be quite prepared to inform the House, and we can have some discussions here.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Grey-Bruce has some questions, three from the other day and some today.

Mr. Sargent: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Question to the hon. Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs: On Thursday, November 14 the Toronto Star released the information that the assets of the Atlantic Acceptance Corporation Limited have increased by $5 million in the first nine months of this year, and now amount to $102 million. What steps does the government plan to redistribute this to the thousands of people who lost fortunes in the so-called collapse?

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the affairs of this company are under the control of the Montreal Trust Company, which was appointed the receiver and manager according to the provisions of the federal Bankruptcy Act. In that capacity as manager and receiver, I assume that the Montreal Trust Company will make distribution of the assets according to their obligation under The Bankruptcy Act, and at such time as meet the exigencies of the situation. The conduct of the receiver-manager is directly under the federal Bankruptcy Act.

Mr. Sargent: Will the Minister answer a supplementary question?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Yes.

Mr. Sargent: Of all the related companies involved in this financial collapse, how many people were convicted and how many went to jail?

Mr. Speaker: That is not a supplementary question to the question already asked by the hon. member. If he wishes—

Mr. Sargent: He said he would answer the question—

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. Minister said he would answer a supplementary question. The question posed is not supplementary; it may be placed tomorrow by the member if he wishes.

Mr. Sargent: Why should the Minister field their troubles for them? Let them worry about it.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member has another question for the same Minister, perhaps he will ask it.

Mr. Sargent: Then I take it—

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Sargent: I will put a question then—

Mr. Speaker: Order!

The hon. member has not asked a supplementary question. He will now proceed to his next question or someone else will have the floor.

Mr. Sargent: A supplementary question to that question then. Do I take it that if the government—

Hon. J. H. White (Minister of Revenue): The member is embarrassing his leader.

Mr. Sargent: The Minister should not worry about that, he embarrasses his leader all the time.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: In a supplementary way, is the Ontario government not going to take any steps to help these people who lost their fortunes? Is the Minister doing anything about it?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: We have no control over the bankruptcy operations, or management of this company in bankruptcy, nor do we have any control over the supervision of the liquidation of the assets of this bankrupt company.

Mr. Sargent: Even though he is the responsible Minister?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has another question. He should place it, please.

Mr. Sargent: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A question to the hon. Attorney General (Mr. Wishart): On November 15, Chief Mackey was quoted in the Toronto Daily Star—

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): That is last week's question.

Mr. Sargent: A question to the hon. Minister of Correctional Services: In view of the fact that a common police court judge in Philadelphia ordered an investigation last July after a young defendant—I am sorry, this is so painful for the Minister—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It is painful for everybody here.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Sargent:—a young defendant told him he had been repeatedly raped by prisoners. Will the Minister advise:

1. Has he any reason to believe Ontario institutions are any better?

2. Is homosexuality as rampant in Ontario institutions?

3. Does he have to have a personal complaint of such a charge before he will call for an investigation?

Hon. members all laugh, but it is happening every day and they are all laughing about it.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The hon. member is answering his own question.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well Mr. Speaker, I am sure you, sir, having regard for your comments at the opening of this session today, and having regard for what you said, sir, about matters being urgent and unambiguous—I think, sir, this certainly comes under the heading of being neither urgent nor unambiguous. There is no source given to this statement which the hon. member reads; there is no reference to any institution; there is no reference to conditions in any institution. How, therefore, can I, sir, compare our institution with a condition allegedly existing some place not identified, the conditions of which are not specified? Mr. Speaker, with all due respect, it is impossible to answer this question.

Mr. Sargent: That is too bad. Will the Minister answer a supplementary question then?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, we should build our jails so that some day the Minister might be in them himself. He should not be in charge of a department if he cannot—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, I do not know just how much of this you intend to put up with. The hon. member has just made an unparliamentary remark, and I think he, sir, along with other members of this House, has to have some sense of responsibility. I ask you to ask the hon. member to withdraw that remark.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the hon. member will.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, that is a well known quotation and it is used in the plural: "We should build our jails as though we may use them ourselves."

Mr. Speaker: That is what the hon. member meant?

Mr. Sargent: And he is not supervising this department—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sure the hon. Minister will accept that explanation of the quotation.

Now the hon. member has further questions which he should place.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: It happens to the best of people, believe me.

A question to the Attorney General: On "Front Page Challenge" last night, it was revealed that electronic bugging in the sales offices of automobile agencies and real estate firms is a common practice in the city of Toronto. Does the Attorney General know of a single case of this and, if so, how many cases?

What charges have been laid?

Will the Attorney General satisfy this Legislature that electronic bugging is not being used in the Ontario Legislature buildings by hiring an electronics bugging surveillance firm to make a sweep of this building?

How far does he plan to let this matter go before he makes a move?

Does he say it is a federal matter?

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, I did happen to see "Front Page Challenge" last night. I saw the whole programme. There was no statement, no revelation that electronic bugging was happening specifically in Toronto. It was general to the country. The lawyer who was on that panel happened to be counsel for the commission in British Columbia which studied the subject and made a report. He indicated that there was widespread bugging between business firms to steal their business practices, secrets and so on. I dare say it goes on, as he indicated, across the country. There is no law which makes this a crime or an offence in any way.

Mr. Sargent: To protect the public, that is all.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: There is no law. The hon. member surely knows because I am sure I have stated at least three times in this House that we have made representations as long ago as two years, that there should be federal legislation across the country in this field, making it perhaps a crime, certainly some kind of an offence, to invade privacy. And we have specifically made a recommendation with respect to the use of it by police forces in criminal investigations. I think the hon. member is aware too, that there has been an indication the federal government is moving to action in this area. I am not sure that he has received the information which I have, that a commission in Ottawa, appointed by Parliament there, is making a study now of this whole question of the invasion of privacy.

Mr. Sargent: A supplementary question here? Under the protection of consumer affairs—the consumer public—is there not an area of concern on your part in the buying of cars and real estate with this practice going on?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: This again, I think, arises from the hon. member's impressions he got from that programme, "Front Page Challenge" yesterday evening, perhaps.

Mr. Sargent: This is common knowledge.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, there may be some of this going on. The Consumer Protection Acts come under the jurisdiction of my colleague, the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs, but I feel that this is a field where there should be legislation which is the same across the country, that it should be defined as to what the nature of this invasion of privacy is, what kind of an offence it is, how serious it is, and what safeguards should be thrown around it and what penalties should be imposed for a breach of the law which, as I say, is being studied, which our federal government is moving on. I think this is a proper approach to the matter.

Mr. Sargent: So if it takes ten years—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Sargent: I have a question of the Provincial Treasurer: Will the Minister advise if the province is already involved in the purchase of common stocks and, if so, does the government retain investment counsellors? Who are they? If not, why should the province not be authorized to buy common stocks as an investment for retirement systems and pension funds in fixed interest investments, corporate industrial bonds and first mortgages on private housing? How much money is available in the total pension and retirement funds in the total provincial system?

Mr. Sopha: Did the member have any Leitch?

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Provincial Treasurer): Delighted to say "no".

Mr. Speaker, my first impulse, sir, has been to take this question as notice. Secondly, request that it be placed on the order paper, but as I read it, I found that I could answer parts of it and I will have to have a little explanation from the hon. member as to what he wants in the way of information with respect to other parts.

If I may pursue it that way, sir, there are really three parts involved in the first paragraph and the answer, of course, to the question as to whether the province is already involved in the purchase of common stocks is "no". So, presumably, the other two questions are to be answered in the negative or they are not applicable.

To revert to the last part of the question—which is, how much money is available in the total pension and retirement funds in the total provincial system?—I might say that information will take a little time but we will do our best to put it together under the various pensions that are associated with the government's operations.

But it is the other one that presents me with a little problem. It requires an expression of an opinion, Mr. Speaker, on two questions that would appear to contradict each other completely. The first part of it is: Why should the province not be authorized to buy common stocks as an investment for retirement systems and pension funds? And it goes on from there to say in fixed interest investments, corporate and industrial bonds and first mortgages on private housing.

I find that very difficult to sort out, because of course fixed interest investments and common stocks have very little relationship one to the other, and maybe, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Sargent: But the Minister is not doing—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Maybe, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member would help me out by clarifying the question a little bit.

Mr. Sargent: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is very important, I think, to realize that other jurisdictions—in New York, for example, you have a $3 billion cash flow probably a year and many times you have this money sitting idly by, not doing anything. Then it is the experience of other administrations that they place this money—they retain investment counsellors as to where to put their money in the interim and I think if you are not doing it, it is time you got on—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Sargent: It is time you got on the job and made some money.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Now the Minister has had it clarified, he might be able to answer it.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Alright then, Mr. Speaker, I can pursue that a little further and I know we are belabouring and beleaguering the whole question period here in this manner but I must say I could not have answered the question in the form in which it was submitted.

The cash flow is well employed but I still am obliged to go back to the hon. member for assistance to help me answer this question, to determine the relationship between a common stock as an investment for—

Mr. Sargent: That is a mechanical—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: To determine the relationship between a common stock as an investment for retirement system and pension fund and then, fixed interest investments, because I do submit once again, there is no relationship to the two.

Mr. Sargent: The Minister is right. Nobody is arguing with him there.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well, that was the member's question.

Mr. Sargent: Then the Minister submits, Mr. Speaker, in a supplementary way, that these others—the state of New York—they are all wrong doing these things?

If that is not so, why is the Minister not doing it?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Perhaps the member should, outside of the House, get in touch with the Provincial Treasurer and clarify the question and obtain some good—

Mr. Sargent: It is a good job he is not in private business because private business could not afford—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The member has other questions, will he place them?

The member will place his other questions please.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, this is to the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs.

When is the government of this province going to step into the picture and force banks to give help to the small businessman?

When is the government going to put a stop to all this "friendly bank" advertising which is just a hoax?

When does the Minister plan to revise the rate of interest being charged by the personal loan and finance companies in this province?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Well, Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the hon. member must know that The Bank Act of Canada governs the banks of this country and that the supervision is through the Chief Inspector of the banks in the bank division at Ottawa.

We have no jurisdiction over any of the banks, and I take it you mean banks in the sense of the name banks—

Mr. Sargent: The government controls liquor advertising—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Now the question of—
Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Does the member want the question answered or not?

Mr. Sargent: He should do his best, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Well now—"when does the Minister plan to revise the rate of interest being charged by the personal loan and finance companies?"—and again I have got to tell the member that he must be aware, hon. sir across the floor, that the rate of interest for small loans is controlled by The Small Loans Act, which is again a federal responsibility.

Mr. Sargent: What does the Minister do?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Well, here is where we come into the picture, and I thought this would have been in the question.

Our chief attack on this matter has to do with the disclosure of the cost of credit and, once full, true and plain disclosure of the cost of credit is made in any contract of credit, where credit is being extended with respect to the purchase of goods or indeed, with respect to the loan of moneys, once that disclosure to disclose to the borrower or the purchaser the full, true and effective rate of interest that he is going to pay, then the final choice as to whether a deal is made or not, rests on the part of the purchaser of goods or of the investors.

Now, great efforts were made several years ago to have this type of legislation made uniform across Canada by the various provinces and I think it may be said that the legislation with respect to the kind of disclosure of the cost of credit is uniform on the part of the provinces across the country.

There was some other earlier reference to our interest as a department in the question of improper practices, by competitors or, indeed, the selling agents, those doing business with the public and I think the government's position was put forth by the Attorney General. He indicated that this matter must be approached, if any solution is going to be effective, on a national basis. Already there is this current investigation and a study of this matter, of the invasion of privacy, at Ottawa, and as soon as there is some further information from that group we will be in a position to reconsider just what our position is.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has two questions from last week of the Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond). Does he wish to ask them or withdraw them?

Mr. Sargent: I do not have them here, Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw them.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Beaches-Woodbine has a series of questions and has the floor.

Mr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the hon. Minister of Education.

Does the concept of universal compulsory education exclude the emotionally disturbed child?

What is The Department of Education doing to guarantee this right to children in local school board areas?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, the school system of course does not exclude any child. Just as recently as August 19, 1968, there was a re-organization of the special education resources of The Department of Education to provide consulting services to the local school systems. There is a programme consultant in special education in each of the regional offices now in the province and in addition to that, there are seven provincial supervisors at the department's central office, one of whom, Dr. Joan E. Bowers, is responsible specifically for programmes for emotionally disturbed children. The member might very well be aware of these appointments which were published in the Minister's report.

The overall objective is of course that the best possible educational opportunities will be provided for each child in the province and consistent with this objective is the establishment of the larger units of school administration to extend such benefits.

I am sure that the hon. member is quite aware that it is practically impossible to have classes for emotionally disturbed children where the board is operating perhaps in a six- or eight-room school with a minimum number of students, economically and educationally of course, it just could not have been done.

The Department of Education has established, with The Department of Health, eight regional diagnostic and assessment centres with highly competent staff and The Department of Education employs, in each of these centres, a regional educational consultant whose role is to serve as a liaison between the centres and the school system.

Now to elaborate, Mr. Speaker, which I think one should really do during the estimates rather than at this particular time, on the entire question of special education, I think one should also point out that the schools for the blind and the deaf make provision for students with emotional problems as well as with physical disabilities.

In the same way, The Department of Education gives professional help to the schools for the retarded.

On the question of trained teachers in the field of special education I would perhaps here, give credit to the Ontario chapter of the Council for Exceptional Children which, from October 24 to 26, 1968, held a highly successful conference of special education teachers in London. Over 1,700 special education teachers attended—

Mr. Brown: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. What is the relevance of this particular remark to the question I asked about the exclusion of emotionally disturbed children from the public school system?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Well, Mr. Speaker, I am indicating, not only are they not excluded but the many programmes that are under way in The Department of Education, in complete co-operation with The Department of Health, to improve the number of teachers available and so on, and I thought really, the hon. member would be most interested in having this information. If he does not wish to have it, Mr. Speaker, I am of course not insisting upon giving it to him. But I thought he would like to know this.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion it is quite in order and in answer to the question placed by the member.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The department itself holds an annual summer course for training teachers in the area of special education and I thought this would be particularly helpful to the hon. member because the enrollment this past year in summer courses exceeded some 2,000 teachers. This course included training specifically for teachers of the emotionally disturbed, the perceptually handicapped, the mentally retarded and those with hearing or vision disabilities.

I think it has also been stated here before, but just to impress upon the hon. member the way we are actively pursuing solutions to these problems, that we have concluded visits now to various educational institutions in the United States to identify those courses for which special education teachers in Ontario will be given credit. This was quite a significant departure for us and of course, we are making within our own department, plans for future teacher training institutions, for programmes in the whole spectrum of exceptionality.

Mr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, may I have a supplementary question, please?

Is the Minister aware of any child in the province of Ontario who has been excluded from public school because of emotional disturbance? If he is not aware, then I suggest he read his correspondence.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, with great respect to the hon. member, I read my cor-responsiveness as diligently as I can. I recognize that out of 1,900,000 young people in the province of Ontario there will always be situations where the system does not, at this stage, completely adapt itself to the needs of each and every student.

We are endeavouring to bring this about to the best of our abilities. I think the hon. member, more than anyone else, should be aware of the great strides that have been made with respect to the education of emotionally disturbed children in this province. If he does not know, he should.

I would say, Mr. Speaker, without becoming at all political or without, in any way, indicating the, shall we say, the progress that has been made by The Department of Education, I say, with great respect and humility, I question whether there are many more comprehensive programmes in like jurisdictions with respect to the emotionally-disturbed child, than in the school system that we have here in the province of Ontario.

Mr. Brown: There are still kids being excluded.

I have a question of the hon. Minister of Health.

In the light of Judge Little's comments about the placement of emotionally disturbed children in training schools, does the Minister of Health agree that these are suitable facilities?

What is The Department of Health doing to provide adequate facilities for emotionally disturbed children, as an alternative to that programme?

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Speaker, both as the Minister of Health and as a physician, I very heartily endorse the statement made by Judge Little.

Our training schools are eminently adapted and established to treat certain children with emotional disturbances. In our view, for the child who has been assessed by the multi-discipline team, and for whom there has been recommended the kind of programme available in our training school system, no better can be provided.

The second part of the question: The Department of Health is proceeding with the development of the programme as outlined in the white paper and which stated government policy.

Mr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, a question of the hon. Minister of Correctional Services.

How many emotionally disturbed children are there in Ontario training schools at the present time?

What are the differences in the facilities provided for the emotionally disturbed child in the training schools and the services provided for delinquents in the training schools?

Is there segregation of these children?

Is the Minister content to receive emotionally disturbed children into his programme?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, I feel that as the hon. member has not really defined the degree of emotional disturbance to which he refers, it is impossible to answer that question.

He is asking about the segregation of the emotionally disturbed and unless I know precisely the degree of the emotional disturbance he is referring to, it would be impossible to answer that.

Perhaps it might be helpful, Mr. Speaker, if I referred to a statement which I made in this House on this matter. I am quoting from Hansard of April 1, 1965, page 1846:

There have been suggestions that many of the children committed to training schools should not have been sent there because they were emotionally disturbed, but that they should have been admitted to some other type of institution.

Mr. Brown: That is true.

Hon. Mr. Grossman:

I would be the first to admit that there are emotionally disturbed children in training schools. In fact, the majority of the children in our training schools are emotionally disturbed to some degree and perhaps this can probably be said of practically everyone in society. It is a matter of degree.

Mr. Speaker, I quoted that merely to emphasize why it is impossible to answer this question. I do not know how I could do it.

Mr. Brown: I have a question of the hon. the Attorney General.

Is it the policy of The Attorney General's Department to send emotionally disturbed children to training schools rather than to provide services for these children and their families in the community?

If not, what is the policy of the department?

Is the Attorney General aware that there are treatment beds available in places such as Browndale and others?

Mr. Speaker: Order! Order! The hon. member has consistently strayed from the wording of his questions, would—

Mr. Brown: Sorry, I—

Mr. Speaker: Would he please follow the wording?

Mr. Brown: I will do that.

Mr. Speaker: He has it within his power to put in those words when he submits a question, but he has not done so.

Mr. Brown: I am sorry. I will go back to the text precisely. Thank you.

Is the Attorney General aware that there are treatment beds available for emotionally disturbed children in private institutions such as Browndale, and that there is no need for children to be sent to alternative facilities such as training schools?

Why is Judge Little of the opinion that there are no alternative facilities to training schools available for emotionally disturbed children?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, the question begins—is it the policy of The Attorney General's Department to send emotionally disturbed children to training schools rather than to provide services for the children?

The Attorney General's Department does not send children anywhere. The children go before the court—and it is the juvenile and family court usually—and the disposition of their case or their situation is made there.

The policy of the government, as I understand it, is to provide care for emotionally disturbed children, the best possible care using the existing facilities. And I understand that the children are sent to these other facilities from time to time.

I cannot say why Judge Little, in the opinion of the hon. member, and the interpretation he has taken from his words, does not seem to be aware that this is the case. I do not know that he is unaware at all.

I would point out that the government has a continuing and on-going committee studying this matter. To my knowledge it has been in existence for 18 months and is continually reviewing, studying and advising on this whole question. That committee is under the chairmanship of The Department of Health, the Minister of Health, and includes Social and Family Services, Education, Correctional Services and The Department of the Attorney General. That is a continuing, working committee dealing with this whole matter.

Mr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, may I have a supplementary question, please?

Does the Minister agree with the Minister of Health and the Minister of Correctional Services, or disagree, that training schools are appropriate places for emotionally disturbed children?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think, Mr. Speaker, this is a matter of policy. I do not think I shall answer this question in the form in which it is put.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville has a question.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Education.

Would the Minister inform the House if it is the policy of his department, in relation to Ontario students attending American institutes of higher education, to restrict financial assistance to these students to loans only and to refuse additional assistance which is granted to Ontario students who study in Ontario?

If this is the policy, would the Minister explain to the House the basis on which it is founded?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, Ontario students who enroll in universities outside of Canada are offered assistance in the form of Canada student loans, only given the limitations of the funds available for student grants. It is felt that our first priority must be to those students who are attending universities within our own jurisdiction. Firstly, because we wish to build up and assist the universities within this province, and secondly, we feel that it is in the best interests of the total community to have whatever funds are available directed to students who are pursuing their academic studies within our own provincial jurisdiction.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Speaker, if I may ask of the Minister a supplementary question. Do you not consider it much more economical to have these students attend American universities when they cannot get the course in Canadian universities, rather than to build the facility in Canada? That it is cheaper to have another jurisdiction provide—

Mr. Speaker: Order! Order! The hon. member has asked his question; he need not answer it himself.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I think you have very readily observed that the hon. member was in the process of answering a question. I say, with respect, I think it is very difficult, without a very prolonged discussion between the hon. member and myself, to determine just what faculties he would be referring to, what types of courses, and so on, and whether, in fact, from an economic standpoint it would pay to have our students move south of the border to take certain specialized courses that are not available here. I really do not think it is something we can deal with in a question and answer period at this moment.

Mr. B. Newman: Thank you.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has further questions of the Minister of Education?

Mr. B. Newman: I will ask that of the Minister tomorrow, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Wentworth.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Development. When will the residents living in full-recovery Ontario Housing projects receive their municipal tax rebate?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Speaker, in answer to this question—The Residential Property Tax Reduction Act, 1968, includes a section, 8(1), which refers specifically to tenants of public housing agencies, and this section reads as follows:

Where in any year a tenant of a public housing agency as defined in part 6 of The National Housing Act (1954) Canada, occupies a residential property and pays an amount that is not less than a sum determined in accordance with the regulations made under this Act, having regard to the rental of similar privately owned residential property in the area, the agency shall determine the amount of reduction that would have been made by a municipality under section 2 if the residential property had been assessed and taxed in the usual way, and shall allow such amounts as a reduction in the rents in accordance with section 4 and may apply to the department for reimbursement on the amount of such reduction, and the Treasurer of Ontario shall pay to such agency the total of such amount.

In order to clarify that, Mr. Speaker, may I say the hon. member will thus appreciate that in accordance with the Act, as tenants of full-recovery projects are paying a rental rate which is substantially less than the rent charged for comparable property in private ownership, the rebate is not applicable to them. In this regard I would emphasize that the rental rate charged by Ontario Housing Corporation in full recovery projects bears no relationship to current market rentals or for that matter the market value of the dwelling. In fact, in certain municipalities, families of lower-income or geared-to-income rentals occupying dwellings of comparable size are paying substantially higher rents.

Ontario Housing Corporation has for some time been working to establish the equivalent of a market rental to determine which of its tenants would be eligible for the rebate. In essence such tenants will be those who, on a geared-to-income basis during the course of the year, have paid in the aggregate an amount which is the equivalent of market rent. These tenants will be so advised prior to the end of the year, and in the case of current tenancies, an appropriate credit will be applied to their rental accounts. A refund will be issued on a pro rata basis to those qualifying tenants who vacated during the course of the year.

Mr. Deans: May I ask a supplementary question? How does the Ontario Housing Corporation plan to establish what would be charged in similar accommodation when there is no similar accommodation with which to compare it?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think we established the basis when we established what the value of the Green Meadows houses was up in Guelph. We are also establishing what the market rental would be on similar houses in that area, and I think when we get through with this survey we will be able to establish what would be considered a marketable rent on the houses in question.

Mr. Deans: At the risk of carrying on, may I ask just one further question? Since you have made mention of the Green Meadows and the establishment of the sale price of the properties there in relation to the sale price of other properties, would it not then be fair to establish the rental in proportion to the amount that would be paid by people were they purchasing the same properties? Does this make sense to you, what I am saying?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not quite follow the hon. member.

Mr. Deans: Would it not be a more fair method to try to establish the rental as if it were the amount being paid on the outstanding mortgage, taking into consideration what it was built for, as opposed to what it might cost were there other units available of the same size in the same area to be rented? I realize it is a bit difficult but does this make sense to you?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Not quite. We have two problems. The first is that if they are paying rent we are trying to get all these fixed rentals on a geared-to-income basis which we think is fair for the tenant as well as for the housing corporation, and until that has been established we do have problems, as hon. members recognize, with those on fixed rent. For some of them, their incomes have doubled and they are still paying a fixed rent, so in effect they are being subsidized by people who are living in a higher-cost unit which is on a geared-to-income basis.

I do not think I can answer the member's question in detail but if you want to submit the question I will be glad to get the information for you.

Mr. Peacock: They are not being subsidized.

Hon. Mr. Randall: They are being subsidized, so stop kidding yourself.

Mr. Deans: May I continue with just one final question? There will be no other after this. Might I ask the question, how can you establish that a rental is being subsidized when the project is on full recovery? When the entire outlay of the municipality or the Ontario government is being recovered through rental, how can you then state that this is being subsidized in any way?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Very simply. Suppose a man moves into a house today, and the house cost $10,000 to build, and we say the rent is $100 a month and that is on a fixed rental basis. Let us say his income is $5,000 and it goes to $10,000 and he still stays in that house and he pays the same rent. We have cases of that in Hamilton and also in Windsor. Then some other family is moving into an Ontario Housing Corporation house today which may cost $14,000 to build, and the taxpayer is subsidizing that other family. So it is impossible for us to say that this family living in that house is not being subsidized, because for some of these people, their incomes have doubled. The values I have set here for the market price of the house and the rent that is being charged today have no relationship to the cost of the house originally.

Mr. Deans: But, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, the hon. member said that was his last question and we will now give the floor to the hon. member for Huron-Bruce.

Mr. Deans: May I ask for a point of clarification of the Minister?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Huron-Bruce has the floor.

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Minister of Agriculture and Food.

Is the Minister satisfied with the progress being made and efforts being put forward by the two farm organizations in relation to establishing a single farm organization?

The second part of the question—and there is a typographical error here, Mr. Speaker—should read:

Is the Minister going to propose through the farm income committee a compromise plan which might be acceptable to both parties?

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food): Mr. Speaker, I am wondering if my hon. friend the member for Huron-Bruce is suggesting that the Minister propose a shotgun wedding.

The principle of the one farm organization was clearly enunciated as far as the government's position is concerned during my remarks at the opening of our estimates of this department last spring. I am not aware of what progress is being made between the two farm organizations other than to read the newspaper reports that I have read of the two respective annual meetings which have been held recently.

One must, of course—if one is interested in seeing one general farm organization for Ontario—be disappointed in the apparent lack of progress that has been made in this regard. However, I am not sure what will come of it, and as far as the reply to the second question is concerned, the Minister—I want it clearly understood, Mr. Speaker—does not propose any suggestions to the farm income committee. They are strictly on their own and whatever they intend to report in their forthcoming report which they will be making is entirely up to them.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sudbury East.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): A question of the hon. Minister of Education:

In view of the statement by Mr. W. A. Jones, administrative assistant to the Ontario Teachers' Federation, as quoted in the Toronto Daily Star of November 29, 1968, that "a flying squad of highly trained teachers could be the answer to upgrading Ontario's far north schools", will the Minister give serious consideration to the suggestion in an effort to come to grips with the problem of inequality of educational opportunities in Ontario's north and northwest?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, we are always prepared to give consideration to anything that will improve the educational programme of this province, whether it be in the northwest or northeast or the south, any part of the province. I have not had an opportunity to read Mr. Jones' remarks or discuss this possibility with him. I should point out that the department itself has some 140 well-qualified programme consultants as well as the northern corps, and these personnel are available in the northwestern and northeastern parts of the province, as the hon. member well knows. But, as I say, we are quite prepared to consider any worthwhile suggestion.

Mr. Martel: A question of the Minister of Health:

Have INCO and Falconbridge submitted pollution control plans as requested by the Minister over a year ago? If so, do they meet the standards established by The Department of Health?

When will work commence on the plans submitted by INCO and Falconbridge and what time limits have been set by the Minister for its completion?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: INCO and Falconbridge have both submitted proposals, a short- and long-term plan; these proposals have been reviewed by the air pollution control services and the companies have now been requested to submit definitive plans for approval. The timing for these developments will be included in the programme.

Mr. Martel: Would the Minister allow a supplementary question? Has there been a time limit when these definitive plans must be submitted? Did the Minister not say there was—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Yes, Mr. Speaker, there has.

Mr. Martel: Well, is there a time limit within which these companies must submit these final plans?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Martel: Could the Minister tell us what it is?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No, Mr. Speaker, I cannot.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for High Park has questions.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, just a comment on that: If the hon. member wanted the answer to those questions he could just as easily have put them in his original question. We would have had the information.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, how could I ask the supplementary question which I asked if I did not know that a definitive plan had been submitted, or that the companies had been asked for a definite plan?

Mr. Speaker: I am sure, if the hon. member would look at the questions which he himself and others have submitted in this House, that he would readily have the answer to that, because members are not hesitant in "if not, why not" questions, and this would have been an appropriate place for that kind of question.

I would point out to the members that I notice them reading apparently prepared supplementary questions after the Minister has answered and I would respectfully suggest that type of question should not be supplementary but should be included in the original question. The supplementary question should be one which arises unexpectedly from the Minister's answer.

The hon. member for High Park has the floor.

Mr. Shulman: A question of the Minister of Health, Mr. Speaker. Are the patients in the Braemar Manor Nursing Home in Exeter, a residential home for special care, to be removed from that home? If so, why?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, they are not to be removed from that home to the best of my knowledge.

Mr. Shulman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: The member is very welcome.

Mr. Shulman: I have a question for the Attorney General. Has the Minister investigated charges by members of the police association of Ontario, as reported in the Globe and Mail of August 24, 1968, that officers of the Ontario police commission secretly record interviews with policemen?

What was the result of that investigation?

Will the Minister instruct the commissioners of the Ontario Provincial Police that such actions must cease?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is an "if not, why not" question.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I took the matter up with the chairman of the Ontario police commission after that article appeared and I was assured by him, in a written memorandum as a matter of fact, that the investigating officers of the Ontario police commission have no recording equipment and, of course, therefore no conversations with policemen are recorded.

Having said that, I did not feel that questions No. 2 and 3 therefore followed, but I notice in question No. 3 the hon. member is making reference to the commissioner of the Ontario Provincial Police. The first part of the question had to do with the Ontario police commission, that may be a typographical error, but there is no recording.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

THE EXPROPRIATIONS ACT, 1968-1969

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General) moves second reading of Bill 5, The Expropriations Act, 1968-1969.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Speaker, in commencing the debate on the second reading of Bill No. 5, The Expropriations Act, 1968-69, let me say that in principle we commend the actions of the government for at long, long, long last bringing forth an expropriation Act that to some substantial extent—and I use the word "substantial" advisedly—answers many of the complaints; but not by a long means, all the complaints that have been levied at expropriation procedures in this province certainly for as long as I have been a member of this House and for a lot longer.

You will recall, Mr. Speaker—I think in 1960, if my memory serves me right—that you were the chairman of a committee on expropriation procedures and the whole law of expropriation and you were at that time, I believe, the Minister of Highways. That committee laboured long and hard and brought forth a report. As I recall, my colleagues on that committee at that time were Mr. Gould, a former member for Bellwoods; Mr. Troy, the former member for Nipissing; and the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Innes). Those three gentlemen, along with several other members of the House—

I believe the member for St. David (Mr. Price) was on that committee. No? Well, he was in the House at that time and will remember the appointment of that committee. Several members of the House joined in that and they brought forth a report that had a lot of merit in it, both as to procedures and as to the essence of the law of expropriation.

As this government moves—and it does not move very quickly—very little really was done about the principle of expropriation. There was an Expropriation Procedures Act and I remember, Mr. Speaker, that it was you who brought that bill before the legal bills committee of the day. You were assisted in that by Mr. Dick, who is now the Deputy Attorney General, and together you pushed through—and I use the word "pushed" advisedly because, as I recall, you were accepting very few suggestions and you changed your mind not a whit from the way you walked into the committee—you pushed through The Expropriation Procedures Act with the promise of a new Expropriation Act that would deal with the substance of expropriation, which would follow in due course.

Well, the phrase "in due course" or "in the fullness of time" is one that many of us here have heard about for a long period of time. Whether it came from Mr. Frost or from the present Attorney General (Mr. Wishart) or the present Premier (Mr. Roberts), it all means the same thing, that the government moves very, very slowly in bringing about changes to basic law, which changes are demanded by the inequities that the basic law presently works on the citizens of the province of Ontario. This thing, Mr. Speaker, goes back over my full ten-year membership in this House, and it is not for lack of complaining in the House. The speeches are multiple, not only mine, but many, many members of this House—some who are here and some who are no longer here—have spoken about the inequities of this Act.

And not only members of the Opposition; many members of the government have spoken about the inequities. There have been select committees and there have been studies and there have been representations. I suppose that at fault, Mr. Speaker, has been the coming and going of Attorneys General, because we have had very little consistency in this office, and it has fallen often to the lot of the Attorney General of the day to concern himself with the law of expropriation. In my time I can recall Mr. Roberts and yourself, sir, and the present incumbent and there was one more, I don't know, in any event. Oh yes, and Porter, that is right. That is four in a period of a little more than ten years, so it has been hard to bring any consistency in an approach to the substantive law. One would have thought that this would be one of the things the government, for a period of over 25 years, could have been and should have been able to do. They have fallen short of the mark with programmes for reforming the substance of law, so that we could have some consistency of procedure and some up-dating, before these problems assumed crisis proportions.

There was the outcry about civil rights, and then Mr. McRuer was appointed to do his enquiry. I think his enquiry lasted for a period of three years until we first saw his report. Now we have the first three volumes of his report; he told me the other day the fourth is forthcoming soon, but not too soon, so we have the first three volumes of that. A substantial portion of volume No. 3 deals with recommendations about expropriation.

Well, as the government moves in these fields—and I was commenting on it yesterday in relation to the law of landlords and tenants—one report is not sufficient; we need more reports, so we refer the whole matter to the Ontario Law Reform Commission, and they come out with another one, and then, we have two reports. The Attorney General goes into a huddle with his advisers—an important one I would suspect is his Deputy Minister—and they emerge with an Act that, as I said at the beginning, is not too bad in form. I compliment them for coming forward with it.

Before I leave the introductory part of my remarks, I cannot help but remark that the hand of the Deputy Attorney General is quite visible in this statute. It is not hard to see that one who got his initial training in The Highways Department, had something to say about the drafting of this Act, because as you look at it, you will see that perhaps The Highways Department is treated just a little differently than some of the other departments, and perhaps in his mind there is some substantial justification for it.

It would seem to me that we have gone as far as the government now proposes it should go, and when it is going to receive, from many expropriating authorities, complaints about the additional costs this new Act involves, and I feel reasonably certain those are going to come. Since this Act was introduced, I have spoken to a number of municipal officials—who happen to be both elected and administrative—who have to deal with the administration of matters such as this, and they have expressed concern to me that it is going to cost them quite a lot.

So as I say, Mr. Speaker, when it is somewhat apparent at least to me that there are going to be complaints from municipal councils and municipal officials, from boards of education and from various other people, about the expropriating powers and about this costing them quite a lot of money, I insist it is apparent that the government believes that the expenditure of this kind of money is for the public good. It would seem that they should not have drawn a line of limitation if they came to that basic conclusion and principle. They should have gone the whole way, and I am going to suggest in several instances that they really have not done that. They have gone so far and then said, no farther.

The first instance in which I think the position is reasonably obvious is perhaps related to the last section of the statute, about when it is going to come into force and the effect on present pending expropriations. I do not suppose anyone really knows how many present expropriations are pending—either actual, or expropriations that are reasonably fixed in the minds of the authorities and that they are going to proceed with, although the procedure may not even have commenced. There are, I would say, many thousands of people in this province whose lands have been affected by the act of an expropriating authority, but who have not as yet advanced to the point where they have any idea how much money they are going to get, or really how long it is going to take before they can get before the board that is going to make that determination.

So, I would quarrel with the effective date of this statute, and I would think that it should relate to all expropriations which presently are under way in this province, and these new procedures should apply to all property in which any expropriating authority has begun to move. No matter how else you try to determine this, there is going to be an arbitrary cut-off date that will exclude a whole group of people from the procedures. As I say, most of them are good procedures that are set out in this Act. It would seem to me that the only fair way that expropriations are going to be conducted henceforth, is that the new legislation should apply to all expropriations that are presently outstanding and that have not been settled.

I draw to your attention, sir, section 46 of the Act, in which there has been an attempt to wrestle with this, and I suggest it is a compromise attempt. It talks about sections 13 to 31 applying in respect to expropriation for which compensation has been settled or determined before this Act went into force. I do not think that is enough. I think that all of the procedures of the Act, all of the tools that are set up which are going to be of assistance to the person whose land is being taken without his consent, should be available in all of those matters wherein there has been no settlement effected.

I am sure, sir, having said that, that the Attorney General is going to ask me how this can be done. I am sure he knows with me that there is a procedure under the rules of court whereby when a matter of procedure has to be determined, once the legislation has laid the principle, reference can be made to a judge in chambers or to a judge in court, and he can set forth the procedures that can and should be followed.

I am sure that his law officers can advise on how this can be set out in this statute. The procedure is not a complicated one; it does not have to be spelled out chapter and verse. But arrangements surely can be made in this statute where all of the benefits of this statute can be available to all of those persons whose land is being forcibly taken from them and who have not as yet reached a settlement. I think this is the only fair thing. So that is the first point I wanted to make.

The next point that concerns me very much—and perhaps to lay a background for this subsequent point, and a number of others—is that we can lose sight, in dealing with this statute, of the fact that we are trying to protect the rights of citizens whose land is forcibly being taken from them, whose land is being taken from them without their consent, who have not chosen to put themselves in this position, but whom some public authority or other has decided must be put in this position for the general public good.

We have to lean over backward, and I say, sir, that is sufficient justification for anything we do in a statute like this. We have to lean over backward to protect the rights of those people to the proper and full enjoyment of their property. If that enjoyment is going to be taken away or interfered with, then they must be entitled to very great consideration, every possible consideration that they can reasonably be given. If it is going to be expensive, then that's too bad, because we are dealing with them in a matter that is unusual, in a matter which they have not sought.

So, having laid the groundwork, let me talk about the interest rates. I do not know why we lawyers, Mr. Speaker, when we write something about interest rates in a statute, always happen to come up with a figure of five per cent. There is no five per cent money today, and there has not been for quite a few days, and it is unlikely in the reasonable future that there is going to be any more five per cent money. There is an interest rate mentioned in this statute, and it is five per cent. Except where there is a penalty provision, where there has been a delay and where it can be increased or reduced, this is the interest rate that applies to compensation money. I think it is unreasonable and I think it is unfair.

In keeping with the principle that we should lean over backward to be fair to people whose land is being taken, if they are delayed in the use of the money that they are going to get, I see no reason at all why they should be limited in interest to a rate of five per cent. Even the law reform commission went further than the statute, and the law reform commission, on page 70, in the summary of its recommendation, said that instead of a fixed five per cent interest rate, interest should be paid at half of one per cent above the current national housing rate for ordinary homeowner loans.

That is not an unreasonable suggestion. I would think that any interest rate mentioned in a statute like this should bear some relation to the modern economic conditions. This is one test, but perhaps another test might be the rate at which the province of Ontario does its borrowing. Perhaps another rate might be the best preferred rate of banks at the time of the final determination of value. I do not really care whether the specific test is any one of those three or perhaps a better one. But it would seem to me, Mr. Speaker, that the interest rate should be gauged in accordance with the cost of money and the value of money today, and not what it was, in the traditional legal sense, at the rate of five per cent, which applied many years ago.

A second point, perhaps not quite along the same line, is my worry about costs that will be paid to the person whose land is being taken. There is a rather ingenious formula being worked about exchanges between the authority and the person whose land is being taken, exchanges of valuation, and exchanges of information. The offer has to be close to the actual value of the land, and the rather ingenious scheme that is suggested here is that if the expropriating authority comes within 95 per cent of the money that is eventually going to be paid, and the person whose land is being taken does not take it, then the person whose land is being taken is going to be penalized because he is not then going to be able to get his costs for legal advice, and his costs for hiring evaluators. He is going to be penalized.

The Attorney General is going to tell me that is a discretion. I would say to him, when he tells me there is a discretion, that that is not sufficient. Let's go back to the basic principle. If a person's land is being taken, then he is deprived of an ordinary right that he along with everybody else in the community of Ontario enjoys—the right to enjoy his own land. He has to be put to expense to protect that right. He has no way of telling, when the authority comes in and says, "All right, we will give you $100,000 for your land, and in our opinion, that is 100 per cent of the value," whether or not that figure is realistic. If the man has any business sense at all, or he consults with anyone, they will say that what he needs is advice of two kinds—he needs legal advice and he needs the advice of a competent evaluator, in order that they can tell him whether the figure that is being offered is reasonable or unreasonable.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, it would seem absolutely logical to me to replace that discretion in the hands of this new board that you are setting up, which can penalize someone whom the board thinks is an unreasonable landowner or a compensation seeker. I would think that we would have to approach this from the basic starting point that that person whose land is being taken is entitled to the full enjoyment of it. He did not seek to be expropriated. He did not seek to be injuriously affected. He is put into that position by one of these 6,000-odd authorities, and he is entitled to seek competent advice, and to buy his own competent advice in order to determine whether or not the offer in dollars that is being made to him is a reasonable one.

It would seem to me, sir, that that should be written into the Act, and the discretion that is given to the land evaluation board should be taken away. When we come to section-by-section treatment of the Act, we are going to propose the proper amendment, in case these remarks have not made sufficient impression on the Attorney General.

Another point, insofar as costs are concerned, is an idea that has some links with the question of a file of necessity. I do not know that it is called a file of necessity, but I think we all understand what a file of necessity is. I commend the government for making this procedure available in the case of all expropriations—not just in cases that used to cover the hospitals, universities, and the conservation authorities, but this procedure is going to be available in all cases. That is fine.

But again, there are costs involved in going to the file of necessity. I had personal experience in one of these, on behalf of some clients who own property in Sudbury. I am not going to be talking about that one—the Junction Creek Conservation Authority—at some length, Mr. Speaker, not today; but I think the people of Ontario should hear how some of the conservation authorities deal loosely with their rights. In that case, a hearing took place before His Honour Judge Cooper, the district judge of the district of Sudbury.

In order to ascertain whether or not this expropriation or proposed expropriation made any sense, it was necessary for my client, on my advice, to retain expert advice—in this case a very competent hydraulic engineer, who by reason of his experience, by reason of his position, he is a senior professor in the school of practical science in the University of Toronto, was able to look at these plans in a meaningful way, and to say "yes, it is sensible that the dam should be here, and not over there, and if the dam is put in such and such a location it will flood such and such an area, and not others." This kind of advice will often—not in all cases, but often—be necessary in the case of expropriation. But the fact is that the people affected have to come and seek, first, legal advice, and then other kinds of professional advice, putting them to an expense for which, under the present law, they will not be compensated.

I say that is thoroughly unreasonable. I may add, sir, as a result of this kind of an enquiry, that we were able to convince the authority that if the expropriation did go ahead, it should take about half the land it had originally planned to take. But it was only because we were able to act from a factual report produced by a competent professional person. It would seem to me again that we should write in this statute that for these hearings of necessity, where it is important that professional advice should be sought—both legal and other kinds of professional advice—then there should be compensation to the person whose land is being taken for the expense he is put to. I think this is only basically fair.

While I have been talking about the trial of necessity, I have grave doubts, Mr. Speaker, about the procedure of references. The general scheme of the Act is that wherever there is an expropriation, anyone who is affected by it can ask for a reference or a trial of necessity and in due course it will be conducted. It will be conducted as an enquiry in a fashion similar to the enquiries that are conducted in England. In England, I think, they call the man a referee. He goes wherever the problem is, and has a hearing, and evidence is taken, and there are procedures set down as to how all this is done.

Here I think there is a different name for him; is he called inspector? Here he is called an inspector, but the function is substantially the same. He gathers the evidence, he makes a report to the confirming authority, and the confirming authority then decides whether or not the expropriation can or should go ahead. When the amendment to The Expropriation Procedures Act was introduced a couple of years ago—where this kind of a hearing was provided for in the case of universities and conservation authorities and hospitals — the enquiry and the confirming authority both involved the county court or district court judge. I objected to that because I did not think that, first of all, the county court or the district court judge knew very much about it and should not be put into the position where he had to make this kind of a decision.

Secondly, I thought that there should be a political responsibility so that the person making the decision should be answerable in some political form for the type of action that he had taken.

Thirdly, I did not think it should be limited to only three kinds of expropriation procedures. It should cover the whole broad field.

What they have done is to remedy many of these objections. It has been taken from the county court judge. It has been given to a political body. It applies across the whole board.

But where I am still concerned is the division of the various confirming authorities. I would have liked to have seen—and I know there is some discussion on this—I would have like to have seen one Minister of the Crown—and I do not care whether it would have been the Attorney General or the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Connell) or one of them in any event—who would be designated by, probably, the Prime Minister, who would be the expropriating Cabinet Minister. He would be the person who would receive all of the reports of these inspectors and he would make these judgments or sign these judgments; they would be made in his name. I would think that that would have brought some—this is the procedure in England. I think it is the Home Secretary who makes this decision, or the Minister of Public Works.

I think that procedure would have supplied a consistency of thinking and a method whereby a group of civil servants would look for certain things in these reports. When they were reporting to the confirming Minister, they would have been able to say, "This report seems to answer most of the questions, but it does not deal with this one and that, maybe we should ask some more questions, or maybe because this question is not answered, we should not approve this one."

It would provide for some consistency in civil servants' advice and some consistency in ministerial opinion.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): How would the member like that job?

Mr. Singer: I know. I know no one Minister is going to like that job but what concerns me, Mr. Speaker, is that if the job is spread through the whole 22 or 24 of them—I can never keep track of how many there are—we are going to get 24 different kinds of decisions.

Some Minister, the Minister of Energy and Resources Management (Mr. Simonett) for instance, is probably going to make a whole variety of decisions within his department because he is responsible for a whole variety of different emanations of the Crown. He is responsible for hydro and the water resources commission and Ontario Northern Railway and several others. It may be that the criteria he uses for one will be different from criteria for another; they may come into conflict.

It would seem to me that it would be more sensible if one Minister made this decision.

I recognize there is some argument about this and even some of my colleagues have said it would be better that the Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) should make all the decisions about expropriations for hospitals. We will know that in every hospital concerned, it is the Minister of Health who makes that decision and he is the fellow to go after if we think something is wrong. Or that the Attorney General is going to be responsible for all jails that are taken.

It is my opinion, Mr. Speaker, that there would be more consistency, more sense, more fairness and more equity if one Minister was charged with this responsibility.

But my most serious objection to the confirming authority is the method in which we deal with municipal councils, or the Act deals with municipal councils and boards of education.

It provides that the confirming authority in those cases shall be the individual municipality or the individual board of education. To my mind, this is probably going to be an exercise in complete and absolute frustration, because it involves an appeal from Caesar to Caesar.

At least where the ministerial decision is being exercised, I must go back to my example, the Minister of Energy and Resources Management. The conservation authority has deliberated and made a decision; the hearing takes place at which their decision is reported on; that evidence goes forward to the Minister who did not take part in the original decision. He sits as a referee; he is a politically responsible person; he has to answer in this House for the decision and he will make his decision in light of the evidence that is put before him.

But in the case of a board of education or a municipality, we run into very serious problems because the original decision-making body is the body that eventually sits in judgment on its own decision.

A municipal council says, "We need that piece of land over there for a park," or "that piece for a garbage dump" or whatever the municipal purpose is. They take the necessary steps under this Act and the inquiry takes place. The report of the inquiry officer comes back to them and they sit down and say, "Well, the inquiry officer has given us a whole bunch of things, but we have already made up our mind." It is an appeal from Caesar to Caesar.

I think this makes bad law. I think when you are asking the body that makes the decision to review itself, that you are just begging for trouble.

It would seem to me, sir, that if the government is going to keep this division of authority and spread it amongst all the Ministers that, for school boards, it should go to the Minister of Education (Mr. Davis) and for municipalities, it should go to the Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. McKeough). At least, in that way, you are going to get a more impartial treatment.

My preference, however, as I say, is that we would have one Minister—whosoever he might be—who would make the decisions in regard to all expropriations.

Sir, the question of injurious affection is one that is very difficult to deal with. It is a technical phrase and attempt has been made to define it. The attempt is limited to the position where land has not been taken but where works have gone on on neighbouring land.

And works have to have been constructed apparently before a claim for injurious affection can be acceptable.

It would seem to me that the definition of injurious affection must be expanded. The Attorney General is probably looking through McRuer at the moment and looking for his definition. May I say, sir, that you followed him exactly—you followed him exactly—and while Mr. McRuer made many good suggestions, I do not think he is the be-all and the end-all of all suggestions for new statutes that we draft. In this one, with great respect, I think he was wrong.

I think that insofar as injurious affection is concerned we have to take into consideration the sort of thing that happened on Highway 401. The member for Armourdale is not here today, but he made a most effective speech in this House on one occasion. It did not do him any good because he violently attacked a Minister of the Crown. But he did produce some results for the people who were affected by the widening of Highway 401 as it goes through his riding and my riding.

But what happened there, and what he and I were complaining about at the time, was not that the widening hurt people's land but that constructions on widened portions—the erection of a 30 foot wall—cut off the view; this had an effect. It was only by an unusual procedure evolved for that single occasion and limited to every case where 14-lane highways are constructed in the province of Ontario, that any kind of a remedy was brought forward.

You can recognize by the terms of reference that there are not too many cases where 14-lane highways are constructed in the province of Ontario, so it was designed to answer that criticism.

I do not think, Mr. Speaker, that the definition of injurious affection is broad enough to cover that sort of thing or to cover another sort of thing. Supposing Hydro comes along and says, "we need the land next door to where you live." They take that and they do not take your land. But on that land they put some kind of an operation that operates 24 hours a day. It is noisy and they have bright klieg lights and generally it disturbs you. I would say, in my understanding of what the English interpretation is of injurious affection, that you would then have been injuriously affected.

It would seem to me that by the very exact definition that has been written into this Act of injurious affection that you have even taken away, or you are purporting to take away, the common law right of nuisance, the common law right of action for nuisance. In the case I have outlined, probably a person who was treated in that way would have no remedy.

There is a third instance where I think something should be done and this is the one that the Junction Creek authorities are presently perpetrating on an awful lot of people up in Sudbury. They have fiddled around with a piece of land under threat of expropriation for a period now exceeding two and a half years without having come to any conclusion.

I would say certainly where an authority acts in this manner they have injuriously affected, or very seriously affected, the rights of the owners of that land. It would seem to me that we should create some form of action that could be, in essence, a punishing action which will punish an authority who has acted in this way without actually doing any taking of land.

I am going to expand on that particular case but it seems to me that the whole definition of injurious affection as now set out in this Act is far too limited. It takes away certain common law that I think now exists and does not seem to answer the kind of problems that will keep cropping up and that we are going to continue to hear about.

I commented on the way by that I could see Randall Dick's hand in this statute. There is an exemption here, early on—I think under the definition section 1(c)—but it does not include the land for the widening of a highway where entry is deferred under section 338 of The Municipal Act.

It would seem to me that this statute should cover all expropriation, whether it is for highways or whether it is for gas storage areas. I want to make reference to that either now or in the committee discussions. There is no reason at all why the ordinary citizen should not have some finality in his dealing with The Department of Highways, the same as he will have finality if he is dealing with any other department of the government or any other of the 6,000 odd expropriating authorities. I can see no real basis for exempting The Department of Highways. They should be treated the same as everybody else.

An argument is going to be made that maybe you cannot plan as well, and maybe it is a good idea to tie up a portion of a man's land because we do not know which way development is going to take place, and our planning is not complete. My answer to that, sir, is that with all the resources the government have at their command, they should not be acting to take land for highways unless they have plans.

Certainly they are not suffering under any inability to get expert advice. They can have as much expert advice as they want, and they have unlimited funds to draw on, and when they move in this unusual way, taking land forcibly from a person without his consent, it would seem to me that they should know what they are doing, and they should not be able to dilly-dally around with a person's right to enjoy his own land, and postpone it for periods as provided by The Municipal Act. They should be treated the same as everybody else should be treated.

Now then, I am not too sure, some of these suggestions are not in great sequence, but I am going to throw them out as I have made notes of them because there are a variety of sources to which to refer.

The next note that I have here is in dealing with this tribunal, this is the tribunal of evaluation. I think the Attorney General, Mr. Speaker, would be well advised and he has probably already done this, to look at the comparative tribunal in England, and there is an excellent article in the Canadian Bar Review called "Winds of Change", I think it was about five years ago. You perhaps referred to that already. The tribunals there consist of two people. Here we have a tribunal of three and McRuer recommends that to you, I know. In any event, two or three I do not think makes a great deal of difference, but it would seem to me that the tribunal should consist at least of a lawyer, and of an evaluator, because I do not think that you are going to get reasonable decisions from just the usual kind or rank of political appointees that often get to fill these roles. It would seem to me that in dealing with matters of this sort, we should go out of our way to hire people who are knowledgeable in the field. I think that you have got to start off in each one of these tribunals as they sit. I do not care whether they have three or two—arguments could be either way—they should have a lawyer on them, and should have an evaluator, a man whose business it has been to deal with evaluation of land.

An hon. member: McRuer got seven.

Mr. Singer: Well, we will leave McRuer at a certain point.

I recognize, Mr. Speaker, that this is going to cause some difficulty, because this profession in this province is not one that has a great number of members in it. There are a lot of people who deal in real estate who would like to think that they are property evaluators, but they are not, and the expert property evaluators are few in number, and I think as the Attorney General approaches people to sit on this board, and if he approaches some of these real experts, the good ones, he is going to find that they are making so much money in private practice, that he is going to be in a very difficult position to compete, with the money they are presently making, in the form of a salary inducement to get them to come and serve the government on this kind of a tribunal.

But it may well be, sir, that those should be the people that could and should be tapped for this kind of service, perhaps on a part-time basis and they have a professional association now, and they have regular meetings; officials of The Attorney General's Department go, as I go, to the annual meetings of the American Right of Way Association, the Canadian section, which is a group of these people that deal with this thing. I think that a system of rotation, perhaps you could take, in an expropriation value matter that deals with Sudbury, an official out of the service of Metropolitan Toronto. Perhaps you can take someone from Kingston to sit in judgment on something that is happening—I knew the member for Kingston would be interested in that—to sit in judgment on an evaluation in Windsor. But there are a lot of people if you really begin to think about it, and in our various government agencies; in our municipal councils, working for our municipalities; in hydro, big real estate departments in the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto, in various boards of education and so on. Perhaps these people could be called upon from time to time and on a part-time basis without necessarily making them full-time government employees to sit on it, but I think it is most important that you should have someone who understands the law and someone who really understands land evaluation. I am awfully worried, Mr. Speaker, that if we do not have pretty rigid and carefully selected—carefully chosen tests for the people who are going to make these evaluations, then we are going to be in constant trouble—that the evaluations are unfair, that the people who decided did not know what they were talking about and so on.

That brings me to another suggestion made by Mr. McRuer that there should be provision for the regular publishing of the decisions of this board of evaluation—perhaps my terms are not right, but the board that determines how much money is going to be paid.

We tried this. We tried to get this sort of thing going for the Ontario Municipal Board and for a year or two there were a couple of volumes of decisions that came out, and then the whole thing sort of disappeared into limbo. Well it seems to me that this is the time when we are starting with a new procedure, that we could begin to establish some kind of precedent, some kind of case law that is going to deal with the method of evaluation, some of the principles, deal with some of the kinds of evidence that is brought in. And this was one recommendation, I think it was in McRuer, that there should be provision in the statute directing the people who are at the head of this board to regularly publish summaries of their decisions together with the reasons. The way it is now, while the statute provides that reasons shall be given, they will only be given to the parties, and the ability for members of the public in the profession, who are not aware of the particular case, to get full knowledge of what has gone on, is going to be very very limited.

While I am talking about experts, I think too, there should be some provision for limiting the number of experts that are available. And again, this balances the scale; limiting the number of experts that are available in any one hearing. There have been hearings where the expropriating authority can retain twelve evaluators, and merely by overwhelming compendium of evidence attempt to overwhelm the municipal board, or whichever judicial body is giving a decision. The person whose land is being taken, only has one evaluator, is only able to afford one, and it would seem to me that the normal rule of court about experts could well be made to apply in this case. You may do this—and you may want to do this in the regulations if you think this suggestion has any merit, but I would think that the number of experts that can be used at any hearing, either for value, or for necessity, should be limited to one or perhaps two, and that there should be some provision perhaps for increasing that number on application after the reasons have been carefully stated, but in some of these matters where the fight is a hot one, and where the authorities have lots of money, such as government, and it is not unusual to anticipate that the government will go in or the authority will go in, retain all the experts, tie them up so that the individual is unable to have access to them and cannot afford to fight because he has not the dollars to risk on that kind of fight. It would seem to me that there would be some sense in limiting the number of experts that can be used at any one time.

Now, I want to briefly review, Mr. Speaker, a few of the recommendations made by Mr. McRuer and just ask some general questions. Perhaps the Attorney General can deal with them when he comes to reply.

I am referring now to page 1083 of McRuer and I am just going to run down a few of the recommendations. In recommendation No. 2 at page 1083, he says:

The Legislature should not confer the power of expropriation on any body or person unless it is clear that the power is inescapably necessary in the interest of good government, and that there are adequate controls over its exercise.

Well, that is really what we have been talking about. But the fact remains that there are still some 6,000 odd, I have forgotten, every now and then somebody does a new count, 8,000 odd, an awful lot, running into the thousands, of bodies in the province of Ontario that have powers of expropriation. It would seem to me that as a companion piece to this statute and perhaps even before this statute is finalized, that we could and should repeal the powers of expropriation now existing in the hands of these thousands of existing authorities. It seems to me that the necessity for continuing powers of expropriation in the hands of agricultural societies, cemeteries, various transportation authorities, stockyards, the Niagara Parks Commission, since you are transferring park authority to a specific Minister. I do not know—there is a Minister referred to in The Niagara Parks Act—whether that is one that will fall to you in any event or the Provincial Secretary (Mr. Welch). But since this is being done, whatever Minister is responsible for parks perhaps should have authority. The Ontario Telephone Co.—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I do not want to interrupt the hon. member but perhaps it might shorten a little bit the discussion. I appreciate the recommendation of cutting down the number of expropriating authorities and some thought has been given to that. Perhaps something can be done in that regard.

I would like to just point out that by bringing, for instance, the final decision as to the expropriation with respect to hospitals to the Minister of Health; with respect to conservation authorities to the Minister responsible for that, Energy Resources; universities to the Minister of University Affairs—and there are other examples I could give—you have in effect drawn in and brought to one focal point really one person, one personage, one authority, instead of a proliferation of universities, each one making its own decision. The final decision comes down to the one Minister.

I just interject, if I may, at this time to point out that the effect of what we have done, to require that political decision, has to large measure reduced in a sense your expropriating authorities.

Mr. Singer: To a certain extent I agree with the Attorney General, Mr. Speaker. You have overcome a very serious defect, but you still have several thousand, many thousand, bodies that have the power at least to harass, at least to force the thing to the point of a decision of necessity being made. It would seem to me that a careful review could take place. I would be surprised if you could do it now, if you have not really looked at it or have it ready to go forward with this statute. I do not think it is necessary to hold this statute up to do it.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Tell us what you would do with your individual boards of education—

Mr. Singer: There are only 136 boards of education now, I think, so they are cutting those down. I think there are many hundreds, if not thousands, of boards or bodies that have powers of expropriation where you could take them away completely; where you would find on inquiry that they have never exercised, and where they may never have had any intention of exercising it; or some where they have been exercised in almost every instance and exercised badly.

I think a review could and should be ordered along that line. McRuer has done this and summarized for you in tables here what statutes you have to look at; it is not a mammoth job. You could go down and perhaps send questionnaires to all these people.

I think you would be doing a great public service if you would come in one day and say, "We are taking expropriation powers away from 3,000 agencies that have them, because we do not think they are needed any more." I think you would do something to substantially encourage public faith in the actions of the government in this regard.

Section 6(3) of the statute is substantially the same as recommendation 9 in McRuer and the recommendation is:

Except in unusual circumstances, before final approval is given to the expropriation, persons affected by a proposed expropriation should be given an opportunity to be heard at a formal inquiry. In unusual circumstances, the Lieutenant Governor in Council should have power to permit the expropriating authority to proceed after proper approval without following the inquiry procedure.

That is the essence really of section 6(3) of the statute.

I talked to Mr. McRuer about that and he could envisage one or two instances in which this procedure might be used. But I wonder why it should be used and whether or not there should be some safeguards. Not that I do not trust the Lieutenant Governor-in-Council, Mr. Speaker, but where the public inquiry provision can be waived I think that we are entitled to know why it is being done.

I would think that if there is any necessity—and I would like to hear the Attorney General at some length tell us what the necessity is—if there is a necessity and this section is going to continue in the Act, I think there should be a tabling in this Legislature at the first possible opportunity, of the reasons the procedure has been used to waive the public hearing.

It seems to me that if an irresponsible government wanted to use the power of subsection (3) of section 6 of this Act, that they could circumvent all of the good they talk about in so many other sections. Therefore, while I say I do not mistrust the Lieutenant Governor in Council, or even the present government and the gentlemen who are going to be making these decisions, I think this kind of power to circumvent the provisions of the statute should be most carefully hemmed in with safeguards.

The first safeguard is, why do we need it? I think the Attorney General should put on record at some length why he feels the necessity for this section. It is not enough to say that McRuer recommends it, because everything McRuer recommends I do not think follows as being part of Holy Writ.

The second thing is, if it is going to be used, then there has to be some method of reporting, some immediate tabling of the reasons for it, so we will know why the Lieutenant Governor-in-Council in his wisdom has exercised this very unusual type of discretion.

The next recommendation of McRuer's which I want to mention—I have already dealt with 10 and 11–12; I see where you got that idea that the municipality should be its own approving authority. I have already commented on that and I say that just because McRuer has said it is so, does not make it so. I think that you are going to be begging for trouble when the municipality sits in judgment on its own decision.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: A local body.

Mr. Singer: As a local body, but they are going to sit in judgment on their own decisions in private. You do not even say they have to do it in public.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: They have to face the electors.

Mr. Singer: Electors do not even know what the inquiry officer has said.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: What you wanted last year.

Mr. Singer: The municipal council says 'we need this land for a garbage dump'. (That is the one that always seems to stir up the great trouble) and they sit and they fight and they argue and they listen to representations and finally they pass their by-law. Then the man who owns the land says 'I do not think you need that land, you should take the land across the street'.

So we have the public inquiry; and then the municipal council gets back the report of the inquirer and they make a decision on whether they were right or wrong.

Does that make any sense? I do not think it does. I do not think it makes any sense at all. There is going to be a review after the hearing of necessity. Let it go to either you, if you are going to be the one Minister, or, if you do not agree with me about one Minister, let it go to your colleague of Municipal Affairs because he will be accountable here. I think you have got to have it one step removed to bring impartiality to that decision.

If the Minister wants to quote McRuer to me look at number 15 of his recommendations—page 1084:

Expropriations by all school boards should be the subject of approval, not by the school boards, but by the Minister of Education.

So McRuer has two principles on the one page, one enunciated in paragraph 1 and one enunciated in paragraph 15. I do not know why he changes, but insofar as boards of education are concerned, he does not trust the boards. He says it should be the Minister of Education, but he does trust the municipal councils. They are both elected. It would seem to me to make much more sense if they were both treated the same way and both approvals be by the responsible Minister.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: There is an appendage, Mr. Speaker, where I note that McRuer speaks of appointed school boards. I think that is what he is thinking of there.

Mr. Singer: I find it hard on occasion to know what goes through even Mr. McRuer's mind when he does not say it in writing. It may be what he was thinking of, but it is not what he said here in No. 15.

In his recommendation No. 18 on page 1085 he deals at some length with procedural matters, and while I recognize that you have in the Act certain powers to pass regulations, the procedures that he sets out are very important and are a real safeguard to make sure that the procedural function of hearings is not so designed as to circumvent the fairness and equity of them. So my question to the Attorney General, Mr. Speaker, is: Why should not procedural matters such as these, as set out in recommendation No. 18, be incorporated as a part of the Act? It may be that his reply will be that he is trying to put them in the regulations. I would like to have some assurance that they would at least be in the regulations. My preference would be to put them in the Act, and I do not think there is any need not to put them in the Act because they are pretty basic suggestions that he makes and they would ensure equity.

The next one is No. 22:

An application to set aside or quash an expropriation should be made to the appellate division of the High Court of Justice.

I do not think we have that in this Act. I could not quickly find it as I went through it. I wonder whether we are denied the right to take this kind of a proceeding because of the provisions of the Act.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Which was that—I am sorry—

Mr. Singer: No. 22, the application to quash or set aside. He makes it as a specific recommendation, and I am not prepared to say really off the top of my head whether you have proscribed this remedy or not by the way the statute is written. I think it should be made abundantly clear that an application to quash or set aside still can be dealt with.

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order if I may, I enjoy listening to the member for Downsview, but perhaps the remarks which he has made—going through seriatim the recommendations of Mr. Justice McRuer—would more properly be dealt with when we deal with the bill clause by clause. I would ask, Mr. Speaker, that you give consideration to restricting the member for Downsview to the matter of the principle of the bill which is before us.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, in reply to my hon. friend from Riverdale, I am only dealing with the principles of the bill—

Mr. Speaker: Order, order!

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I want to speak, Mr. Speaker, to the point of order also.

Mr. Singer: I was speaking to the point of order as well, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Attorney General wishes to speak to the point of order.

Mr. Singer: I started to address myself to the point of order first, Mr. Speaker, as I recall.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I am sure this will not restrict the hon. member. All I wish to say, if he will allow me, is that I was about to make that point but I felt that perhaps I should be patient and long suffering. But I support his point.

Mr. Speaker: May I say that I was getting the impression myself that perhaps the hon. member for Downsview is not sticking strictly to the bill itself. He is referring to recommendations in another report, which does not necessarily have to do with the principle of this bill. Perhaps he should review the bill itself and stick to the principle of that particular bill.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, I am sure with your great knowledge of the rules of procedure you will agree with me that I have no other opportunity of dealing with the recommendations of McRuer, insofar as expropriation is concerned, except at second reading. It would be quite out of order to deal with them in regard to section 7 or 8 or 9 or 10 of this Act because at that point in committee—

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, if the member for Downsview—

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, surely I can finish a point of order without being constantly interrupted by the near leader of the NDP.

Mr. J. Renwick: I would like to ask, Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, I am talking on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I believe that the hon. member for Downsview is speaking to the point of order that had been raised. I made a suggestion, the hon. member for Downsview is replying to it, and I think he is in order at this moment.

Mr. Singer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If the near leader could just subside for a bit—

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): If you would just get in order instead of meandering around—

Mr. Singer: You are not credible so we do not need you either.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, if I may return to the point of order—I assume the office of Speaker goes on no matter who is in the chair—the point I was making is that it would be quite improper for me to refer to a report such as McRuer's on a committee reading dealing with this bill. I would be limited to dealing with the sections as they are there written, section by section, and either recommending amendments to them or deletions from them. But if I felt that new sections should be put in, I would think it would be quite proper that I would be ruled out of order. Surely the only time I can talk about things that are not in the Act and about pertinent outside authorities is at the time we deal with principles, and that is what I am doing at this point.

Mr. Speaker: I recall very distinctly that this matter arose last year during a discussion on one of the bills, and it is my recollection that my opinion then was that the course of action proposed by the hon. member was quite in order.

Mr. Singer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Notwithstanding all those rude interruptions that you are having, we are very interested in what you are saying.

Mr. Singer: Section 28 of the McRuer recommendation deals with the whole question of costs, which I have already dealt with, and I would refer the Attorney General to that one. He made some representations in No. 35 about the payment of fees and expenses of the arbitrator, but I would presume that the theme of the Act is that all these fees of all outside people—all people appointed under the provisions of this Act—will be paid for by government and will not in any way or at any time be charged back to the parties, and I would like the Attorney General to deal with that one.

No. 37 deals with an exemption that has been written into the Act relating to The Energy Act and the storage of gas. Again, the remarks I made about exempting highways, I think are applicable there. I want to know at some further length why it is necessary to exempt expropriation procedures under that Act from the general provisions here.

Finally, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

An hon. member: Do not stop him, he said "finally."

Mr. Speaker: Point of order!

Mr. Lawlor: I am having some difficulty following the member for Downsview. He refers to various numbers. The numbers have nothing to do with the bill before us as far as I can see. Would he make clear what sections he is concerned with as he goes through, please?

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the hon. member will endeavour to clarify his remarks for the hon. member for Lakeshore, but I hope that the members will realize that the clause by clause consideration of this or any other bill takes place in committee and that the general principles of the bill, whether they are in one or more clauses, are what are under discussion here. Those principles, of course, can include matters which any member feels are matters of principle not included and which should be included.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, I agree completely with what you said. Had the member for Lakeshore been listening, I repeated it three or four or five times, but I will do it once more. I was not referring to sections of the bill, I was referring to the various recommendations made by Mr. McRuer in—I will give you the full title just so you cannot miss it—

Mr. Lawlor: The wording is obvious—

Mr. Singer: It is report on the Royal Commission Inquiry into Civil Rights, Report No. 1, Volume 3. I commenced at page 1083 where he summarizes his recommendations in regard to expropriation and he does that seriatim from number one through to number 53. Each one of those are the numbers I have been using for some time. I have made that reference three times, Mr. Speaker, and it is—

Mr. Lawlor: That has very little relevance to the bill as such—

Mr. Singer:—It is unfortunate that the member for Lakeshore gets up and makes foolish points of order when he has not been listening.

Mr. Lawlor: The member's heavy sarcasm—

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, in conclusion—yes, the member's ridiculous point of order deserved a sarcastic answer.

Mr. Lawlor: My poor fellow—

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, finally—

Mr. Lawlor: Does the member not read these bills before him?

Mr. Singer: In concluding my remarks in connection with this bill—

An hon. member: Point of order!

Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence (Carleton East): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the member would permit a question before he concludes. Relating back to something earlier he said with regard to his criticism of the absence of any provisions as to costs at the trial of necessity.

He did not make clear to me at that time whether he felt those costs, if they are to be inserted in the Act under section 7, would be as of right or at the discretion of the inquiry officer.

I would like to know what his recommendation is specifically in this regard.

Mr. Singer: That is a good point, Mr. Speaker. My inclination would be that they should be as of right. Perhaps, there could be two scales. One as of right, which is a basic one and perhaps to be increased; perhaps party and party as of right on the lower level, and solicitor and client on the higher level. Because I would think that to properly approach the committee of inquiry in the trial of necessity one need have some kind of professional advice. But if the advice had been sought unreasonably or the hearing of necessity delayed for an unnecessary length of time, perhaps there should not be full costs. Perhaps there could be some scaling.

But I go back to my original principle, that the person who is put through these hearings did not seek to be expropriated. He was sitting there minding his own business when along comes the majesty of government and says, "We are taking your land away; now defend yourself if you want to." And I think he should be compensated for that on both levels. I trust that answers the hon. member's enquiry.

Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence: That would include cranks, would it not?

Mr. Singer: I do not think, Mr. Speaker, by suffering the odd crank that we are doing a disservice to the community. I think we have got to go back again to the point at which I started and say that a man has the right to enjoy his own property and to be left alone in that enjoyment. Along comes the majesty of government and says, "We are going to take it away from you or, if you want to keep it, you are going to have to go and fight a trial of necessity, or you are going to have to fight for every last dollar that you are going to get on expropriation." Then that man is entitled to compensation for the legal and professional advice that he has to seek to reasonably defend himself. If the odd crank is able to take advantage of it, well, that is too bad.

I would think that we should start with the basic right, not that people whose land is being taken are second-rate citizens as they have been, by and large, up to now. This is a great step forward and this is why we hail it. But I do not think we should stop sort of three-quarters along the road. I think we should go the full way.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that my reply to the question of the hon. member for Carleton East is a fitting conclusion to the remarks I have made.

I hope that the Attorney General will take these suggestions in the spirit that they are offered. I think we can make this a better Act if some of the principles here are changed. By the time it gets to committee perhaps we will have some revisions along the lines I have suggested before the committee.

Mr. Speaker: I wonder if the members would allow me a moment. The hon. leader of the Opposition has called to my attention the fact that when the list of students visiting the House today was given to me it did not include a school from the great South Dumfries township. We now have, in the east gallery, students from German School in South Dumfries township.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, speaking to the second reading of The Expropriation Act, 1968-1969, I do want very much to confine myself to the principles of the bill. I am sure you and the Attorney General will assume, rightly or wrongly, that I have read Mr. Justice McRuer's report on questions of expropriation.

Mr. Sopha: How can the member assume rightly or wrongly?

Mr. J. Renwick: Whatever one wants to.

Let me deal, Mr. Speaker, with two basic principles on expropriation.

One is that unless the subject of the Crown can find in the limits of this bill, the compensation to which he is entitled, he gets nothing else.

Secondly, let us be perfectly clear that the members of this House understand that anybody in the province whose property is expropriated, is expropriated by virtue of a statute of this Assembly. Therefore, the responsibility of this Assembly is to ensure not only that the public interest is served, but that the private interest of the individual whose property is expropriated is served at the same time.

When we come to the bill, I may say that I have, with one exception, serious reservations about approving the bill in principle.

We, in the caucus, will undoubtedly listen to the remaining arguments which are put before the House about the bill before coming to a conclusion as to whether to support it in principle on the second reading.

The one exception is that the bill does provide protection for that person who has been able in one way or another, to bring substantial pressure on the government, to amend the Expropriation Procedures bill. And that is, the single-family owner-occupied house. In substance, the bill is not bad in that area. It is certainly a very distinct improvement on the situation in which Mrs. Dorothy Graham of Monroe St., or formerly of Monroe St. in Don Mount, found herself when her property was expropriated by the city of Toronto under an urban renewal scheme.

She would, if she were entitled to the benefits of this bill (and of course, in the language of the bill she is not now entitled to the benefits of the provisions of the bill). She would have been entitled to receive, as of right, her market value for the property which was fixed at $12,000. She would have been entitled to receive, as of right, certain disturbance damages which would have permitted her to receive an additional 5 per cent, which was about $600.

She would have been entitled to receive her moving costs, and the costs which were involved in her acquiring an additional house or a new house or a replacement house. It is not very clear in the bill whether she would have been entitled to receive incidental expenses to which any person who moves from one house to another has to undergo.

It may be that in the language of the bill one could assume that that would be an additional amount which she would receive.

Then if she wished to do so, she could apply to the land compensation board. I make this point to the Attorney General; the bill does not provide that the expropriating authority is under any obligation to make an additional amount available in order that she may have a home for a home or something somewhat better than a home for a home. She would have to apply to the land compensation board who, by order, could provide that she would get an additional amount of compensation as, in the opinion of the board, is necessary to enable her to relocate her residence in accommodation that is at least equivalent to the accommodation expropriated.

In that respect I think it is fair to say that the bill is an improvement over the existing law. Perhaps a decided improvement. There are very substantial improvements which could be made in the language of the bill in order to make certain that the home-for-a-home provision in fact means what it says. Certainly, I disagree with the Attorney General, who put the province to his form of put-on by suggesting that the words "at least" really permit the board to grant any substantial improvement in the type of accommodation which the person might be entitled to receive on the home-for-a-home provision of the bill.

There are other areas dealing with the position of the individual single-family owner-occupied home, which we can deal with when the bill is referred to committee, which I assume it will be when it comes back through the committee of the whole House. If one examines the bill in detail, you will find, by and large, that particular class of citizen is protected to an extent under this bill, which protection he did not formerly have.

I am not so unsuspecting of the government to realize that, in fact, the greatest single impediment to an orderly redevelopment of the inner core of the city is the single-family homeowner. By giving the attention which they have given to him, they do provide him with some reasonable compensation. But I think the government has to be very clear that they must be prepared to lean over backwards to ensure that that person, whose property is expropriated for a public purpose, receives very generous treatment.

When we move the amendments for the bill, I think we will endeavour to make certain that that is the case. Otherwise, you immediately place the single-family owner-occupied home and the owner of that home in the position that either he is fortunate to be picked up in the lottery of private development for high-rise apartments—or other developments—and receives an additional amount of money that way, or he is left stranded in a taxation system which makes it more and more difficult for him to remain as a single-family homeowner in those areas of the city where that kind of development takes place. Or he falls in that class of person whose home is expropriated by the activities of government. Therefore, I think that the Attorney General has to make certain, and the government has to make certain, that that person is properly treated.

On that basis, as I say, I think we could bring ourselves to support the bill in principle.

Let me move to some of the other areas. There is an elaborate series of sections in the bill, from 4 to 8, providing for this pre-expropriation procedure. This is the Tory form of institutionalizing dissent and I agree that it is a very valuable procedure for the citizen, to protect him mainly against monumental governmental gas but not really to protect the individual citizen in a particular situation.

Mr. Singer: I did not think this was proposed by a Tory.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, I am certainly under no illusion that James Chalmers McRuer is a Democratic Socialist. What I am saying is that—

Mr. Singer: I think he would be the first to agree with you.

Mr. J. Renwick: —we should not labour under the illusion that this procedure, valuable as it is within its limited context, in fact is going to permit the individual citizen, in very many cases, to reverse the decision of government, no matter how elaborate the structure or no matter how much one separates the person who is the approving authority from the person who is the expropriating authority.

Therefore, within those limitations, I think we accept the procedure which is set forth, in the absence of any other way of doing it. We accept the proposition that, by and large, an accountable, elected official, either at the provincial level or at the municipal level or the school board level, should be the person who accepts the final responsibility for approving of an expropriation.

But I do not think we should get carried away on the proposition that in some way or other, very many individual citizens are going to be able to change the decision of government. Certainly it is not going to be the case in urban renewal schemes, using this procedure, that, in some way the people in that area are going to have the inquiry officer, and then the approving authority (be it the municipality as presently drafted or a Minister of the Crown if an amendment is brought in) is, in fact, going to say that the urban renewal scheme should not now proceed, and that in some way or other—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Would the hon. member permit a question? At this point I would like to ask, Mr. Speaker, does the hon. member not think that the procedures to which he refers, of trial of necessity and then the final approval by an elected Minister of authority, would have been very effective in some of the conservation grievances we had; a trial of necessity of the area of fairness, the reasonableness of the expropriation, and then the final decision by an elected Minister? Does he not think that might have been very effective in those situations, which are quite familiar to us?

Mr. J. Renwick: As the Ministers often say, that is a hypothetical question. Certainly in an urban renewal scheme, which has gone through the elaborate procedures of designation which are required under The Planning Act and under the federal housing Act, it is very unlikely that the individual citizen or group of citizens in an area designated for urban renewal, are going to be able to get the governmental authority to reverse its decision.

In the field of the conservation authorities—and I certainly am not an expert in the area of what lands should or should not be expropriated for conservation purposes—but in the elaborate preparation of plans for the enlargement of a conservation authority, or for the establishment of a conservation authority, it is again not very likely that the individual citizen in most cases, in such a large area of expropriation for a public purpose, is going to be able to get the expropriating authority to change its mind. Again, it may be that, as in the case of the expropriation by the University of Toronto of the property at Erindale, it may be that in that kind of situation the individual citizens or groups of citizens, can show that their property should not be expropriated, but that another area of land should be expropriated for a university purpose. That may also be true of a particular location of a hospital or a particular location of a school. Certainly it is most unlikely in terms of those large-scale public developments which the government must undertake and which require a tremendous amount of preliminary planning. That is not to say that the procedure is not worth having, I just want to put it in perspective so that the citizens of the province should not think that because this procedure is in the statute, that it is in any way very much of a guarantee of protection to them. It certainly gives them a forum in which they can express their views, and as I have said, it does protect the citizens against serious gaps by government. It may well be of course, that the very effect of having such provisions in the bill will mean that government, by and large, proceeds with a considerable amount more care in the elaboration of schemes which require the expropriation of land.

On that particular question of the pre-expropriation procedures, I agree with the comments of the member for Downsview that, if the citizen avails himself of the privilege of a hearing, then it should be up to the expropriating authority to show cause why they are going to expropriate his land. He should certainly come on first in the hearing, and it would seem to me that the citizen is entitled as a right.

My answer to the question from the member for Carleton East to the question which he addressed to the member for Downsview:

As a right, he should be entitled to his costs of representation, or the expenses to which he should be put, in putting his case before the inquiry, and I would earnestly ask that the Attorney General give consideration to introducing a clause permitting such expenses to be covered.

I noticed also in looking at that particular pre-expropriation procedure that there is no provision for notification to the owners of lands which may be injuriously affected by an expropriation. Now, it is true that if a part of an owner's land is taken, that owner will get notice with respect to the land which is expropriated, but a person whose land may well be injuriously affected, because of the expropriation, is not entitled to any notice. And of course, in a municipal area, where there is going to be a re-zoning, it is customary to give all the owners, the substantial area surrounding a particular area up for re-zoning, an opportunity to come in and state their case. And I would again suggest to the Attorney General that it is very important that a person whose property may be injuriously affected, should have an opportunity also to invoke the provision of section 428, of the draft bill.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Is it to the authority to decide who is likely to be injuriously affected? It seems to me that is very hazy, and probably very difficult.

Mr. MacDonald: Was the Minister's answer not to draw any line at all?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, no, any party, the Act says any party may come to the hearing, any party, as I understand the language, but I do not know, I am just asking for my own benefit—to clarify my own thinking. Should an expropriating authority, itself at that stage, make the decision as to how far out it reaches, how far the effect of its proposed work, construction or whatever, highway, or whatever it may be is going to extend, I wonder how you would—provide the limits. We do provide in a section of the Act that any party may come to that hearing, any party affected—

Mr. J. Renwick: Well, Mr. Speaker, I will not argue with the Minister on the question of the very last part of his statement, but I do not believe that is in fact so, under the sections of the bill. But, to answer his principle point, it seems to me, that there are immediately available two possible methods. One is, that you draw a fairly arbitrary geographical boundary around the area where the expropriation is going to take place, and give those people notice to come and say whether or not they believe their land is going to be injuriously affected by the development which will take place, and then because there is provision for publication in the local newspaper of the application for approval of the expropriation, it would seem to me that any person in that area who then advises the approving authority that he believes his land is going to be injuriously affected, should have a right to make a presentation to the inquiry officer and ask if he be in fact added as a party to the expropriating procedure.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That the inquiry officer shall add any owner whose land would be affected by the expropriation concerned or any modification thereof as a party to the enquiry.

Mr. J. Renwick: Is that the—I took that as being limited to the persons whose lands are in fact expropriated. But if that is so, then it goes a considerable way to meet the point which I made, but it may be that the Attorney General should consider a geographical demarcation of an area, so that person would receive specific notice if their lands fell within that area, so they would receive registered notices giving them the opportunity to come before the enquiry officers.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to turn to the other area which is of concern to me. As I have said, the single family owner-occupied home, the owner of that home, by and large, will be much better protected. But I ask him to give consideration to the other classes of persons that are dealt with in the bill, and one class which is not dealt with. The farmer, for a reason which I do not understand, has been excluded from the provisions of the bill. It is true that one can say that a farmer is a combination of a residential owner and he runs a business, but I think that from the point of view of the impact of the expropriating bill, that the farmer stands in a class apart from the small businessman in an urban area who runs a local grocery store who may be expropriated. And it certainly, the law reform commission, in its recommendation gave every indication that it felt that the farmer should be treated as a separate and distinct problem under the expropriation bill, and I would hope the Attorney General would be able to give some definitive reasons as to why the farmer as such was not dealt with as a special circumstance, or a special instance in the bill.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: To give him market value, damages for injurious affection, disturbances, relocation, and—if it is his residence—equivalent reinstatement; he is a citizen, and under the Act, he comes to all those benefits. If you said so for a farmer, you would have to say you would do the same things all over again. The farmer is included, that is my answer right now.

Mr. J. Renwick: Then, perhaps by dealing with the question of the businessman, I can draw more clearly to the Attorney General's attention, the concern which I have about the bill. I am speaking of the businessman as such—I am now speaking of a person—who is not necessarily the owner of land or the residential accommodation, but a business man who is a tenant and in many cases a tenant without a lease and is operating a business such as a small grocery store in an urban area. The only provision which I can find in the bill is that he would be entitled to business loss resulting from the relocation of the business. There is no indication in the Act as to what constitutes the business loss.

I do not think that there is sufficient jurisprudence that I know of, that can define or elaborate what is a business loss. I would suggest to the Attorney General that if they are acquiring a piece of property on which a business is being conducted, the owner of that business should be entitled to receive at least the net asset value of his business and should in addition be entitled to receive an amount by reason of the good will of the bill. I do not want to get in an elaborate discussion of what good will is, but by and large it basically means that people will continue to deal with them at that store. That has a value, which is separate and distinct from the question of whether or not he is going to be there one year from then or two years from then. Good will is determined on the basis of the past history of that business, and it would seem to me that in this provision of the bill, the businessman should be entitled to a specific definition of the way in which his business loss is to be calculated, and a specific definition of his right to some element for the good will of the business.

It is true that in part of section 19 the board may—and again it is discretionary—if the business is not going to be relocated, include an amount not exceeding the value of the good will of the business, but again the owner of that business must make his special application to the board in order to get that additional allowance. He is in this case placed in the same position as the person applying for the additional compensation on the home-for-a-home principle under section 15.

Again, I do not know whether the Attorney General is aware of it or not, but the small storekeeper in the urban renewal area of the Don Mount scheme saw before his eyes his customers just disappear from the area as they moved out elsewhere after their land was expropriated. His business ran down to practically nothing. It is not possible for him to relocate anywhere in that immediate area, because in that immediate area, within the radius of ten or 15 miles, there are any number of other small grocery stores or small local stores. That man, even though he did not have the benefit of a lease, is in my opinion entitled to have received by way of compensation, specifically, by law, an amount calculated in reference to the good will of his business, and that is the good will referable to the past three, four or five years in which he was carrying on that business at that location. Instead of that, as my understanding is, he received only the value of the goods in the store, at the price at which he could have sold them retail, and he sold off a goodly number of them that way, plus his fixtures, and nothing else. I think he ended up being offered some amount such as $1,000 on a business which had a gross turnover, tenuous as it may be, of upwards of $100,000.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Do we not cover that in section 19, subsection 1?

Mr. J. Renwick: No. Because in this particular case, the man did not relocate in another store. He would have had to apply under 19(2), and in this case one does not know unless there is some clear definition of what good will means in this statute. One cannot advise him what he is likely to get, and I would say that the land compensation board is going to have to spell out, in the absence of rules spelled out in the statute, what value is to be attached to good will; what the meaning of good will is; and what the meaning of business law says, and the extent of it, under section 19(1).

Mr. Speaker, I will move on to another case of a person who is without any real care under this statute, and that is the tenant who is without a lease, be he tenant of a whole house, be he tenant of a floor, be he a roomer, or the occupant of a portion of a dwelling house. As I understand it, even though that person is included under the definition of the term "owner", nevertheless he is only entitled to receive the kind of compensation which is provided in section 18(2) of the bill.

There are a large number of areas of the city where expropriation is likely to take place. Many people who have lived in those same locations for a long period of time as tenants, or occupiers, or roomers, do not have the benefit of any lease, and those persons, in my view, Mr. Speaker, are entitled to their moving costs, and disturbance costs, for being relocated regardless of the expropriating authority which may expropriate them, but particularly in the case of an expropriation under an urban renewal scheme.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I am sorry, I cannot quite follow the hon. member in that. I am trying to distinguish his remarks from the language of section 18 to which he referred, which speaks of relocation, disturbance, moving costs, and subsection 2 to which the hon. member particularly referred:

Shall pay to a tenant occupying expropriated land such compensation for disturbance and relocation as is appropriate having regard to—

—and then several other factors. Perhaps I was not listening carefully enough. If the hon. member would give me his thought again.

Mr. J. Renwick: Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, in 18(1) I would point out that the reference is to an owner other than a tenant. Then 18(2) deals with the compensation to be paid to the tenant, and 18(2) depends upon the existence in substance of a lease, although there is reference of a right to renewal of the tenancy or the reasonable prospect of renewal. I am speaking more particularly of the large number of people in the city who are either overholding tenants on a monthly basis or a weekly basis, who do not have any right of renewal or expectation of renewal, but who, nevertheless, by and large have lived there for a long period of time without any legal protection as tenants, subject to one week's notice or two weeks' notice, but lived there in many cases for many years in the central part of the city.

It would seem to me that there should be some provision, specifically that such persons are entitled to their relocation costs and any additional expense they may be put to in having to pay, quite likely, higher rates for a room or a floor in other parts of the city, than they are paying in the kind of area which is subject again mainly to an urban renewal scheme:

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Even though they are free to go tomorrow without saying good-bye? The landlord has no protection in this situation.

Mr. J. Renwick: Yes, even though they may be free to go tomorrow, because again they did not choose to go tomorrow. The expropriating authority is not the one to say, "Yes, well you may go tomorrow, therefore we do not have to pay you". It is the expropriating authority which comes in and again, the member for Downsview (Mr. Singer) made this point—they are the ones who came in and disturbed the person in his occupation and it is just as easy to say he may go tomorrow as he may not go for ten years because nobody knows that fact. I do want to draw to the attention of the Minister, Mr. Speaker, that there is no protection for a roomer, or an occupant, or a tenant, who does not have the protection of a lease, and the only place where I see there are some words which may possibly be stretched to cover that, is in the item which refers to "the reasonable prospects of renewal" and that is a very tenuous clause to provide protection for such a large number of people.

Mr. Singer: Surely the member means a long term lease.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I am just wondering out loud if it would not be fair—I am wondering about the fairness of putting the suggestion that the tenant may protect himself if he wishes to do so, by entering into a lease and if he says, "I do not want to do that because I am not sure I want to stay here a month, or six months, or a year", he has it within his own power to protect himself by signing a lease—I just wonder.

Mr. J. Renwick: Well again, Mr. Speaker, I realize the point the Attorney General makes. The fact of the matter is that many people live without the protection of a lease, many of them do not want to ask their landlords for a lease and many landlords would not be prepared to grant them a lease of any extended term. This is just a fact of life in downtown—in the main part of Toronto—that people do not have leases that live in houses as roomers or boarders or tenants of a floor in a house. It seems to me that it is deserving of the attention of the Minister to draft an amendment to the bill which will provide for coverage in that particular area.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): How could the member draft such a clause?

Mr. MacDonald: We will show the Minister when we get on that side.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Impossible.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, if I may, just in summary, deal with those special categories. I think the farmer does deserve special attention in the bill; I think that the business man deserves something more than the rather cursory attention that he has been granted in section 19 of the bill—a method by which his good will, the value of his business, and his business loss is determined under statutory authority so that the person who is being expropriated in those circumstances has an opportunity to make the kind of calculations which he is required to make in order to determine whether or not the offer which he receives is in any way a fair offer.

Insofar as the tenant without the lease is concerned, I think that the Attorney General has got to realize that in the urban centres of the province there are many people who just, for one reason or another, are holding tenants on a monthly basis—or they may never have had a lease and are tenants only under a peril lease—from week to week or from month to month. Those persons should be entitled specifically to provision for at least their relocation costs, including their moving costs and some method by which they can relocate in another room or another floor of the house. In the city of Toronto they are bound to have to pay more money than they are paying at the present time, in most instances. If that is so, then I think there should be some method by which that compensation should be provided for those people.

Then, Mr. Speaker, I would like to turn to another matter. Let me draw it to his attention because we can deal with it when it comes through committee. Mr. Justice McRuer, in his report, provided that the original offer should be accompanied by the immediate payment of 100 per cent of the compensation and in the drafting of the bill in section 25, provision is made for payment of 100 per cent of the market value but this does not provide for the payment of any of the additional amounts for disturbance which are included in the compensation.

While the Attorney General is considering that particular section of the bill I think that the person to whom the offer is made should be entitled to receive an itemized list of the areas for which he is receiving compensation and not just a lump sum statement of that amount. So that he can in fact see market value—so many dollars, relocation costs—so many dollars, legal moving and other expenses—so many dollars; so that he can have an itemized statement of the amounts which he is receiving so that he can take that and he can compare it with the statute to find out whether or not he is getting a fair deal on each of the particular items included in the compensation.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think that comes out fairly well in 25(2).

Mr. J. Renwick: It may be, but again that deals mainly, as I see it, with the actual appraisal report of the market value and does not deal with the additional costs of disturbance damage which are allocated under the statute.

The next item that I would like to comment about, which I believe is the principle of the bill, is again one which the member for Downsview dealt with, and that is, the question of the statutory five per cent interest. It seems to me that it should be quite possible in this instance for a formula to be set in the statute or provision made that the Lieutenant Governor-in-Council would determine the rate of interest that would be payable from the date on which compensation is to be determined until it is finally paid.

The five per cent is not realistic, and as I understand it, even in the case of student loans, the government now uses a formula which is something in the neighbourhood of 7.75 per cent, which was established in August, 1968. Certainly, under The National Housing Act, the formula which is in use there provides that at the present time, since October 1, 1968, the rate for NHA mortgages is 8.75 per cent.

So it would seem to me, Mr. Speaker, that the Attorney General should give serious consideration to substituting a formula method for determining the interest that is payable by the expropriating authority for the specific rate of five per cent.

My last two or three comments, which again, I think, are related to the principle of the bill, relate to the costs and the expenses of the expropriation procedure itself.

Mr. Speaker, the Attorney General realizes that, with the lack in the bill of any provision for expenses in the pre-enquiry aspect of the expropriation, they are not dealing with the amounts to be included in compensation for the legal and survey and other costs in acquiring another home, and dealing with the costs through to the expropriation. The only provision there is that if you finally land up with the land compensation board, then at that point you are entitled in certain cases, depending on your luck in guessing the numbers game, to your costs within this 95 per cent formula involved in Section 33 of The Act.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I must say I do not like that expression. I think it depends on your reasonableness, or your exactitude in assessing the value of your property. If you carry the expropriating authority, you carry the battle forward and succeed, or succeed within 95 per cent, but it is not a case of guessing at the numbers game. You have a sincere and honest feeling that your property is worth more than you are being offered. If you come within 95 per cent of that, then you get costs. In the language of The Act "at the discretion of the board". That is pretty definite. I must take exception to "guessing". I do not think there is any luck in this. It is true you cannot always tell what a court or a judicial body is going to decide, but if you can establish a reasonable valuation, you get costs.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, I still think that there is a certain aspect of the numbers game, because at that point it is not the owner saying what his land is worth. By that time he will be using an appraiser; he will be using someone who has some skill in the area, and he may, or he may not be within the 5 per cent margin which determines whether or not he gets his costs. I do not recall the name of the case, but maybe the member for Downsview would help me, and maybe the Attorney General himself knows, but there was one on University Avenue, one of the fraternity houses, which finally went to the court—whatever that fraternity was. The court made a very substantial change in what the arbitration board had decided was the value of the property.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: In which case the fraternity would have got its costs. Was it upward or downward?

Mr. J. Renwick: I think it was downwards. I am not certain.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It was upwards I think.

Mr. J. Renwick: There is a situation where it may be up or down in a widely fluctuating amount; in which case if it were down, he would not get the costs under this particular provision, and I think that when you get the—

Mr. Singer: The chiropractors' case is the best, the chiropractors who had a series of awards. When it finally got up to the Supreme Court of Canada, they brought it down, they divided it by seven, and I think the plaintiffs lost most of their award in their costs, because it went all the way to the Supreme Court of Canada.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: May I just toss out this thought? If you award—I do not want the hon. members to suggest that you pay all costs in any event. If you do, then the chiropractor, the fraternities, or whoever's property is being taken, have nothing to lose. They can go right to the court of appeal. This is something one has to bear in mind.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, I think the court of appeal can deal with costs in accordance with their rules, but we are talking about the land compensation tribunal, which in fact, when you rule out this so-called kitchen table negotiation board is the only area—it is really the first place where there is any sort of a judicial assessment of the compensation being paid. It is really the first run that the person has at it, under rules. The negotiation board is simply an attempt to bring the two parties together.

At that point then it seems to me that the person whose land has been expropriated—going back again to the fundamental principle that he did not ask them to take his land—should be entitled to his costs at the land compensation board without some arbitrary decision as to the extent to which he would be reimbursed for his costs. I do not think it should be discretionary; I think that the citizen in those circumstances is entitled to receive his costs for that expropriation, and I would ask the Attorney General if he would give serious consideration to that particular point.

There are many other points. I want to comment very briefly on the section relating to the retroactivity of the bill. I think that the bill should at least go back to some arbitrary date, and the date which happens to appeal to me is January 1, 1966. I know people can make arguments for many other dates, but I select January 1, 1966, because

I do not see how anyone can look at the section which is included as an appendix in the law reform commission report about the survey done in the Don Mount area without realizing that a very substantial injustice has been wreaked on a large number of people because of the vacuum in the expropriation law at that time. January 1, 1966, would cover the people in the Don Mount area.

I agree there is always the problem of reconstructing what took place, in many cases, but I am quite certain that with the same patience with which the people of Ontario have waited for this bill, the government with patience could sort out the additional amounts of money which the people in the Don Mount area would be entitled to receive under this bill.

It may include other people, but I think it is a very haphazard method to provide in the bill that if you happen to have not settled, then you have the benefits of these compensation provisions, but if you have settled, for many reasons—extraneous reasons—you are not entitled. My only recommendation to the Attorney General is that he select an arbitrary date and make it retroactive to that date, and I certainly recommend, and I intend to so move in committee, that that date be January 1, 1966.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I would like to say that I think it is not fair to say that it is haphazard when you say those things which are done and finished are done. Those things which are still open will get the benefit of the compensation provision of this legislation. There is nothing haphazard about that. We are just saying that for those that have been settled and the amount agreed upon, it is finished. Maybe it is not fair; I would argue it is, but I certainly say it is not haphazard.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, it is haphazard in the sense that the Attorney General does not appear to understand the immense pressures which an expropriation places upon people who are in an area such as Don Mount. There are immense economic pressures to move.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps if the hon. member is not finished with his remarks on the bill, there is not time remaining tonight, and he might move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, I will finish if the House will just give me the forbearance to complete—

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps we would ascertain if the House would be willing to do that, because the hours of sitting are until 6 o'clock.

Mr. J. Renwick: I just want to make that point that you are not disturbing anybody's rights which may have been acquired in the interval, other than the expropriating authority's, but what you are doing is rectifying a very serious injustice which has been done to a number of people. I would certainly commend, Mr. Speaker, to the House the reading of the survey respecting the Don Mount expropriations which is included as an appendix in that report.

That concludes my remarks, Mr. Speaker; one could go on on this kind of a bill for a long time.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in view of the importance of this bill I suggest that we carry on tomorrow when the House reconvenes with the debate on the second reading and thereafter continue with the Throne Debate.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 6.05 o'clock, p.m.

Presenting reports.

Motions.

Introduction of bills.

THE PREPAID HOSPITAL AND MEDICAL SERVICES ACT

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Prepaid Hospital and Medical Services Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Speaker, the bill makes prescription drug plans subject to the Act, in the same manner as hospital and medical services plans.

THE DAMAGE BY FUMES ARBITRATION ACT

Hon. A. F. Lawrence (Minister of Mines) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Damage By Fumes Arbitration Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, this is a minor Act containing two technical amendments. One part of it broadens and clarifies the definition of sulphur fumes so that it will embrace sulphur fumes from all types of smelters and refineries, including those used in the smelting and refining of lead and zinc and the second amendment to the Act, relates to the cost of administering the Act which is, of course, recovered from the industry.

At present there is provision for recovering expenses not exceeding $30,000 in any one year. This is being increased to $50,000 to cover increased costs in dealing with the broad coverage of the Act.

THE MINING ACT

Hon. A. F. Lawrence moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Mining Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, these are what we believe to be very important amendments to The Mining Act. The two main parts of this Act relate to staking procedures within the province. The first is a removal of the present limits of 90 claims which any individual may stake in Ontario in any one year. The second main amendment relates to what we call universal mining claim tags. At the moment to stake a claim and record a claim in any mining division requires one to purchase those mining claim tags in the mining division where the claim is located. This removes this and permits people to purchase universal mining claim tags, that is, claim tags that may be purchased at any mining recorder's office in the province and used in any area of the province, and this is a recommendation that has been made to the department for many years from various prospectors' groups as well as reports of select committees of this Legislature.

THE LAW ENFORCEMENT COMPENSATION ACT, 1967

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Law Enforcement Compensation Act, 1967.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Bullbrook: Mr. Speaker, this amendment ensures that compensation is payable whether or not the victim's injury is incurred in the presence of a peace officer.

The purpose, sir, is to remedy a situation that has arisen as a result of a restrictive but proper interpretation by the law enforcement compensation board of the present statute.

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): On a point of order in relation to the bill that has just been introduced, can you inform me if a private member is allowed to introduce a bill which entails the expenditure of funds?

Mr. Speaker: It is normally and, in fact, legally the prerogative of the government, the Treasury benches, to introduce such bills. I have not had the opportunity of reading this particular bill so I am not in a position to deal with the matter—but I will be glad to look at it.

Mr. Bullbrook: Mr. Speaker, if I may address this point of order?

Mr. Speaker: Of course.

Mr. Bullbrook: The proposed legislation has been submitted to legislative counsel—I want you to know that, sir—and also I did take the matter up with the Clerk in connection with the proposition, not to the substance of the legislation but the general intention.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): May I say in addition, on the same point of order, that the bill that my colleague seeks to have amended sets out the expenditure of public money. This is merely a change in the method in which public money, that has already been voted, can be expended.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): I have as yet not seen the bill, but we will abide by your decision.

CONTROL OF AIR POLLUTION FROM MOTOR VEHICLES

Mr. Shulman moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to provide for the control of air pollution from motor vehicles.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Shulman: The purpose of this bill is to reduce air pollution produced by motor vehicles in this province, and specifically it lays out standards for the production of pollution in the form of nitrogen oxides for which, at the present time, there are no laws in the province.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): I move to raise a point of order because of the intervention of the Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts), and I do not wish as a private member to see a matter as important as this left in doubt. The earlier point of order by the member for High Park was intended to be, and was a mischievous intervention and so we can characterize it.

It would be difficult to conceive how any legislation administered by the state—or any arm of it—could be administered without the expenditure of public money in some form. As I understand the rule, regarding the liberty of any other than a person who has the confidence of the Lieutenant Governor—that is to say a member of the executive council—to introduce a bill, the rule is that only the executive council may advise the sovereign about the raising of or the expenditure of public money.

And that rule is in respect to bills that have as their substance, the raising of the public revenues and the expenditures of them. But if the bill only incidentally, and in an ancillary way, involves the expenditure of public money, in order to carry out the efficient administration of the Act, then that does not breach the rule. And that is, consummate, of course, with the earlier statement of principle that it is quite impossible to enact any legislative device without spending money in some form.

I would like to leave it that way with you, sir, in order that we may protect our rights. I am rather startled that a member of the Opposition should get up, as the member for High Park did, and make that intervention, thus seeking to inhibit my friend from Sarnia. Because by doing that, he is inhibiting—

Mr. Speaker: The member has made his point, and he is now expounding on a matter of personal opinion, which is not in order at this time. I am pleased to have the member's views. I will take the matter under advisement; I will look at the bill myself; and I will advise the House as to my views, not only on this bill, but on the interpretation of the rule as it has been brought into discussion this afternoon.

Mr. Sopha: Will Mr. Speaker permit me to complete my point of order?

Mr. Speaker: Provided the member is speaking on the point of order, and not expressing his personal opinion of other members' actions in the House.

Mr. Sopha: Well, I would hate to feel inhibited about expressing opinions about other members. That would put us in silence completely. However, having made that point, I urge upon you, because I am so jealous of the rights of private members of this House, that before you come to a decision as to our liberty to introduce bills, or would restrict that liberty—that perhaps you will give the leader of the Opposition or someone appointed by him an opportunity to make representation to you, in the privacy of your own rooms.

Mr. Speaker: I would point out to the member, and all the members of this House, that Mr. Speaker is, by tradition, and I hope by practice, a defender of the rights and privileges of the members of this House. I have tried and will continue to fulfil that position and those responsibilities. I will be glad to receive representations or advice from the leader of the Opposition or any other member, but the decision will be made by Mr. Speaker, on his interpretation of the rules, and the precedence of this House and, if necessary, of other Houses from which we draw our rules.

The hon. member for High Park has a point of order, or another bill?

Mr. Shulman: On the point of order, sir. I just want to clear up some confusion that appears to have arisen in one of the member's minds.

I was not objecting to the admission of this bill. I was enquiring as to whether or not a private member had this right; because if we have this right I have a large number of bills I would like to introduce.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order! The Speaker has the floor.

Yesterday, the member for Windsor West (Mr. Peacock) raised a point of order and I promised that I would take it under advisement, which I did. With the assistance of the Clerk of the House, I have perused the rulings and precedents and I find some items which may be of assistance to us in connection with the matters of: first of all, questions generally—that is, oral questions or questions generally; and second, questions of ministerial statements before the orders of the day.

I would refer to a ruling made by Mr. Speaker Downer, in this House, on February 15, 1960, and if the House will allow, I will read the preamble to the ruling in order that we may have some of the background and I quote:

Before the orders of the day, Mr. Wintermeyer, leader of Her Majesty's loyal Opposition, directed the Speaker's attention to two questions which members of his group had submitted to the Speaker as questions to be asked orally, before the orders of the day. Mr. Speaker had requested the members concerned to table these questions as inquiries of the Minister for publication on the order paper. Mr. Wintermeyer asked Mr. Speaker to advise the House as to the reason for this request. Mr. Speaker then delivered the following ruling:

"On Thursday last, February 11, there was some discussion relative to the procedure on questions and statements before the orders of the day. I therefore felt it desirable to review the rules and customs of the House applicable.

Firstly, with respect to questions, I should point out at the outset, that the proper way to ask questions is to give notice therefore to the clerk at the table and have them placed on the order paper as inquiries of the Minister, as provided in Rule 37.

The only questions that may be asked orally before the orders of the day are those, where some urgency is evident. In such cases oral questions are permitted. They are submitted to the Speaker in writing before noon and approved by him. The question must then be asked in the words in which it has been approved by Mr. Speaker, no preamble being permissible.

This is a normal rule as to any question that is provided in Rule 37. Of course, adequate notice of such questions must also be given to the Minister concerned in order that he may prepare his answer.

Secondly, as to statements made before the orders of the day: by the custom of the House, Ministers of the Crown are not only permitted but, indeed, are expected to report to the House from time to time on matters within their purview which they deem to be of particular interest and concern to the House. A reasonable number of questions and clarification of such statements are customarily permitted. . . ."

On April 11 of this year, I reviewed the matter in somewhat similar terms and I will not read that ruling because it was made in the presence of most of the members of this House, but I will read the summing up and to sum up, I stated:

Statements before the orders of the day are inexplicably bound up with the onus of departmental administration and that no debate on such is permissible for the simple reason, of course, that there is no motion before the House for debate.

So the short answer to yesterday's problem is that if, in the opinion of Mr. Speaker or the House, if Mr. Speaker's ruling should not be acceptable, the question is one of clarification and it may be asked of a Minister after he has made a statement before the orders of the day.

The hon. member for Scarborough East.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough East had the floor on a point of order when Mr. Speaker rose.

Mr. T. Reid (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, my point of order has to do with the clarification of a precedent that may or may not have been set in this Legislature yesterday. It is different from the point discussed by Mr. Speaker himself just now.

I would like to review this very briefly because it is the sequence of events that makes sense here.

In Hansard on Monday, December 2, page 269, I asked the supplementary question: Does the Minister—in this case of Education—believe in corporal punishment? The Minister replied that he felt it was not a proper question, not a proper supplementary question. Then you, sir, stated: "Order! The hon. member's supplementary question is quite out of order and therefore calls for no reply from the Minister."

And then yesterday, sir, the Minister of Education (Mr. Davis) rose in his seat in this House, referred to the question I had asked him and also, I believe, to the supplementary question which I had asked him, and then went on to say: "I just wish to read to the House a memorandum," etc.

He went part-way through this statement and I rose on a point of order, stating: "Mr. Speaker, if I recall the rough copy of Hansard correctly, you ruled my supplementary question out of order yesterday", and so forth.

And you replied, sir, that the hon. member's question was ruled out of order yesterday and the Minister's reply was ruled out of order yesterday. You said: "I think those rulings were quite in order." You went on to say: "The hon. Minister is now making a statement which I think he is entitled to make," etc.

Was your ruling yesterday setting a precedent for a Minister to be able to rise in this House to answer a supplementary question which you had previously ruled out of order, or is the precedent simply what you stated just now—that a Minister may rise before the orders of the day to make a statement?

I think it is very important, because if the precedent is—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has asked his question, I will answer it. There is no question in my mind and I have a distinct recollection of these particular matters, that in my opinion the Minister was making a statement before the orders of the day. I had been so advised by the Minister's office prior to the opening of the House that he would make a statement and so far as I was concerned his preamble perhaps was not in order but the statement certainly was from my viewpoint.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, that clears up the point I had.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, when you were making your previous ruling you referred to a ruling made by Mr. Speaker Downer in 1960. It is my fairly distinct recollection that Mr. Speaker Downer served before 1960 and Mr. Speaker Murdoch occupied that position in 1960.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is quite correct. It would appear that I cannot read the writing which was given to me, because most certainly Mr. Speaker Downer was the Speaker from 1955 to 1959 and had Mr. Speaker had his glasses on he might have been able to read it properly.

Mr. Sopha: Well, Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, you will forgive me, I regret very much that you have restricted the Opposition from the facility of making comments upon statements and I draw to your attention that in the Ottawa House—and I think for many years—there is unrestricted liberty for one spokesman from each of the parties to make a comment upon a ministerial statement and, indeed, when they had five or six parties there—I do not know if they have that many now, but at one time they had five or six—and each of the groups have the opportunity to make a fairly lengthy comment and I want to draw to your attention, sir, and I do so with the greatest respect, how that accords with reason and common sense, because one can see here by participating in the debates that frequently, ministerial statements from that side are one-sided, opinionated, controversial, and in conflict with—

Mr. Speaker: Order. While I always appreciate the good advice and the learning of the hon. member—

Mr. Sopha: Is Mr. Speaker being sarcastic?

Mr. Speaker: No, Mr. Speaker is not being sarcastic, because the hon. member is a very learned member of this House, a very assiduous member, a very well-read member, and one who can express himself eloquently, and does so. And while I am pleased to have the views that he has stated, they really are not on the point of order, they are merely expressing his view of what the rules of this House should be. Unfortunately Mr. Speaker is bound by what the rules and precedents of this House are, and therefore the proper forum for the hon. member's discussion of this would either be a debate in this House on the changing of the rules, or else a submission to such committee of this House as is responsible for the rules, or any changes therein.

Now I have no objection and I would be glad to have the hon. member's further comments but I believe that they would be out of order unless the House itself would wish to avail themselves of those comments.

Mr. Sopha: May I add this with gravity, that I hope, sir, that you do not lay it down that the rules as determined by you from time to time are so inflexible that it is not open to members of this House to comment on what they might be ideally.

This House, of course the basic proposition in respect of the rules—and I want to leave this thought with you—is that the rules are what the House says they are, and the House, quite apart from the government's position in it, always has complete freedom to change the rules to suit its own wishes and desire in accord with the efficient despatch of public business. Now, that was the context in which I drew to your attention what I thought was the good sense that members from all sides of the House should have an opportunity to—

Mr. Speaker: I appreciate entirely what the hon. member is saying, but the time that the members of this House have to debate those matters is in a proper forum of this House when those matters are under consideration.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I think you do unduly restrict me and I want you to know that.

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member for Humber.

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): Mr. Speaker, I would like to rise on a point of privilege and state that the reason for rising results from a question I asked on December 2, 1968, of the Minister of Education. The question was: How many adults have completed the course in occult science at the Centennial College of Applied Arts and Technology in Scarborough?

Of the graduates—mark those words, Mr. Speaker—how many are specializing in alchemy, vampirism, lycanthropy, and how many are just plain witches?

As a result of that statement and the answers, a cartoon appeared in this morning's Globe and Mail, Mr. Speaker, which depicted what appears to me to be the visage of the Minister of Education hovering or vaporizing out of a coffin with long shaggy hair, two fangs, long dirty fingernails, and what appears to be me cringing there.

Mr. Speaker, I deem this cartoon to be most insulting because I have never known the Minister of Education to have dirty fingernails.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville has a question of the Prime Minister.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, the question of the Prime Minister is as follows: Is the Premier prepared to establish an auto repair probe in Ontario as a result of the unusually high increase in auto repairs which have been brought to the attention of senate investigators in the United States during the past week?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, we are interested in the results that have come out of this senate investigation in the United States, and of course we will follow them up in this country. But to date we are not aware of a similar situation existing here as is brought out by these findings. We will check on them, but I am prepared to say we will have the type of investigation the hon. member asks for.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Premier a supplementary question? Is the Premier's office doing any investigations to find out if such practices as exist in the United States do not exist here?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: It is not being done from our office, Mr. Speaker, but it is being done.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Wentworth has a question of the Prime Minister.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, a question for the Prime Minister. Is it the government's intention to have proclaimed The Operating Engineers' Act, 1965, and, if so, when?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, we intend to proclaim this as soon as possible. The delay has been caused by the difficulty in preparing regulations under the Act. This is being done in conjunction with those who are particularly concerned with the Act, and as soon as that is complete the Act will be proclaimed. I would hope it would be early in the new year.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, are we going in any particular order?

Mr. Speaker: We are going in order of precedence, the Prime Minister first. The member has a question of the Prime Minister?

Mr. T. Reid: Does the Premier plan to include in his delegation to the International Cultural Conference in Niger in two weeks time a French-speaking Canadian from Ontario?

Secondly, has the Premier received a direct invitation from Niger to send a French-Canadian from Ontario to the conference?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I have received no invitations from Niger of any kind, and that is where the rest of the question falls to the ground.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Humber has a question of the Minister of Health.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Speaker, how many cases of venereal disease were reported in Ontario during 1966, 1967, and to date in 1968? Does the Minister know how many were minors? If the Minister's answer is "yes" to that question, I will have a supplementary.

Has the Minister obtained a report of the American Medical Association convention being held this week in Miami Beach which indicates a serious v.d. epidemic on this continent?

Lastly, is parental consent necessary before doctors may treat minors who are infected with venereal disease?

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Speaker, the number in 1966 was 3,940; in 1967 was 4,539, in 1968—first ten months, 4,097.

The answer to the second question is "yes". In 1966 there were 728; 1967 there were 712; these were under the age of 19.

To number 3—all the information we have concerning the reports emanating from the AMA convention in Florida is that contained in the newspapers. Because of our association with the American Medical Association we will be receiving copies of the original papers in the near future.

Under the present v.d. regulations dealing with persons under the age of 16, parents are responsible to see that they receive adequate treatment.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Lakeshore has questions of the Minister of Health.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two questions for the Minister of Health:

Has the department investigated and obtained information regarding the air pollution conditions of the Ontario buildings plant on Grand Avenue, Etobicoke?

What action is the department taking?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Yes, under section 8 of The Air Pollution Control Act, an order has been directed to have the conditions rectified. The work is currently in progress.

Mr. Lawlor: May I ask a supplementary question? Is it possible that I might get a look at that order? May I see the order?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I would have to ask advice about this, Mr. Speaker. I do not know if that lies within my right. This is an order directed against a firm and I would have to ask my legal branch before I can answer the question. I will have an answer for the hon. member tomorrow.

Mr. Lawlor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The second question. When is the report being prepared by David Jackson and Associates for the Alcoholism and Drug Addiction Research Foundation expected to be received? Is it on schedule, and what is the estimated cost of the report?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: The foundation expects to receive the report in approximately six weeks, it will be on schedule and the estimated cost is reported to be $50,500.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sudbury East has a question of the Minister.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): Can the Minister advise the House what time limit has been given to INCO and Falconbridge to submit definitive plans for controlling pollution from their operations in the Sudbury area? If no time limit was given, why not?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, I was somewhat in error when I advised the hon. member yesterday that a time limit had been given—rather a time limit had been accepted by us.

The first time limit given was October of this year. The company advised us that they were unable to produce the report requested by that time. They had had to retain another firm of consultants—I believe from New York—and they expected the best deadline they could meet would be the end of December of this year. We accepted that and we will be in constant touch with the company to see that that time limit is met, and if not we will want to know why.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Beaches-Woodbine has questions of the Minister of Social and Family Services.

Mr. J. L. Brown (Beaches-Woodbine): A question of the hon. Minister of Social and Family Services. Would the Minister inform the House whether the programme at Boys' Village, which was heavily subsidized by this department, has been accredited?

If not what is the reason?

What is the policy of the department toward the emotionally disturbed child?

Are children's aid societies encouraged not to register as clients children with emotional problems?

If so, is this the policy of the department?

Hon. J. Yaremko (Minister of Social and Family Services): Mr. Speaker, The Ontario Department of Health is responsible for the accreditation of such institutions as Boys' Village following the policy outlined two years ago by the Minister of Health in a White Paper on emotionally disturbed children.

However, I understand Boys' Village did apply for accreditation with The Health Department and its application was rejected at this time. It did not meet the criteria of the accreditation committee.

In regards to part two; the government's policy in this area has been outlined by the Minister of Health in the same White Paper to which I refer.

As to part three; the answer is no.

Mr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, would the Minister accept a supplementary?

What is the reason for the village not meeting the standards of accreditation?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Speaker, I believe I answered the member's question regarding that. It did not meet the criteria set forth by the accreditation committee.

Mr. Brown: In what respect, sir? In what respect did it fail to meet the criteria?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I do not have that information, that is a matter for the committee, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has a further question?

Mr. Brown: It should be up to standard by now.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has a further question of the Minister? The same one has come in twice, I am sorry. The hon. member for Oshawa.

Mr. C. G. Pilkey (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, a question of the hon. Minister of Social and Family Services.

At what point in development is the province's participation in the extension to Hillsdale Manor for the aged in Oshawa?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Speaker, I recently had the opportunity of meeting with a delegation headed by the then mayor, Mayor Marks. Following that, a press release was sent out in which I stated that the department was reviewing its programmes in this regard and that the proposed extension of Hillsdale Manor would receive every consideration.

If I may include the answer to a supplementary question that the member for Humber asked the other day; he was asking certain figures. The number was 30.

Mr. Pilkey: Mr. Speaker, could I ask a supplementary question please; two questions really? Is the review for the whole province of Ontario and when do they expect to have the review completed?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: The review, Mr. Speaker, is for the whole of the province of Ontario and it will be in due course.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Correctional Services.

Why is a certain prisoner, who until recently was serving time at Millbrook, for arson, being held in the detention cells at Guelph, when the apparent cause of his removal was mental illness?

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): Mr. Speaker, as I have been occupied at meetings all morning and the first I saw of this question was when I entered the House, I will have to take it as notice.

Mr. Pilkey: It is the policy of the department.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Windsor-Walkerville has a question of the Minister of Transport.

Mr. B. Newman: Yes, Mr. Speaker, the question of the Minister is as follows.

Has the Minister sent representatives of his department as observers to the United States Senate Committee Anti-Trust hearings on auto repairs?

And a supplementary question. If not, has the Minister made arrangements to have representatives of his department to examine the reports of the committee?

Hon. I. Haskett (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the question is in two parts. My answer to the first part is no, and to the second part: this type of review is carried out by our department as a matter of routine.

Mr. Sopha: The Minister means "maybe".

Mr. Speaker: The member for Humber has questions of the Minister of Trade and Development.

Mr. Ben: Yes, Mr. Speaker—the Minister of Trade and Development.

How many people in Ontario Housing have received notices to vacate in the last six months?

Two, what are the procedures for their appeal of these notices to vacate?

Three, what have been the reasons for notices to vacate in Ontario Housing this year?

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Trade and Development): Well, Mr. Speaker, I do not have this information. I am prepared to get it, but I would like clarification on the first question of how many people in Ontario Housing have received notices to vacate in the last six months. Do you want all Ontario or just Metro? If you want all Ontario, we will have to write to the 41 housing agencies and get their reports. If you just want Metro, I can get it for you shortly.

Mr. Ben: Well, I would accept the answer for Metro for the time being. I can always get the answer for the others in due course from the Minister.

Mr. Pilkey: Mr. Speaker, a question for the Minister of Trade and Development.

When can the city of Oshawa expect further construction of homes through the Ontario Housing Corporation?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Speaker, in answer to that question: the survey of need for the city of Oshawa was completed on April 15, 1968, and council approved the same day a project for 234 units of family housing. No sites were available at the time, so Ontario Housing Corporation issued a proposal call on May 29 to close on July 24.

A total of eight submissions was received. Of these submissions, one was by Protter management for 63 family units and this was approved by Ontario Housing Corporation Board on October 16, 1968.

Another proposal was received from F. & T. Limited for 171 family units on October 16, 1968, and following these approvals the plans were finalized and were submitted to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation for loan approval.

We expect to receive the approvals for these 234 family units on or before December 31, 1968, and will commence construction as soon as building permits are issued.

Mr. Pilkey: Mr. Speaker, could the Minister just give me any idea at all when this construction will start?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think as soon as we get the approval from Ottawa we will immediately ask the construction company to get under way. Then I guess it is just a matter of how soon they can get the building permits from the city of Oshawa. I do not think there will be any delay in that.

Mr. Speaker: The member for High Park has a question of the Attorney General.

Mr. Shulman: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

In view of the urgent recommendation of Dr. T. D. Marshall, coroner for Haldimand county, in the November 1968 Medical Review that The Coroners Act be changed to allow cross examination by affected persons, will the Attorney General accept or introduce an amendment to that effect?

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, I have noted the coroner's comment and the hon. member calls it a recommendation. What we are doing is reviewing the recommendations made by Mr. McRuer along with our own studies on coroners' proceedings in other jurisdictions. We have our legislation well under way, but I just cannot assure the hon. member when I will be able to present it.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Sudbury East has a question of the Attorney General.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Attorney General.

Has the Attorney General reached a decision whether the OPP shall, in future, conduct all investigations into fatalities at the Falconbridge Nickel Mines operations? If not, what has caused the delay?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is, I think, aware that some time ago we were able to arrange that the Ontario Provincial Police rather than the company's police would carry out the services in connection with inquests insofar as the International Nickel Mines were concerned.

We have been reviewing the Falconbridge situation. Actually, no union complaints have been received from that area, so perhaps that is the reason for the delay.

As far as I am aware there were no complaints by anyone as to the services rendered by the Falconbridge police in connection with inquests.

However, we have pursued the matter more or less on our own initiative and I would hope that we will have a decision worked out there.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, if the Attorney General has not received a complaint, then I could probably submit a copy of a letter submitted to me—the carbon copy of which was submitted to the Attorney General's office some two months ago.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: In any event, Mr. Speaker, I think it is indicated to the hon. member what our policy is as carried out in connection with the International Nickel police. We think it well that independent police do those services.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, a very important guest is on my right here on the floor of House—the Hon. Farquhar Oliver.

A question to the Attorney General, Mr. Speaker.

How does the Attorney General reconcile the fact that there is no compensation for those who are injured when assisting the police, but a youth who refused to assist Constable Wayne King at Algoma Street and Royal York Road in Toronto has been charged with refusing to assist police?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, surely there is no difficulty in reconciling these two things. There is an Ontario Act, chapter 45 of the 1967 statute, which does provide compensation for those assisting the police in preventing crime.

The other thing which the hon. member raises is a matter where the Criminal Code lays down the duties of a citizen to assist the police. Now, that matter is before the court. He is apparently charged with an offence for failing to carry out something which the Criminal Code says he should do, and makes it an offence if he does not. And we have an Act which, in certain circumstances, provides for those who do assist the police. There is no difficulty in reconciling these two things.

I presume if this man who is now before the court had assisted the police and had been injured, he would have come within the terms of the Act and got compensation.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for High Park has a question of the Minister of Labour.

Mr. Shulman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Are temporary workers employed by private employment agencies covered by The Workmen's Compensation Act?

And if not, will the Minister consider changing the regulations so as to give coverage to these workers?

Hon. D. A. Bales (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question by the hon. member for High Park, the answer is: "yes". The regulations under The Workmen's Compensation Act provide that the business of supplying truck drivers is covered under class 20, the business of supplying labour other than clerical is covered under class 24, and the business of supplying clerical employees is covered under class 25.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I have another question addressed to me by the hon. member for High Park and I have the answer.

Mr. Speaker: That question was withdrawn and if your office was not notified it was an error on the part of my office. I believe perhaps the hon. member has read the Act.

The hon. Minister of Mines has returned and the hon. member for Thunder Bay has a question from yesterday.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): In view of the public reaction to strip mining, will the Minister assure the House the removal of large quantities of material will not detract from the natural beauty of the Picton sand banks?

Is the department limiting the amount of sand which can be removed? And how much sand has been removed over the 10-year period from 1958 to 1968?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, I have asked for an investigation to be made, so may I take this as notice?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sudbury East.

Mr. Martel: I have a question of the Minister of Mines.

Is the Minister aware that the employees of INCO at their Copper Cliff smelter are unable to obtain good drinking water?

What action will the Minister take to correct the situation?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, again I saw this question for the first time this morning and I have asked for an investigation to be made; so I will take this one as notice as well.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The 3rd order; resuming the adjourned debate on the motion for second reading of Bill 5, The Expropriations Act, 1968-1969.

THE EXPROPRIATIONS ACT, 1968-1969

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, in speaking on Bill 5, I imagine that we could probably call it "Expro 68". I do not have too much that I can add after the comments of my colleague, the member for Downsview (Mr. Singer), he has placed the position of our party very well, extremely capably; however, I would like to make a few comments.

Up until the presentation of this bill, we have found that expropriation has been a hodge-podge sort of system. This Act, I understand, will eliminate approximately 8,000 expropriation authorities—if it does not eliminate them, it will at least give them guidelines by which they can operate more effectively.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that this will remedy many of the present abuses. In the past, authorities have been, in some instances, extremely autocratic and dictatorial, and could dispossess an individual of his housing or his business without justifying their actions. The expropriating authority was the one that decided whether or not their own actions were for public good. No hearings were held.

Now at least the individual being aggrieved has the opportunity of public hearings and can at least put up some type of fight for his rights. Everyone now can hear what is going on and at least make themselves heard. In the past an attempted settlement took much too long.

Mr. Justice McRuer's report on civil rights certainly made mention that the ordinary person had little chance to protect his own rights in expropriation proceedings; he had little if any recourse if he felt he was not being treated fairly. This new legislation, Mr. Speaker, as proposed, now gives to the owner, whose property is being expropriated, financial assistance sufficient to relocate in equal or better surroundings.

However, Mr. Speaker, how do you place the proper cash value on a property that has been taken away from one who has his roots deeply embedded in that given location that is being expropriated? The proposal for appeal is certainly a good one. Mr. Speaker, the home-for-a-home concept or even the concept according to the Minister which actually does a little better than a home for a home, does not cover the tenant completely, even though section 19(1) or 19(2)—I think it is 19(2)—does make mention of the tenants' rights. This simply provides assistance in moving costs, reloacting costs, but what does the tenant do if there is no place to move, no place to relocate?

I think, Mr. Speaker, that provision should have been made to provide the tenant with accommodation for accommodation. Simply giving him financial assistance does not really solve the problem. He may have been living in the expropriated accommodation at $75 a month, and where does he find accommodation for $75 a month? He will be subject to higher charges if he does get accommodation, not for a short period of time, but for a fairly long period of time, whereas if he were to remain in the former accommodation he could have possibly got by on $75 a month or managed a fairly minor increase in the price of accommodation.

I think the bill should provide the tenant accommodation for accommodation, so that he does not find himself in some instances actually having to move out of the community because there is no place in the community in which he can live.

I well recall in my own community, Mr. Speaker, when the University of Windsor was expanding, the complications it caused. People who had had their properties expropriated waited in some instances a fairly long period of time before they received financial settlement and then when they did get settlement, it was on a take it or leave it basis which in some instances was not fair at all.

In my own riding there is to be an addition, or a new separate school constructed; it is going to be approximately a $1 million capital investment, it will take away the accommodations of, I think, about 14 families. Now, where in the city of Windsor will 14 families find accommodation just like that? It is most difficult for them. I think the provision of accommodation for accommodation should be fairly explicit in the bill.

Likewise, we in the community are going to have a fairly substantial amount of expropriation taking place when the E. C. Rowe Expressway is finally in the stage of construction, and the people who live along the route that will eventually be expropriated find themselves a bit concerned if they do not have accommodation for accommodation. I think, Mr. Speaker, Bill 5, "Expro 68", certainly is a step forward and we on this side will support it.

Mr. D. A. Paterson (Essex South): Mr. Speaker, I cannot let this get past without a few words. During my experiences on the select committee on conservation authorities and having travelled into other jurisdictions, this expropriation matter was certainly drawn very forcibly to my attention. It is apparent to me, at the outset, that once this bill becomes law, if the purchasing agents of a province and various expropriation authorities spell out this philosophy at the outset of their approach in acquiring property, then there may be more willing sellers than are necessary to the expropriation. I think this was pointed out very vividly to us in the state of Ohio.

Yesterday, my colleague from Downsview made a plea that this Act should apply to all pending expropriations that had not yet been settled. I would further fortify this plea. As members know, I have a number of expropriations pending in my own area. In my own mind, I cannot go beyond this point, as perhaps some may suggest and get into cases that have already been solved, reverting, perhaps, right back to the turn of the century. But I certainly think that it would be wise for this government to use this philosophy on anything that is now pending.

The hon. member for Riverdale (Mr. J. Renwick) in his remarks yesterday discussed the problems affecting businesses especially here in Metro area, and the injurious effects an expropriation may have on a business that lies within an expropriation area or adjacent to it. I realize that it is very difficult to compensate a man whose business lies outside the boundaries of expropriation, but it certainly has an effect on his business.

Usually, when a business is established, one of the first principles a businessman looks at, is the advantage of location. An expropriation can destroy or negate such an advantage that the merchant might deem a necessity to his own business. The position concerning goodwill, when one is purchasing a business these days, there is very seldom, to my knowledge, a monetary advantage in selling, or getting goodwill or payment for goodwill.

But I might state that it does take years, many years to build up a reputation and a clientele to any business. And this may be more particularly true in rural areas than in our metropolitan areas. I feel that the principle embodied in section 19—the six months operation period—is not long enough when one embarks on a business venture. I do not think it can show a profit in six months; it may take up to two years, and I would ask the Attorney General (Mr. Wishart) to look at that particular clause a little more closely, and see what the feeling of the business community is in that regard.

Personally, I feel that possibly the business books should be examined for a period up to two or three years—possibly this phrase could be reworded.

There is one other point in regard to this impending legislation, and I regret that the member for Welland South (Mr. Haggerty) is not here today, due to constituency business. Last evening, we were discussing the many problems that confront him in his area, with the federal expropriating bodies moving into his immediate area, acquiring lands for new right of ways for railroads, and the seaway canal. It is going to cut up basically this whole riding, and I would ask the Attorney General to possibly make representation to the hon. Mr. Turner in Ottawa.

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member is not speaking to the principle of this bill; he is discussing federal expropriations.

Mr. Paterson: With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I was merely pointing out to the hon. Attorney General that our legislation might be coincidental with that of the federal legislation, which is now pending to the benefit of the particular Niagara peninsula that is going to be so seriously affected.

Mr. P. J. Yakabuski (Renfrew South): And the whole province.

Mr. Paterson: And the whole province, that is correct.

These are my basic remarks in this regard. I do trust this bill will pass with full support of this House, and be passed immediately.

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron Bruce): Mr. Speaker, if I may, I would like to make a few brief comments in regard to this bill. As I understand the bill, it provides a framework within which the expropriating body and the owner can bargain as equals. I do not feel that this has been the case in the past. I think we have seen many examples of injustices; they have been enumerated here at great length in this House, on various occasions, and there is no need for me to repeat them in that connection.

However, I do feel that this bill goes a long way to rectify many of the things that were wrong with the former system. I was interested in the remark of the hon. member for Riverdale yesterday, particularly in relation to his remarks concerning farmers and farm land. This matter was also alluded to by the member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) in the Throne Speech debate.

I just want to make a few brief comments, in that regard. Many of the principles which are set out in this bill were discussed and proposed by at least one farm organization ten years ago. They were repeated, approximately five years later, to the Royal Commission on Civil Rights, and now we see many of the principles embodied in this particular bill. For that, I congratulate the government—it took them a long time, but nonetheless it is better late than never, I suppose.

There are two or three points I would like to make. The first point is that as I read the bill, there is no guarantee that farmers whose property is expropriated, will be relocated on land of similar productivity. I noticed that the Attorney General, in reply to the hon. member for Riverdale, said that there is no point in putting a separate section in the bill dealing exclusively with farmers because the drafting would have to use the same words, and the same expressions. The same language would have to be used in the drafting as was used in connection with businesses, in connection with residences and so on.

So there is no point, according to the Attorney General, as I interpret his words, in repeating the same language in dealing specifically with farmers. I suggest to him that farmers and farmland is a special problem unto itself. For instance, roughly 65 to 70 per cent of the assets of a farmer is tied up in land and buildings, both of which can be expropriated. I suggest that very few, perhaps no other businesses have that type of situation, where so much of the total assets of the business are tied up in land and buildings.

Therefore, I feel that farmers and farmland should be treated separately in this regard. I noticed also that there is no mention in the bill of an economic unit, and I do not know how I can express it any clearer to the Attorney General than to give him an example of what I mean in this connection.

For instance, let us assume for easy figuring that 100 acres represents an economic unit of a particular farmer. Let us say that 10 acres of that 100 acres represents the net profit from that farming operation.

Then I pose the question to the Attorney General, what happens in the event that an expropriating body comes along and says, we want 10 acres of your 100 acre farm? It means, in effect, that the farmer is left with an uneconomical operation. He just simply cannot make money out of the farm any longer and I feel that this is certainly a special consideration, and has to be dealt with in a special way in the bill—and it has not been done.

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General): Yes it has.

Mr. Gaunt: Well, I would like to hear from the Attorney General because if it has, I am glad to hear it. I would like to know where it is dealt with in this particular bill, and perhaps we can clarify that point at this juncture.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I was going to include this in my remarks. I thought I might close the debate on second reading. It is in the sections having to do with injurious affection, and reference is made to where part of the land is taken and the provisions of the section dealing with injurious affection in those circumstances. I think if the hon. member will look at those—I have not got it with me. I could find it for him but I will just refer to it in that way and, perhaps, when I make my closing remarks on this debate, I will refer to it a little more specifically. But I think we have it covered.

Mr. Gaunt: Mr. Speaker, if in fact it is covered under injurious affection, I am glad to hear it because I was certainly concerned about this particular aspect of the bill. I just simply say, in closing, that I do think there are some aspects of the farming business which are entirely different from any other business. I hope that the Attorney General has considered this aspect of the bill because we have had many cases.

I can think of conservation authorities who have expropriated land over the years, they have become quite publicly well known due to the fact that many of the people so affected felt that they were being dealt with unfairly. I do hope that if all of the points I have mentioned are not given consideration in the bill, that they will be at the Attorney General's earliest convenience.

Mr. J. R. Breithaupt (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, I rise as well to speak in favour of this bill.

Expropriation laws in Ontario have certainly been out of touch with the realities of our circumstances of the 1960's.

In my city of Kitchener, the Conestoga Parkway as it continues to move in and to encircle the communities of Kitchener and Waterloo has displaced many houses and many businesses which must be removed and which must fall by the wayside.

Urban renewal, as the members of this House are no doubt aware, is going to be re-developing entirely the centre of this city. I think we are going to be uprooting many persons. It is surely fair to all of our citizens to compensate properly those who are displaced by these measures of progress as downtown streets are widened and various other traffic patterns are re-developed in cities across the province, and especially in Kitchener where many homes are being removed. We must go the extra step to benefit our citizens.

Where we are interfering with the rights of property ownership and enjoyment in the general public good as we see it in this House, we certainly must err, if at all, on the generous side.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the Attorney General can well be proud of this bill which he is bringing before the House. As hon. members are aware, my colleagues on this side of the House have called for many of the reforms which this bill entertains. It is certainly apparent that the bill has been supported on all sides of this House and in the public press generally, as forward looking legislation.

If it is amended and expanded upon as my colleague from Downsview has suggested then it can be even better than it presently is. I would urge all of the members of this House to support the bill and to bring Ontario's expropriation law up to date.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, before I begin, may I make the wry remark that I was posing today for the first time in the House, a question to the new Minister of Revenue (Mr. White) and he turned tail and ran.

To settle down to the expropriation law, Mr. Speaker. It presents the picture of the farmer standing in his laneway, legs astraddle, with a loaded shotgun in his hand in front of the advancing bulldozer. It is also the picture of the much harassed little woman guarding her door.

This is partly to do with the way in which we regard land as such. For me, and I suppose for people on all sides of the House, apart from our particular political ideology land need not necessarily be the kind of thing that the former Mr. Justice McRuer believes it to be; in other words, a thing inalienable, absolute, without conditions.

I suggest that for people of our minds—and it is a basically socialist approach to land tenure—land is a trust. It is something that existed probably having greater abundance before we arrived, and it will be there after we have gone and generations have passed away.

So we should not have, nor would it be righteous that we have full dispositive powers over our land.

I say in all due respect to Mr. McRuer that he is—and I will bring this up in the course of my Throne Speech debate—he is addicted to an English empirical tradition which regards rights of being of only one kind. It came down through Hobbes and Hume and Locke and Adam Smith and John Stuart Mill, and it is very alive today; there is only one kind of right, and that is an individual right; the rights of individuals.

For a person with a broader vision of rights, probably from some continental or scholastic tradition, they would see that there are rights in the community too, and the rights extend from the community to the state itself. It is a question of a balancing, and it is the dialectic between these various rights that constitutes the difficulty and makes for the really difficult intellectual exercise.

But to have only one form of rights, as McRuer has said—that is the right of a landowner, or only personal rights, and no other rights is a failure, as I will put it in my Throne Speech. It is a lapse into nominalism.

In other words, they do not regard general ideas as having real existence, general ideas such as community, state and various forms of governmental enterprise. They, too, are vital entities within inherent rights which have to be balanced in these matters.

I think a few philosophical preliminaries might be of value in this debate, because based on this notion which I will call the McRuer notion of individual rights, it has, as most of these things, certain immediate pragmatic consequences. One of them is that the whole drive of the law prevents the expropriating authority from taking more land than is actually needed in the course of the expropriation.

There is nothing in this bill about that and perhaps there should be. If it were my bill, there would be a section in there which permits the expropriating authority precisely to do that.

In other words, it confers the benefits, except in a few cases, on the private owner. But it does not oblige him to pay for any of these benefits that are received over and above what he has actually due to him.

Let us take the case where a new highway goes through, or a subway in Toronto. The lands in the vicinity go up ten times what they were previously. This is visited on the heads of the surrounding landowners; it is a windfall profit. But the benefits in no way accrue, nor does your legislation in any way make provision for it accruing on to the heads of those who have paid the cost, the taxpayers, for placing the subway where it is.

Even your law reform commission, in its commentaries on this, although it is addicted to the McRuer theory of rights too, goes so far as to suggest that what they call “a betterment charge”, which is authorized under British legislation, would be imposed upon the lands that are thus undeservedly inflated in value.

I would suggest that some thought be given to this, whether in putting it into this legislation, or somewhere along the line, as this has to do with the exploitation of land values conferred by the community upon which no return is made to that community.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation before us today has a long and dreary history as usual. I will not recount it, it will take too long to tell the whole story of what is before us this afternoon. But a brief reference to the background of that history, I think, is in order; to place the statute in context might be of some value.

I am looking at an article called “New Expropriation Act Reviewed” by Ian Rogers, QC, of Toronto in the Canadian Bar Journal of the year 1964, where he says at page 30:

In Ontario, the need for the reform of expropriation laws was first recognized by the legal profession.

Well, we always say that, of course.

At the second meeting, after its organization in 1957, the municipal law subsection of the Ontario Branch of the Canadian Bar Association discussed “expropriation headaches”, during which criticism and dissatisfaction with the existing laws were expressed.

At the midwinter meeting of the branch in 1958, a resolution was passed calling for an Act to be passed to encompass all expropriations carried out by provincial and local authorities and providing uniform bases of procedure for determining compensation.

A committee was then formed to bring in a draft statute which after having been given careful study and revision by the subsection, was submitted to the Minister of Highways on August of 1958.

The draft was referred to the Attorney General's Advisory Committee on the administration of justice which produced the revised Act. This was introduced into the Legislature as The Land Compensation Act of 1960.

Then the history went on as my friend from Downsview has indicated yesterday.

It went from there to the select committee of the Legislature. The select committee reviewed other Royal commissions, the Uthwatt report, the Clyme report and came back with a report to this Legislature in 1962. Finally it got enacted into very defective legislation, in 1964 I believe. And here we are today reviewing it completely—a long, sad history.

However, having reached the top of the mountain we may survey the plains, having spent so long in the plains and looking up to the mountains.

This Act is an amalgam of the report of the law reform commission delivered on September 21, 1967, and about ten chapters in McRuer on expropriation procedure. In the main, it adopts the salient recommendations of both bodies.

The Act is actually arranged on five levels of government authority, divided into two distinct sections. The first section has to do with the inquiry officer or the file of necessity, and the approving authority. That has nothing to do, of course, with the compensation. Nor have any of these levels anything to do with expropriation powers themselves. The expropriation powers are not caught up and brought into this Act. They are left in the various diverse statutes—I believe there are 36 of them—governing various other units inside the government.

We will discuss the inquiry officer's function and that of the approving authority—and there is some mischievous and meddling business connected with that, as has been indicated in this House in earlier debate.

The second tier—if I may put it that way—is the board of negotiation, the land compensation board and, finally, the court of appeal. These bodies, of course, are concerned solely with the compensation coming out of the expropriation.

I would make a suggestion (and I will come to it again with this board of negotiation). It was brought into the previous legislation—The Rand Expropriation Act—but it may have only a nugatory effect now and probably can be eliminated. It would be good to test it, I suppose, as to what benefit it really confers at this time. It may not have any real validity any longer in view of the wide authority and powers conferred on the Land Expropriation Board. Either one party or the other under this present bill can tie up the other party and force them to go before the board of negotiation—the kitchen sink tribunal. And it may simply be a waste of time—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is the wrong word. It is kitchen table.

Mr. Lawlor: Oh, it is the kitchen table, sorry. We could expropriate the kitchen sink. In any event, I think some consideration might be given to deleting the board entirely. On the other hand, I am not going to force that particular issue. It seems to me that it may have continued worth. Perhaps the Attorney General could comment on it in our outgoing committee. Has it really brought parties together and just how many settlements might have emerged from that?

There are in the province of Ontario 8,017, I repeat 8,017, expropriation authorities. Fantastic!

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Did the member count them?

Mr. Lawlor: I counted them. As a matter of fact, McRuer has a complete list and he counts them for you. It is a lot of counting to do. And as was indicated yesterday, there is some validity, it seems to me, in eliminating many of them. Why not prune this tree? Why not get to work? Whether you had time in the process of bringing forward this expropriation bill—and really it should have been done within the confines of this—

Mr. Singer: The member's figures are not quite up to date. He wants to delete a couple of thousand school boards in there.

Mr. Lawlor: Yes, I know. That was because I spoke a day later than I expected. That is what you get for speaking late—they take all your points away from you.

In any event, all these expropriating authorities are a multitude of varied powers. Take a look at the cemeteries and the rights of private people to expropriate other private people—mill owners, for heaven's sake. This is all a heritage of an ancient day. Clear out the jungle on this particular thing and make some sense of the legislation.

The number of people is just overwhelming. If you are going to have the long, slow attrition of breaking down your school boards and a number of your municipalities, as the only way of eliminating all these diverse authorities—some of them with quite atrocious powers—without notice and no hearings and all this sort of thing, then I would think that you would set about it immediately.

We will continue to press and if nothing is done in a little while, I will be more specific as to what I think the areas are in which this can best be done.

Well, McRuer says there are 35 statutes with these powers. There are 26 different types of expropriation authorities. There are 60 sorts of powers and 35 of these may be exercised without any approval or consent from anyone. The other 25 may need approval of some sort.

Now the legislation that the government is presenting to us today, through the Attorney General, is valuable in wiping out a lot of internal procedural rust and giving an overseership to the way in which these expropriations take place, so that many of McRuer's reservations and lamentations really are met. Just under the term "lamentations" here is what the good man says.

Mr. Singer: Was this not the point where the hon. member suggested I was out of order yesterday?

Mr. Lawlor: Yes, but the member did not quote from the bill. He did not seem to have read it yesterday, and it bothered me that he should only quote from one authority, McRuer:

A perusal of the foregoing tables shows that the power to expropriate land has been conferred in Ontario with reckless and unnecessary liberality, without sufficient control over the exercise of the power. It cannot be too strongly emphasized that the Legislature should not confer the power of expropriation on any body or person unless it is clear that the power is inescapably necessary in the interest of good government and that adequate controls over its exercise are provided.

It is the first part of the last sentence that bothers me with respect to the "inescapable necessity." The controls are now being provided, insufficient as they may be, as you will hear, in some respects.

Now, there are some beneficial features in the new bill. It recognizes two distinct bases for determining compensation. No. 1 is market value plus 5 per cent for compulsory or forceable taking. Why that should be 5 per cent is a little beyond me.

Your law reform commission, again, seems in its report to be deficient. It says that this was largely abandoned, this compulsory taking, which, under our law and under British justice, was 10 per cent, as you know, for ages. Why it should not be 10 per cent here escapes me. But in any event—

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): They rationalized themselves out of that.

Mr. Lawlor: Well, the law reform commission says it was all abandoned in 1919, but if you look at recent decisions you cannot tell. Often it is in lump sum settlements. What is the amount really? If it is there at all, and it was still there in the Woods case in 1957, it seems to me that they set up a 10 per cent basis and awarded it.

I would like to hear what the Attorney General says about setting 5 per cent rather than the traditional 10. I would think that it would make up for much injustice if the larger sum which, as I say, is traditional, were accepted.

Mr. Singer: It was traditional until the Supreme Court of Canada made it untraditional.

Mr. Lawlor: Well, cite me that authority, because I have been looking through this carefully.

Mr. Singer: Is the hon. member not familiar with that case?

Mr. Lawlor: Oh, my dear man, did you ever hear what Orestes said to his father Agamemnon? He said to him, wiping his bloody brow: "Les mouches m'ennuie"—the flies bothered him.

The second type of damages is called disturbance damages, and they are of various sorts. We will come back to disturbance damages because I am going to suggest that your present bill is defective in outlining them and giving them headings. If you have departed from the existing law, the existing law is very vague and very fluctuating as to what heads are recognized as heads of damage.

You have tried to repair that and you should be given credit for doing it, but you have left a little vague phrase tagging on at the end which nobody, not any judge in this province, would be able to tell what it means. But I will come back to that.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I did not catch the remarks of the hon. member. What area is he referring to? Is this in the determination of value that he is speaking of—that there are certain things set down and certain things left open? What is he referring to there?

Mr. Lawlor: I am referring to the section on disturbance damages, section 18, and while I am on it I may as well deal with it.

You get down to subsection (c) and you talk about relocation costs and recognize there is, as a disturbance damage, also the moving cost, the legal, and the survey costs. And then you say: "Add other non-recoverable expenditures incurred in acquiring other premises".

Under this heading I would like to know whether part of these disturbance damages might be the cost of arranging new financing or, on the other hand, the appraisal costs that arise out of it that the person being expropriated very well might have to pay.

You say nothing about that. No one can interpret that clause, I suggest, satisfactorily.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, with respect to the hon. member and I appreciate his remarks, that we are discussing here principle, and that the language is perhaps general in the legislation. I would think that in committee I would not be averse to considering whether we should be more detailed and more specific as to setting forth certain items.

But I would hope the hon. member might agree with me that when we use the language "other non-recoverable expenditures incurred" that is a requirement that the expropriating authorities shall pay and that would be carried forward if it came to arbitration, it would carry forward to the land compensation board so that there would be a fairly wide scope for them for interpretation.

I think perhaps I would like to take this occasion and say please let us stick to principle of this bill in our discussion today.

Mr. Singer: Does the Attorney General mean he is out of order?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I did not say that when the hon. member for Downsview was speaking yesterday, and I have been patient again today.

Mr. Lawlor: We may well say it to you, Mr. Speaker, as I have a great deal to say about what I consider the principles of this bill. Apparently nobody around here knows what a principle is. Well, it has very subjective renderings.

I want to talk about market value for a minute or two. The Act has a section in it saying that the market value of a property will be set without regard to a plan, for instance, being introduced, or an urban renewal scheme or any other consideration, that it would be the market value without these supervening events.

At the same time the concept of market value, I would suggest, would do very little for the homeowner in Donmount who is taken over by expropriation unless taken in conjunction—which is not provided—taken in conjunction with loans and other assistance schemes as outlined again in the law reform commission document.

I say their thesis would be necessary to the full amplitude and benefits to be conferred by this Act. No such assistance schemes, except in a very minatory way through The Department of Economics, the present Department of Trade and Development, presently exist. This is a grave deficiency in many ways.

May I say, too, on market value that the test for market value is a worthy one, and again the Minister is to be commended. To set a willing buyer up against a willing purchaser is the way to do this thing.

For too long under our law it has been whatever value it was felt to be in the hands of the owner, and his values were always somewhat in derogation of the public realm and right. His values tended to be, in many circumstances, very much inflated and this new provision gets around that.

Under this heading, it is interesting to make mention of the law of Canada and Ontario, the great quarrel that went on for many years between the Hon. Mr. Justice J. T. Thorson on one side of the fence and the Supreme Court largely under Mr. Justice Rand, I mean his decisions under this heading.

They quarrelled, as you remember, for a considerable period of time, as to how to arrive at market values. Thorson's position was that it was the highest value to someone other than the owner, and the Rand situation was that the market value includes the present worth of all its possibilities. The famous phrase that has rung down through expropriation law is what a prudent man would pay to obtain or retain the property, that is, the value to the owner.

That has led to many abuses. On another occasion when Mr. Justice Rand creeps into the debates in this House, I would remind you that under this heading he, too, may be very fallible. At least so fallible that his theory of how the market values should be arrived at in expropriation have been rejected under the terms of this new legislation, and I say deservedly so, and advisedly so, and to the benefit of the whole population of Ontario.

There is, nevertheless, I suggest to the hon. the Attorney General through you Mr. Speaker, still another point in the Act I would like to hear his comments on, as it bothers me.

While the value to the taker, or the value to the owner, or the value of ejection, or what you pay not to be thrown out, have been the tests down through the ages, and they are still the tests in our law books before this legislation is passed. Well, that is one situation.

On the other hand, there has been written into the present legislation, a double standard I suggest. They usually put it, in talking about it, that there should be no double recovery, and by double recovery they mean, either to have one test or another. You have either the existing use, plus the disturbance damages on one side of the fence, or you have a market value based on the highest and best use, or the greatest potential use on the other hand.

You have tried to make the best of both worlds to the detriment of both. Your basic formula under section 13 is a formula based on market value plus disturbance damages. But then, you sneak in a clause about the market being based upon some use of the land other than the existing use.

Where did that come from? What is it doing there? I will not batter this particular ram but I will bring it up again in committee. Still, I think at the earliest possible time it should be brought to your attention. I think it is at least confusing, and at the most, an internal conflict—and should be altered.

Under the headings of “disturbance damages” where I brought up a picayune point, a nit-picking Lawlorism a few moments ago, I shall pass on to grander things and say that it bothers me, under this particular heading—

Mr. Singer: Did the member lose his place?

Mr. Lawlor: No, I want to find the section in the Act.

Mr. Singer: Probably in the McRuer report.

Mr. Lawlor: Well, you cannot only refer to that. If you have got a wider possibility you can go on with it.

Mr. Singer: Give us another Lawlorism.

An hon. member: How would you like to batter that ram?

Mr. Lawlor: My main point there, in any event, was the point that I made. Now I want to make an appeal to the hon. Attorney General, Mr. Speaker. In this legislation which has been thrashed over to such a great extent, I am going to appeal to his magnanimity. I have about 20 or so various amendments, some of them of no great substance but with a great hope of improving the text, and some of them very much in line with the recommendations set forth in the two great reports that we are dealing with.

I would like to see some of these, at least, given decent consideration—not waved out of hand. He is the one Minister, I suggest, who has that quality of mind that can well accept and absorb the beneficial things in legislation.

Now only on one occasion last year was this ever displayed.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is completely out of order.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): He is as nasty as anything.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: He is not talking about the principle of the bill at all. I think I might give him some assurance if I may, Mr. Speaker. Our experience in dealing with The Securities Act, for instance, was that we accepted many amendments in committee and I am certainly listening with an open mind and open ears today and I am trying to pick up the pearls of wisdom which are falling from the hon. member's lips. I do not know what new system or basis of value he has really suggested yet, but I am listening.

Mr. Singer: The Lawlorism.

Mr. Lawlor: I agree with you on your concept of market value. I think it is a great improvement et cetera—but if you want me to go a little further on what I am saying on these two standards—either one or the other—the highest and best use may not be the present use at all. It may be some goofy use dreamed up by an owner saying, “I am going to use my thing as a Taj Mahal next year”—and this is apparently a basis upon which it has been operating in the past.

On the other side of the fence is its present use, taken together with the disturbance damages, and that is the standard, I think, which is valid, not this other business of some potential nebulous use. I hope my point has been well taken.

I think among all these 35 expropriation statutes that are on the books of the province, that in the course of revamping and reviewing them, weeding them as I indicated earlier, these statutes should have written into them, if they are going to be retained, and it may be necessary in some cases because of the machinery, to take cognizance of the 5th and 14th amendment type of thing from the United States—you know the due process clauses.

Certain due processes have been taken care of within the terms of the present bill but these statutes of Ontario should be reviewed to bring them, in turn, into complete line with any concept of meeting the rights of both parties under an expropriation.

And there is a curious little thing I would like explained, for me as a lawyer, for instance, what happens in the statute where—for instance—in your bill there is a clause in which it is said that “notwithstanding any present or future Act of the Legislature of Ontario”, then this bill, as it becomes legislation, will govern. Then over against that, I look and see in The Ontario Municipal Board Act, for instance, that it reads, “notwithstanding anything in any general or special Act where land or any property has been expropriated,” and so on—“it will govern”. Which governs?

That is the kind of thing I mean—you go through with your staff to pick up the clauses, you have two conflicting statements. I can see one lawyer saying, I like this particular one, it brings in the revenue; the other authority claiming the opposite. There are these internal conflicts.

Mr. Singer: The member says have one notwithstanding—

Mr. Lawlor: Yes, both those statutes say the same thing and both exclude each other.

Mr. Singer: The word “future”—surely not the word “future”.

Mr. Lawlor: Oh—special or general!

Mr. Singer: Yes.

Mr. Lawlor: Good! The member is on his feet today.

Mr. Singer: “Future” is only in OHC leases.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Pretty powerful, Mr. Speaker, but we cannot foreclose the future.

Mr. Lawlor: Now, I come forlornly—I say forlornly because I am going to have to agree with the member for Downsview—I come forlornly to a section which has some importance in this business of setting up, first, the inquiry officers and the business of inquiry officers. To read the press releases of the Attorney General, you would think it is the newest thing under the sun. The fact is that it is part of the English legislation and has been for a long time—the inquiry officer concept which will review the soundness and fairness of the legislation.

That is great stuff but this whole process gets going from an expropriating authority, and the very point made yesterday is a valid point, I suggest, and we should scout it. Namely, that the expropriating authority under these statutes, in some instances, under the bill, is the same individual, person or board as the approving authority.

And that means Caesar will not speak to Caesar; he will not even speak to his wife. It seems to me to carve out, to empty out the whole purpose of this thing if you are going to do that and shove an inquiry officer in between. Just take into regard a school board. This is an example of the role of the school board under that section. The universities are given to the Minister of University Affairs (Mr. Davis), but in section 5(1)a the municipalities and all their agencies approve of themselves.

Well, that is marvellous! That is great legislation!

My question will be: Why is the Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. McKeough) not the approving authority, for municipalities, and for its agencies? In the case of the school boards, an elected school board, there seems to be some conjuring with this elective. It does not matter how they are elected, as long as they are elected, they can make this approval. The mysticism of being elected. I have been elected. I do not think it was very mystical.

Subsection b is the most outstanding example. I feel that local school boards ought not to be given the approving power as it emasculates the role of the inquiry officer. Why on earth is it not set up for the Minister of Education? I agree with the member for Downsview on this. He is perfectly right, and—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I wonder if the hon. member will permit me to suggest that at this point he might comment upon the recommendation No. 12 of Mr. McRuer, which is to be found on page 1084.

Mr. Lawlor: Well I will read it:

The recommended enquiry approval procedure should apply to municipalities, and a municipality should be its own approving authority, except where the power to expropriate land is exercised for a purpose other than the purposes of the municipal body—such as the disposal of the land expropriated to private persons or bodies for their own purposes. In such cases the exercise of the power of expropriation should be approved by the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

I think that the Minister of Municipal Affairs should approve all the way through, and I think particularly so in the case of the agency relationships within the municipalities. The side-arms of the municipality exercising these powers, in effect these subordinate bodies, and then appealing to its parent. I suggest to you, Mr. Minister, through you, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of the Crown is accountable to this Legislature, which is the body that sets up the legislation, ought to be the final authority and this is the only way in which he is thoroughly accountable. You say that the school board trustees will be accountable to the citizenry at the time of the election. I suggest that the scrutiny imposed in these particular things is not such, at that level, and the knowledge that goes into expropriation procedures is here, not out there, and that we are the proper authority, and the Ministers of the Crown are the ones who should have this responsibility.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I wonder. I think perhaps we should say these remarks, Mr. Speaker. If I might be permitted since this, if said now, may provoke the hon. member to say something more on this line. As I think about this, and I have thought about it of course in preparation of legislation. You have your school boards and you have your elective boards, I refer to the municipal councils, and these, of course, are a great part of the tremendous figure that has been quoted, 8,017 authorities.

First of all, I suggest, how are you going to dispose of municipal councils when you talk about reducing expropriating authorities? How are you going to get rid of the municipal councils? How are you going to combine them except, I might say in an aside, by regional government? It reduces the number, perhaps. How are you going to get rid of school boards except, again, by larger areas of administration?

Mr. Singer: The government has gotten rid of most of them.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: All right, but the point that I make is—and this is not my main point—that there are a great number of expropriating authorities, our local elected bodies. There has been enough outcry now, in my years, about taking away from the local body and giving to some Minister, or giving to some persons sitting far away in Toronto, the power of disallowance, the power of allowance, the power of final decision over a local decision.

So the school board says that we need this block of houses to enlarge our collegiate school, or our local college, whatever it may be; and the municipal council says we need this area to build our civic centre, or our recreation area, and so on.

Is the hon. member saying to me—let every decision of all these numerous muniicipalities, there are 1,000 of them, be decided by a Minister sitting in Toronto?

Mr. Singer: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. McRuer, of course, said, "No"; and I think that, perhaps, he has thought something about this. Again I can see a tremendous resentment, and a grieving, and a very vehement and loud protest coming to the Legislature if the hon. members, the gentlemen who advise us, can persuade us to carry that sort of thing through in this bill. I think that the criterion there is that they have. This, I think, is the significant thing. If the municipality says we need this land, then there is the inquiry where people have the opportunity to make their protest known—and to say this is unreasonable, this is unnecessary, this is unjust, you do not need that much land, or if you do need it locate your project somewhere else.

They have that opportunity. If the local council has the determination to proceed and can justify its course, and is ready to stand up and face the body of people by whom it is elected, then I think that is perhaps the best answer, rather than having them say, "Oh, they had the hearing, but then no matter what was said they went away to Toronto and there, again, in some secluded spot, a decision was made contrary to our grievance".

I think there is a great deal to be said for saying the people that are going to do this have to answer to their electorate this year or next year. I think that is the thing behind that, and I know the hon. members. On that point, I thought I might interject these remarks at this time.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Attorney General is always so persuasive. However, I shall quote the voice from on high against his position touching school boards. McRuer says, at page 1000:

School boards differ from other municipal bodies in one significant respect. Although they are elected, they may exercise powers of expropriation over the lands or persons other than their electors. One set of electors elects the public school boards, and another elects the separate school boards. Notwithstanding this, either of these boards may expropriate the land of those for whom there is no elected representative on the board. In this sense, the principle of responsibility of elected representatives does not apply as it does to municipal councils.

To interject I would ask, what is all this stuff about elected representatives as being the final criterion on this thing? It is the review aspect that seems to me to be the important one. I will finish this section, but before I lose my thought it goes this far—that if it happens to be a Minister of the Crown who is the expropriating authority, it comes back to the Minister of the Crown for approval. Now there is a real problem, is there not?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Last year, I seem to recall very clearly—or was it the year before last—that it was not the review element at all, although they appointed a judge to review conservation authorities, hospital and university expropriations. It was not the review that was the important thing at all. There were great arguments and great submissions made that it should be the Ministers—the Minister of Education for the university, the Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) for the hospital; the Minister of Energy and Resources Management (Mr. Simonett) for the conservation authority. The argument then was that it should be the political person who had to account for his action.

Now I am told, when we have gone to the political decision, that it is the review that is important.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I think that the Attorney General was quoting me at that point. And I would ask him to please get Hansard out and see what I said, because he is confusing, and I am sure not deliberately, but confusing two different kinds of ideas. It was my objection to appointing a judge, because I said there was no way to get a judge to answer public criticism.

I advocated then, as I did yesterday, that there be a political person responsible—but that it be similar to the system in England, and that there be one Minister responsible for them all.

Now, I tempered that a little yesterday but I complained along the exact lines that the member for Lakeshore is doing now, and I think he has a valid point, as I think I had yesterday.

Mr. Lawlor: Just to read the concluding sentence—we cannot miss the nub, you know:

The exercise of the power of the school board to expropriate land should be subject to the approval of the Minister of Education.

Why did you neglect that? Why is the bill not drawn up with it in? He goes on—I'll just finish it:

The Minister is now required to approve the motion in matters affecting local operations of schools that are of far less consequence than the taking of land by the exercise of expropriation.

The next matter I wish to turn to is a question of the principle of the bill insofar as it involves the inquiry itself. Section 7, subsection 5, is the section which says that the inquiry will be—well I may as well read a bit of it:

The hearing shall be by means of an inquiry conducted by an inquiry officer who shall inquire into whether the taking of any part of the lands of an owner, or more than one owner of the same lands, is fair, sound and reasonably necessary in the achievement of the objectives of the expropriating authorities.

I have only one minor objection, to that; that is precisely what the inquiry officer does not do. The inquiry officer does not make an assessment as to whether the taking is fair, sound and reasonably necessary in the achievement of the objectives of the expropriating authorities.

The inquiry officer has nothing to do with either compensation on the one hand, or the necessity of the work as such on the other.

This is a refinement introduced by Mr. Justice McRuer into his report, which is not in the British version. Why he did it, escapes me. The rationale of saying that, when you are going before an inquiry officer, you may not take the full amplitude of the reasons for objection seem unjust to me. It is unfair. Why is it not reasonably necessary? You may say that the whole scheme is misconceived, that the authorities are a bunch of dunces—as they usually are. And with that in mind, but under the circumstances of this bill you cannot do so.

The aggrieved party is very strictly located, restricted to his own little plot of ground. He may say there is an alternative route that you should take. He can go that far, but he cannot question the overall public necessity of the work in question.

You do not say so in so many words, except that you do say so. In section 14, subsection 4, you then set out to detail the various things that no account should be taken of. In the special use to which the land will be put.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I agree, that is deliberately said that way. We submit this bill with the view that the inquiry officer does not pass upon the objectives of the expropriating authority. He does not say, he does not have to—it is not his business to decide whether the conservation authority should have such a scheme as it has, or whether the university should expand as it proposes to.

They come before him with their objectives, their projects, and he does not question those. He decides whether such expropriation is necessary to meet that objective. He is not to get into the field of saying to an expropriating authority: "You should not build another university" or "You should not build another dam". They lay out the project, he keeps out of that field, and that is deliberate.

Mr. Lawlor: He should be able to say, I suggest with respect, Mr. Speaker, that this highway is necessary in this part of the countryside, that this urban renewal project is misconceived. You know, they do it under the British statutes. The Alberta statute introduced some years ago made this distinction. Really, if you come down to the fine point, what I am saying is that an alternative route is of more benefit. You are really saying, in effect, that the scheme is misconceived as a whole. I suppose with a little legal finegling it will get around to it, but I do not know why you should write finegling into statutes.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Would the hon. member permit me to ask: The Department of Highways lays out in its wisdom and its advice that a highway is necessary from point A to point B to serve the traffic needs and communication of certain areas of the province.

I think we would agree that the inquiry officer could say if farmer A complains that you should not go through the middle of his farm, you might very well say you can go around at that point, take a different course. But I do not think—and this is what I would like the hon. member to comment upon—I do not believe it is his business to say—and this is the tenor of this Act, the intent of it—that the inquiry officer should say no highway is necessary from A to B.

Mr. Lawlor: Well, being a legislator myself, I very much resent people questioning the wisdom of our roles, you know. But you will not tie me down this afternoon. It is the Attorney General's bill. And it is the implication of the thing in a wider context of the other legislation that exists—again, in the British situation—that bothers me.

I would think there is some validity in my statements touching the questioning of the scheme as such. I do not see what harm it can possibly do. They are going to do it indirectly anyway by simply questioning the effect it will have upon them personally.

Having come over to 14(4), I want to go on to another point. It has to do with market value and a possible deficiency in the principle of the bill. You say in section (a) that, in determining the market value of land, no account should be taken of the special use to which the expropriating authority will put the land.

My question is, why not? Suppose an expropriating authority picks up some farm land with the surreptitious intent of using it for a gravel pit on the land of which it has knowledge and perhaps the farmer does not. It pays the price in its expropriation for his farm lands.

But the special use to which it intends putting that land is not to raise barley—it is to get some gravel. Why should it not pay the larger price? The way this is worded there are a number of decisions. In the Gaspé causeway, for instance, the expropriating authority took over there, on the basis of some widening. But they really wanted the rock from the causeway.

There is a case where marsh lands were being expropriated for an urban development in the north. In that case, the expropriating authority was fair about it and it did pay them—not for marsh lands or waste land, but as a town site. It paid them the full value. So I just wonder about the impact of that special use idea that is written into the statute. It seems to go against the current law.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, there are many cases which go the other way. That is all I would say at the moment.

Mr. Lawlor: Fine.

Mr. Wishart: Well, I might say a little more. Let us take a farm, a large portion of which is just rock and waste. As a farm, it has a value, say, of $50,000. If there was no other rock in the area and no construction planned, I suppose the rock area of that farm would have little or no value.

If The Department of Highways decided to build a highway through there, that rock could become extremely valuable. Is it a good argument that that particular owner should get ten times more for that rock than what his farm is worth? I do not know. The cases hold both ways. Quite a number can be cited on either side.

Mr. Lawlor: Just in reply to the remarks, Mr. Speaker: regarding the recommendation of the law reform commission at page 24 of their report—they have the clause in with respect to the special value, but they have a clause B which you have omitted and it says:

Where it appears that land has been taken, not because it is land, but because of the construction materials it can yield for the carrying out of the work, the compensation payable should reflect the value of the materials taken but which may be taken at the prevailing rates of such material at the site.

That seems to me eminently more fair, than the omission of that particular reservation or condition. You are accepting these recommendations all the way through pretty well. But the odd one, for some mysterious reason, where I think justice prevails just as much as in others, is left out completely. I just find it a little difficult to understand.

The other grounds seem to me, always excepting the remarks I made about betterment charges, Mr. Speaker—that is clause (b) and clause (c)—that is illegal uses of land—just because the land is operating as a gaming house does not mean that they can be expropriated as a gaming house, which is somewhat more valuable than other forms of houses, and that is quite valid.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Which section is the member on?

Mr. Lawlor: I am still dealing with 14 (4) a, b, and c. I am passing over b and c rather quickly, but I am indicating that as far as b is concerned that betterment charge or tax ought to operate where you have increases in the value of land resulting from expropriation.

Mr. Speaker, turning to another topic—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, is the hon. member suggesting that clause 14 (4) (a) is related to the recommendation of the law reform commission on page 24? The examples we have been using — is that his argument?

Mr. Lawlor: That is my argument.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well I would like to suggest that the language that “a special use to which the expropriating authority will put the land” is not really closely related to our example of taking the rock for the building of a road or that sort of thing. I do not think the two are quite the same.

Mr. Lawlor: Except—I will go on with this a little further, Mr. Speaker, if I may. This is what the report says at 23:

The expropriating authority should not be entitled to say to one person: ‘We will buy gravel from you at the prevailing rates’ and say to his neighbour, ‘We will take your land for gravel and pay you the market value for land as barren or farm land’.

That is the problem. One other matter that has been left out, which might be in due course taken under consideration, is that there is nothing in the bill requiring that expropriating authorities get together and plan their programmes.

If they did so, there would not be a flood of purchasers let into the market all at one time. In other words, this thing is not planned. What is wrong with having these authorities indicate to the various departments of government—perhaps even to the tribunal, or the compensation board that is being set up within this bill—what their intended expropriations are in any particular area in any one year?

I am sure they work outside of each other. There could be a flood of new purchasers forced on the market because they all do it at the same time, when probably it is not necessary. They could have spaced it over a longer period of time and relieved the market from the flood of purchases, thereby increasing and inflating prices and making things even worse than what is happening at the present time.

There is, in my submission, no governance of that situation. It is a kind of secondary principle arising out of the bill and you probably would not want to put it in the bill at this time, although I suggest we will do so in five years time if I am still around.

But it is worth considering—the business of having this tribunal or land compensation board made aware of the range and type of expropriations taking place so that some coherence and an intelligent means of spacing out expropriations could be brought into effect.

Under this heading of “little nostrums” from on high, I would like also to ask you to take under consideration the business that is mentioned on page 11 of the law commission report. They talk about giving the citizen an opportunity to be informed about his roles and his rights. They go on to say that, for example, a pamphlet prepared by The Attorney General’s Department setting out both the procedural and substantive questions which may arise might be sent out with every notice of expropriation.

I do not think it is necessary to write that into the legislation or make an amendment on that sort of thing, but I would ask that the Attorney General do take it under advisement. It might even be made part of the regulations.

Now as my deputy leader, whom I nominated to his revived post, said yesterday—very little cognizance had been made of the real role of farmers. I will not labour it at the moment, but in committee I think we can bring out the fundamental fact that we might have to write in a separate clause affecting farm lands.

I would hope that you might be open to it if the reasons seem to you coercive enough at that time. The same thing with the treatment of tenants. The way in which the compensation is to be arrived at is left very nebulous. I suppose you intend that the present formula, which is not a bad one really under our present law, be operative. That formula, by the way, is set out in the Law Society lectures on expropriation at page 35.

The role of mortgagors and mortgagees has not been discussed yet in this House. May I say that you flatulently enhance the role of the mortgagees beyond all justice. It seems to me that these are the favoured cuddlings of your heart. Why do they get all the benefits? What do you do for these fellows? I will come to them in a moment, but what do you do on the other hand for the mortgagors?

We will be moving an amendment to the effect that, as far as the mortgagor is concerned, if there is a short fall—and you do not provide for this—if land is expropriated for, say $15,000 and there are mortgages of $18,000 on the property, not only has he had this land taken away from him, but he continues to owe the mortgage, possibly for the rest of his life; the sum of $3,000, probably at exorbitant rates of interest—

Mr. G. A. Kerr (Halton West): There must be a fourth mortgage.

Mr. Lawlor: No, there are only three in this case. Under the circumstances today it could be one large mortgage, and the land value at the time of the expropriation could fall considerably below the mortgage. And that mortgage—this is my second point and I will come to it—may be very well bonused, and no provision is made for that.

But let us stick to the simple first case so that the complexities may grow upon us. The simple case is where there is a short fall between the amount of the mortgage and the amount that the mortgagor picks up on his equity redemption on the expropriation.

There could be considerable short falls in this regard, because very often purchasers are lured into purchasing property with very low down payments. I personally know of cases where they give them a very much inflated value of the land, sometimes with an eye to expropriation on the part of the mortgagee. But in any event he is lured into a position where he is paid a vastly inflated value for his land. He picks up this sum, and he is left five, ten thousand short—and it could be more.

He does not get a new house because he has not got a dime to pay with—every dime goes to the mortgagee, and under the covenant he remains responsible, I say, to a mortgagee. At least he had a house before, he had some equity, now he has nothing, and he owes money. He walks away, not only empty, but carrying burdens, burdens of emptiness.

Now really, I suggest to you that this legislation should have a clause in it saying that in that eventuality, the mortgagor's—the covenant of the mortgagor is wiped out, clean.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: He has no equity!

Mr. Lawlor: Well he has in the normal circumstances.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: If the mortgage is $10,000 and the property is worth $5,000, I find it very difficult to say he had any equity.

Mr. Lawlor: Well the day he bought the property for $10,000 he put in $2,000 hard-earned money. In the meantime, certain inflationary values take place and you are only prepared to pay a certain amount. Or he may have bought the property at that time because he could not get it—he may have had to put $700 into it. So the mortgagee, who is the owner of the property at the time of sale, sold it to him for $18,000.

It just was not worth it. You say he is a fool to buy it? Well I am afraid that you cannot expect that degree of perfection, the angelic kind to be operative. The nostrums of perfection are usually Conservative nostrums you know.

People have no such pre-vision; they are supposed to be able to tell all the delinquencies of the future.

I say, let us go on to the second point. Very often these mortgages are bonused as you well know. I mean a first mortgage can be picked up on the market today. Say it is carrying 10 per cent, a $12,000 first mortgage can be picked up on the market at perhaps $10,000.

So the guy who holds the mortgage is making himself $2,000, plus the 10 per cent on the $2,000 all the way through. Under a just society, that could not possibly take place. But we have to put up with it for the time being—until we come into office.

What do you do about this in your legislation? You compensate the mortgagee to the hilt. Not only do you compensate him to the hilt and give him his bonus, but you give him a bonus on the bonus.

Mrs. M. Renwick (Scarborough Centre): That is Tory philosophy.

Mr. Lawlor: You have got three months' bonus on top.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Who gave him the bonus in the first place? The person who signed the document said, "I will give you this much money" and yet, he contracted.

Mr. Lawlor: I suggest that the legislation, Mr. Speaker, should be amended. If the situation occurs where there is not a sufficient amount of money to cover whatever is held in the hands of the mortgagee and leave something over to purchase a house, since in this case, there is no separation, as—in this case with the tenants and as you do with businesses—you make a separation. But here you lump the sum together and the lump sum must be divided, and if that is not sufficient, let the mortgagor go hang.

I am saying to you that at least bend the legislation so that if there is a bonus involved, the bonus be struck out.

Mr. Kerr: Section 15 may overcome this.

Mr. Lawlor: It does not—I have studied this very carefully.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. I want to suggest that this dialogue between the Attorney General and the member for Lakeshore is more appropriate to clause by clause study of the bill.

Mr. Bullbrook: Quite right.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I agree but I find it very interesting.

Mr. Bullbrook: It has been for the last hour.

Mr. Sopha: The last hour—indeed.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I agree.

Mr. Singer: These members were picking on me most unfairly yesterday, the two of them.

Mr. Sopha: I am unable to ascertain what Orestes has to do with expropriation.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Speaker, in committee, we will go into the actual language and into the niceties of the thing. If my friends will abide with me, they will find out what detail really is.

At the moment, I consider it a matter of principle, wherein we are dealing with broad issues and the broad issues that arise under this statute.

Under section 21 (b) which I will not quote, "if there is an interest loss to a mortgagee"; in other words, the amount of his mortgage, over against having received his moneys on expropriation, can only be reinvested at a smaller sum. If he has a 15 per cent mortgage and he can only reinvest it at 9 per cent, then it is the obligation of this government to pay him the difference of 6 per cent for as long as five years.

I would ask you to think that one over.

Mr. MacDonald: Not much principle, but a lot of interest.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Speaker, providentially, I suppose, I am nearing the end but there are a number of small points I wish to make.

In connection with—

Mr. Singer: How can you tell the difference?

Mr. Lawlor: Well the points I make are usually pretty large, I find.

Mr. C. G. Pilkey (Oshawa): The hon. member just does not understand.

Mr. Singer: Like most of your decisions, that one is subjective too.

Mr. Lawlor: Why is subsection j of section 1, subsection l of the Act in there at all? It has to do with purchase money mortgages.

Mr. Singer: Certainly a matter of principle!

Mr. Lawlor: It is a matter of principle because it affects the whole mortgage situation and I will prove it is a matter of principle in two seconds.

Mr. Sopha: Next point.

Mr. Lawlor: I say that it has to do with purchase money mortgages and there is not a word anywhere else in the statutes about purchase money mortgages, no reference at all. The reason is because the people writing this statute were thinking of different things. They started out to do one thing but forgot to do it.

Namely, they started out to make provision for people who have purchased money mortgages, to give them compensation, and they introduced the purchased money mortgage situation into it, in conformity with what the Ontario Law Reform Commission advocated. Then they got lost on the way and ended up in some stygian swamp, because they did not complete their task. So either take it out, or follow through.

The follow through takes this effect: Where the mortgage was a purchase money mortgage, and the market value portion of the compensation is not sufficient to pay the amount outstanding on the mortgage, the mortgagor should be relieved of any liability for the deficiency on the covenant to repay.

Mr. MacDonald: That is a big principle.

Mr. Lawlor: Why was that not involved? I think it is a terribly important principle. In any event, the next minor point that I have to make is connected with section 6(1) having to do with the notice and the advertising. Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Attorney General would consider overnight, the business of when a notice is sent out, ought the notice to advise of the hearing to which the person receiving the notice is entitled. It makes no mention anywhere that a hearing of any kind will be forthcoming.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: What section?

Mr. Lawlor: That is 6(1), Mr. Speaker, it provides for giving notice to each registered owner of the lands and for advertising in a newspaper in the area, that a hearing is to follow from it. The notice should go on to say, "and a hearing will be held. You may require to have a hearing held with respect to such and such".

It is a minor point and I will not dwell on it, but I think it should be in the legislation.

The next point that I have to make—they get more major as I go on—is on section 8.

Mr. Singer: How can the member tell?

Mr. Lawlor: Section 8. A curious thing, in all the legislation all the way through—and perhaps the Attorney General would take it under advisement—is that nowhere, as you come from the levels of tribunal from one to another, from the inquiry, or the inquiry officer, are there any time limitations. The inquiry officer does not have to hand in his report for any definite time.

Secondly, when it gets to the approval authority, the approval authority is under no obligation—it is not under a time limitation to make its approval known. When you get to the next level, the business of the board of negotiations, it is under no obligation to come to a decision or to make any written reasons within any time. When you get to the next level, it, too, is under no obligation. This thing could go on for a long time.

The only level at which you do anything is when you get to the court of appeal and the appeal, I believe, must be launched within 60 days of the final decision of the land commission. These title limitations, I expect, should be perused and taken under advisement.

Having asked for that small boon, I am going now to section 10. Section 10 has to do with where a plan has been registered and no agreement as to compensation has been made. The expropriating authority may serve certain notice on the registered owner. Now I am concerned here, Mr. Speaker, about the form.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is going now clause by clause. Regarding his last clause—his point was well taken, it was a matter of principle as to time limits—but his introductory remarks with respect to this clause certainly indicate it is something which must be dealt with properly in committee, and I would ask him to go on to his next point and keep in mind the fact that this is a debate on the principles of the bill, not on the wording, or the omissions of wording, in the various sections.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Speaker, with deference to you, may I just sneak in—Mr. Attorney General, take a look at page 1015 if you will.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member does not wish to appeal my ruling, he will pass on to the next item.

Mr. Lawlor: I have passed on.

Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence (Carleton East): May I ask a question of the hon. member? In view of the particularity with which the hon. member is dealing with this bill and his threat or promise as to a relative snow of amendments when we come to deal with this in committee, I wonder if he would undertake to provide those who will be sitting on this committee and dealing with his amendments with copies dealing with these particular amendments well prior to the actual sittings of the committee? May I ask the member if he will simply provide this courtesy to us—I am not being facetious, I am being quite sincere—because obviously the points are technical and ones with which we would like to be pre-warned.

Mr. Lawlor: The point is very well taken, Mr. Speaker, and I will do my best to get them well in advance so that you can look them over and see if there is sense to them at all.

I would ask the Attorney General, through you, Mr. Speaker, to take into consideration the business loss with business expropriations—again which is rather defective here and which I will not go into at any length—the business of considering as the commission did, the business of a termination allowance.

That is as much as I will say under that heading at this moment, but where a man is ill, or is out of business or does not desire because of age or infirmity to carry on any longer, then he gets very little under this present legislation. The termination allowance as advocated by your own committee might be very well considered as a just severance pay so to speak.

Now there are a multitude of other matters and amendments, Mr. Speaker, that I might refer to. I shall only mention three, and perhaps I shall say a word or two about what the hon. member for Downsview said, and comment on his remarks before I close.

I suggest to the hon. Attorney General that the provisions made within the legislation for production and full discovery techniques is inadequate. Again, I will not dwell upon it, but under 25(2) there is one provision made for an appraisal report.

How about all the rest of the documentation? How about the business of comparable estimates, and schedules of comparable sales and evaluations, and all that sort of thing—maps and designs? And the calling upon these and the ability to get them?

The next four matters that I would like to discuss—the type of documentation that would be utilized—again it touches the same point—before the board of negotiations under section 27. Even if documents are produced before the board of negotiation, those documents are without prejudice. I am wondering whether they should be in terms of discovery without prejudice on the next highest level. It makes it pretty useless to be introducing documents which will never see the light of day again.

Another point is with respect to interlocutory proceedings of any kind. You seem to have no provision in your statutes to provide for them. I am thinking of interlocutory proceedings in the wide sense, in other words, amendments to things or changes in documents, or further particulars, that sort of thing.

I think under the British practice, the secretary to the tribunal, which is comparable to our land compensation board here, has authority to hear and to make these interlocutory matters under advisement and reach a decision on them.

Under the plan we have in your legislation, I suggest, it can only be determined at the time the parties come before the board for hearing, and that is rather late in the day for incidental matters to be arising. They should be cleared out by that time and get down to the meat of the matter.

My friend from Downsview the other day spoke of costs, and so on, and there is a deficiency, I suggest to you, in the statute in not providing for costs, particularly for legal costs prior to the—well let us say from the word “go”. Very often people are inhibited and this inquiry officer may very well have to hire a lawyer in order to get the right inkling of things before the man goes before the inquiry officer. Why should not his right be considered from the onset? Your whole principle of legal aid is based on that.

Mr. Bullbrook: The member was against that last year.

Mr. Lawlor: I was never against anything the member was for.

So why not give wider provision to meeting the costs of the party. Of course, the question is one of the costs at the tribunal level under section 33 where costs are really provided for the first time. They ought to be on a party-party basis I suggest to you and not on a solicitor-client basis, as there is considerable loss to the individual. He is going to pay money out of his own pocket if he is on a solicitor-client basis, unless the recommendations of McRuer are considered in this regard.

Now, the other points that have been mentioned. Touching the problems of interest, the business of 5 per cent and the stupidity of setting that figure as though it had something sacrosanct about it, the fact is that in your own recommendation before you, it should be one half of a percentage point above the current then NHA rate. Why not? This should be considered.

There are many, many other matters that could attract our attention, and I suppose that in a certain range of matters you have left them out of the statute deliberately and intend to put them into the regulations. I wonder if McRuer would agree that this is what regulations are for? I am thinking of what was mentioned yesterday as to the number of expert witnesses—procedural matters—but which are important to occupy a lot of space in the Bible you know.

Procedural matters—the business of taking a view—you have put it in one place, but it is apparently discretionary in the case of the tribunal. Who shall go first in the hearing? The rights of cross-examination and how far they extend? The business of the weight of various kinds of evidence that may be presented, for instance, in comparable sales statistics and what not. This I suggest very well might be written into this statute rather than left to regulation. It is pretty substantive law, and it is a matter to be placed under consideration.

May I say in closing, Mr. Speaker, that in my riding of Lakeshore we have recently experienced a rather devastating expropriation. There are about 34 homes on a street called Meadows Street which impinge upon the Mimico reformatory land. They have been there for many years with the amenities in terms of gardens and in terms of what they grow and the little life of that community. I could go on describing at some length, but they have been expropriated by the borough of Etobicoke proceeding through—

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member is now proceeding as did another hon. member whom I ruled out of order earlier today to a matter of local interest which has nothing to do with the principle of the bill.

Mr. Lawlor: It has to—

Mr. Speaker: If he wishes to speak to the principle of the bill and then state the principle he is discussing and then illustrate it by that example, that will be quite in order. But to start off discussing the problems of his riding is not the proper way of dealing with the matters in this debate.

Mr. Lawlor: I assure you, Mr. Speaker, it has to do with the principle. It is a question of patience and working up to what I really have to say you know.

Mr. Speaker: Well the hon. member will be much more effective if he states his principle or the principle that he is dealing with and then works from that.

Mr. Lawlor: I cannot arrive at the principle that quickly.

The principle is, Mr. Speaker, that these lands were taken over by a local authority not for the purposes of supplying other houses to people. But it is something that might very well be in this Act—where the power is exercised of taking homes away to turn it over to private industry.

That is what I am after and that is what happened here. It is not an urban renewal scheme. It is not a scheme which is of immediate public benefit in any direct way at all. It is not public at all. It is private and the business of taking private lands, of home owners, to hand them to private industry is a thing that is not covered by this statute and I suggest it might be.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sandwich-Riverside.

Mr. F. A. Burr (Sandwich-Riverside): Mr. Speaker, it is always an educational experience to listen to my colleague, the hon. member for Lakeshore (Mr. Lawlor). This erudite gentleman is versatile and today, he not only quoted Agamemnon, an ancient Greek, but even quoted him in modern French and Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Bullbrook: I did not think it was French.

Mr. Burr: That is the way it came across to me.

Mr. Lawlor: That is the way the Greeks speak French.

Mr. Burr: And, Mr. Speaker, the benefits of your conversational French classes are unpredictable.

I wish to make a few comments on the principle of this bill.

There comes to mind one case, in which a worker is buying his modest home on the proposed site of the E. C. Rowe Expressway in Windsor. He has been paying $60 a month and has been looking forward to burning the mortgage and putting this $60 into an educational fund for his children.

However, when faced with expropriation he looked around for an alternative dwelling and found nothing available. Even rental accommodation, the best he could find, was over $170, so that this man has been worried over the past year. If this bill will relieve the mental suffering, the mental anguish of such victims of expropriation, then I shall have to support this bill.

It may be that expropriating authorities live in ivory towers, far removed from the feelings of the people whose homes and lands they desire to expropriate. But for those of us who have to hear the complaints about the ridiculously low offers often made to ordinary citizens who are unsophisticated in the ways of bargaining, it is a very sorrowful, perhaps even tragic, matter.

Earlier this year I drew to the attention of the House the case of a retired gentleman who had lived for 30 or 35 years in a lovely home and hoped to end his days in that home. Not only was he faced with the prospect of surrendering his home, he was also greatly dismayed at the prospect of receiving about one-half the value as compensation.

Now this gentleman has since died and while I would not suggest that his death was hastened by the fear of imminent expropriation, it cannot be denied that a shadow of unhappiness was cast over his last months because of Ontario's lack of fair expropriation procedures.

If the people of Ontario can now look forward and be sure that expropriation procedures will not work a hardship upon those who are unfortunate enough to be faced with this problem, then I shall be happy to support the principle of this bill.

Mr. Speaker: Is there any other member who wishes to speak before the Minister? The member for Halton West.

Mr. Kerr: I will just take a few minutes, Mr. Speaker, I do not want to delay this debate.

I will support the principle of this bill. I might say, from the start, in my opinion that the previous Act was not all that bad. For the most part, many of those bodies in Ontario which had expropriating authority and powers, in my opinion, did not use them wisely.

They did not take the trouble to minimize as much as possible, you might say, the psychological effect on our people who were subject to these powers. In short, Mr. Speaker, the expropriating powers knew they held a big stick and unfortunately, in many cases, they used it.

Actually the resulting antagonism made negotiations difficult. In my opinion, this bill will help to a very great extent to overcome this, and, I believe, make satisfactory settlement possible without arbitration or resort to the courts.

Among the new provisions, one of the most important, in my opinion, is the requirement for approval before expropriation takes place. That is, that the approval be given by a politically responsible authority, rather than a judge. I think this is a wise decision.

Now the hon. member for Downsview, I believe, and also the hon. member for Lakeshore, indicated some disapproval of section 5. The hon. member for Downsview referred to it as a trial of necessity and said that, for example, section 5(b) that the Minister of Education, I believe in that case, should be the one charged with the final responsibility.

I believe the hon. member for Lakeshore referred to Justice McRuer where he referred to school boards and he made an exception to them because they are not all elected. One set of electors elects the public school boards and another elects the separate school boards.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that the new county boards would pretty well overcome this objection. I think everyone is elected to the county board. In those areas—particularly in certain urban areas—where this is not the case, this will be changed next year.

Now I possibly have more faith in our elected people than some of the hon. members opposite. I think that the politicians in this province are known for their fairness and soundness and, therefore, I do not share his concern.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Some of them are.

Mr. Bullbrook: Well you can dispense with the inquiry officer altogether then.

Mr. Kerr: No, I think, as I was about to say, Mr. Speaker, that the appointment of a chief inquiry officer by the Minister helps overcome this objection as well and I think that is an independent source that would minimize any local or conflicting decision which you think may exist.

Now the onus is on the authority at all times, in this bill, to establish its case. I think the balance is certainly in favour of the property owner, the person whose land is being expropriated. This, of course, is the way it should be. The authority has to lay its cards on the table. There is a complete inquiry, including plans, documents, maps, its grounds or reasons for taking the property. There is nothing hidden about it. There are no witnesses who will appear on the scene and come up with some sort of document which might later make it difficult for the owner to argue against or counteract.

I agree with one point, the hon. member for Downsview made yesterday, that is that at all times if possible we should use competent evaluators.

I think this is most important, particularly where there is a dispute as to the value of the land being taken, and particularly in the case where, under section 15, we have to find a new home for the persons whose properties are being expropriated.

I think another provision in this bill, is the reduction of time it takes to reach a decision. One of the problems of the previous Act was the delay that existed as a result of expropriation. In many cases, the uncertainty that existed about what was going to happen to the owner's property bordered on sadism.

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, in many cases the delays were intentional so that eventually the owner threw in the sponge and settled, usually for much less than he thought his property was worth.

In those cases, where there was a notice of expropriation filed before any negotiation took place, the owner could not sell, either part or all of his property, he could not expand or build, he could not finance or re-finance. He was stymied. He was really nothing more than a glorified tenant. And that would take place from the time a rumour existed that the land was to be expropriated up to the actual time of settlement or the final expropriation order.

This, as the hon. members know, could amount to many months, even years, and I think this bill eliminates this. It requires not only fair compensation, but reasonably swift compensation.

I think the bill provides—the bill in principle certainly provides — that protection necessary for a fair hearing. All along the line, necessity for the expropriation must be of public interest, and the administration and operation of some government facility must be taken into consideration; must be fair remuneration, a substitute home. This bill minimizes to the greatest extent the inconvenience and cost of the expropriation to the owner.

One of the criticisms of section 15, Mr. Speaker, that I have heard, is that in the provision for an additional amount sufficient to provide other accommodation at least equivalent to that expropriated, there may be a great deal of difficulty in satisfying the owner. As I mentioned, section 15 used as a phrase, "at least the equivalent".

Many of the critics say that there may be a great deal of divided opinion on that particular point, and I would assume that the board, in some instances, would probably have to actually, physically view various properties of similar value or comparable value in a similar neighbourhood in order to make a decision. It would be difficult to make such a decision by just listening to evidence, documentary evidence, at a board hearing in a board room.

This problem could exist, for example, where there just is not a comparable home available. The expropriating authority would have to satisfy the board or the owner that the higher priced home is equivalent; although it has features or is in an area that does not appeal to the owner. However, Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, such cases should be rare.

There will have to be reasonableness certainly on both sides, and this seems to be the motive and intent all through this legislation—that there is a balance now much more in favour of the property owner. The onus is on the expropriating authority to establish not only the need, but that it is paying or offering a fair and reasonable price.

The expropriating authority, Mr. Speaker, has to satisfy the necessity for the expropriation of the particular property.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I believe this bill provides every assistance and protection without the fear of uncertainty or loss of fair value for property, and provides for the inconvenience and cost of relocation.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough East.

Mr. T. Reid (Scarborough East): I have a few comments to make on the principles of the bill. First, the essence of concern with this question of expropriation must be with the ability of an individual who stands to lose his home, to be able to cope with the might of the state in providing himself with information about the value of his home, and with competent legal advice.

It is very much in terms of the individual homeowner vis-à-vis the power of the state, the power of the expropriating bodies of the state. I am glad, Mr. Speaker, that the bill incorporates, I believe implicitly, a concern with this basic principle of the individual in our large collective society.

The second point has to do with what might be the more humane aspect of expropriation, and the more humane aspect of expropriation procedures. I have one specific suggestion for the hon. Minister who introduced the bill, and it is this.

When notice of expropriation is given by the expropriating body or the approving authority to the individual registered owner, that this should be done in a way that is personal. It should not be done by a cold registered letter, arriving in someone's mail box. A person picks it up and gets the shock of his life.

I would much prefer, Mr. Speaker, to have such a letter in writing, delivered by a person other than a mailman. This person would deliver the letter, explaining who he was, explain a bit more than a cryptic letter would about the reason for the proposed expropriation. I would like to see this personal aspect incorporated in this bill.

Another area which I think is necessary is to get away from this problem of the bureaucracy of the state, the bureaucracy of an expropriating authority or expropriating body referred to in section 7, subsection 3, in which a time and place for a hearing is established.

I would like to see as a general rule that this be set up in the community in which the expropriation is actually taking place. I say this for two reasons, Mr. Speaker. One, it makes a lot of sense to have the person being expropriated, fighting in the hearing for a fairer deal, and fighting for that in his own neighbourhood, in his own community, rather than having to go downtown to a place which might well be foreign to him, in a setting which is very foreign to him.

I have attended some of the meetings of, I suppose one calls it, the mediator, who tries to settle some of the expropriations down here on University Avenue. There is a room which is furnished with wall-to-wall carpeting, with a big table in it. It is an imposing room, in an imposing building. I know that the people from West Hill, for example, went to that meeting and felt somewhat intimidated by the fact they had to (a) come downtown, (b) go into an imposing building, and (c) go into an imposing room.

So, for these reasons, I would like to see these hearings held near the community, or in the community where the expropriation is taking place, preferably in a meeting place which is a common meeting place in the community, rather than in a posh room which might intimidate some of the smaller people who do get expropriated through life.

So I pass that suggestion on to the Minister in the form of a principle of community development if you like.

The third point, Mr. Speaker, is that I hope these letters that are delivered, hopefully by a person other than the mailman, will not contain phrases that have been contained in expropriation notices in many cases. For example, the expropriations by the University of Toronto, out in West Hill, around the Scarborough campus, contained the sentence which said in the first notice that the person being expropriated would be notified later "of the amount of compensation, if any".

Now this threw quite a few of these good people out in West Hill, around Scarborough College, in a panic. They are not lawyers; they are not used to this type of jargon; and they get a very short cryptic letter that says at some future date compensation will be received, "if any". Well I find that "if any" throws me—I am not a lawyer. It probably has legal significance, and I think the people who receive this type of letter are thrown into a panic.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: It is designed for that purpose.

Mr. T. Reid: I would hope, Mr. Speaker, without getting into further detail on this, that the principle of common language, common English, will prevail in these letters that are delivered, instead of the lawyers' jargon.

The final point, Mr. Speaker, again referring to the examples I know of personally in West Hill around Scarborough College, is this: That the expropriations by the University of Toronto of homes around Scarborough College was done in the most unjust manner. It was done very arbitrarily by the University of Toronto, and caused a great deal of hardship. These expropriations began way back in April 30, 1965.

Mr. Speaker, there are cases still outstanding. We have, for example, the case of the Judsons and the Sherks on Ellesmere Road. The offer is now where it is completely out of line with the market value, and I would like to argue very strongly—as my colleague from Downsview has—that consideration must be given to having this legislation apply retroactively to some date, so that people whose expropriations are still outstanding have the chance of a fair hearing, or rather a fairer hearing under the new legislation, than they do under present legislation.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Bullbrook: Mr. Speaker, I will try to be brief, and principled in my remarks, but in connection with a discussion of the principle of this bill, which, with your background in the profession, you recognize better than we do, it is a difficult bill to discuss, surely, from a question of principle. I want to compliment you, and chastise myself, sir, if I might, in connection with your handling of the dissertation by my friend from Lakeshore. Because, in point of fact, he had the lawyer's concern for the technical difficulties that one sees in the bill itself.

When the hon. Attorney General introduced this bill in the House, it received widespread and favourable comment from us all, and I do not retract from that, as a matter of principle. The problem that I see is this. If you will harken back to the editorial comments in the three Metro newspapers, one of them said we were adopting a home for home policy. Another one said it was slightly more than a home for a home policy; the question of equivalent reinstatement.

Another one said it was slightly less, and I suggest, therefore, sir, that this is the essence of the problem of this Legislature—that the discussion in principle is not nearly as significant as will be the discussion of this piece of legislation before the legal bills committee and the discussion in the committee of the whole House, of this legislation section by section, because as my friend from Downsview has done, and as the hon. member from Halton West, and the hon. member from Lakeshore both have done, they have looked at sections, and seen particular deficiencies in connection with the sections themselves.

I know that I could waste the time of the House, Mr. Speaker, by going into detail in connection with sections with which I would want to take strong issue. We shall have adequate opportunity to do this.

As I see the bill itself, there are principles that seem to flow through to me. One is the principle of the establishment, universally—and we will forget about section 6(2) for a moment, that gives the Lieutenant Governor-in-Council, when he so wishes, the right to abrogate the inquiry—but this principle of establishing, universally, an inquiry of necessity is one with which I do not think anybody,

Mr. Speaker, can take issue. It is good, and this is what we want for the public at large.

But again, as we go through the bill, as we shall in detail and look at the application of this principle in the legislation, it falls far short, and I must suggest, Mr. Speaker, most respectfully, to the Attorney General, that I cannot get it through my head why the expropriating authority and the authorizing authority have to be the same political body?

I just cannot for the life of me accept the rationale that he attempted to give to the hon. member from Lakeshore in this connection. Because, surely to goodness, if we are going to follow what was said by the hon. member from Halton West (Mr. Kerr), and I agree with him, that politicians in this great province, by and large, are very intelligent, then we can say that when a local school board is going to digest, as a matter of necessity, the expropriation of someone's land for their proper purposes, then they are going to digest this adequately. They are going to digest it as intelligent and responsible politicians, and they are going to come to a conclusion that we need this land. I find it very difficult.

A real exercise in nihilism is to find that two months later they get a report from the inquiry officer, who says, in effect, "I do not agree with you." They are, being the intelligent public servants that they are, going to change their mind. I do not think that they are, and I really feel that this part of the bill itself, this principle, is a good principle. But surely to goodness we can, in our significant and particular review of the application of sections 5, 6, 7 and 8, perhaps persuade the hon. Attorney General to reconsider what seems to be a unanimous issue in connection with the concept.

A second principle that thrusts itself forward in connection with the bill has to be the principle, and again a proper one—one that we compliment the government on—which attempts to properly codify the question of what constitutes adequate and proper compensation. Because, sir, you again, as a member of the profession, and I, and my colleagues in this House, who are lawyers, and who have been involved in acting for people, recognize, as does Mr. McRuer, as does the Ontario Law Reform Commission in their volume on compensation for expropriation, the absolute jungle of archaic principles.

I have not got volumes of law with me. I have not got the cases, but I ask the hon. Attorney General to go back and look at the mental gymnastics that flowed from the Privy Council, from the Supreme Court, on the question of value to the owner, those wonderful words that really meant so much to people in dollars and cents, and really meant nothing to me.

I can recall, if you will just permit one moment, discussing this question of principle when, in the city of Sarnia, the federal, provincial and municipal governments undertook a relocation scheme in what was called the Blue Water area. About 260 homes were taken over there and these people were collectively thrust out of this area, and sent into an open market to buy homes.

I had the good fortune of attempting to argue the very first case on the adequacy of compensation there. We tried to put forward, at that time, that this question of value to the owner must include all the collateral material that is now being considered in this legislation, and I say, as a matter of particularity, how many times I saw people who had worked to acquire a house for $8,000, and after 20 years they paid off their mortgage.

They were paid $8,000 for their house, and for equivalent reinstatement, it cost them $20,000. They were 60 years of age, and they started with a $12,000 mortgage all over again. So, I think we are all attracted to this principle of codifying the question of values, the question of equivalent re-instatement and of everything in the bill. I am bothered more by this than anything else, because if the editorial writer is just looking at those two words, he can come to the conclusion: first, that is more than a home for a home; and second, it is a home for a home; and third, it is less than a home for a home.

When we permit the courts to have a look at it, as they have with some other legislation that we in our wisdom have passed, you can imagine what conclusion they might come to. I am worried about these general words, and this is why I invite all the members of this House to forget about the question of principle, because what has to be done with this far reaching piece of legislation is for it to have a most exhaustive research, section by section, analyzing every word, looking at the ramification of the words.

Just off the top of my head, section 14-2, "where land is devoted to the purpose of such a nature that there is no general demand or market for land". They left out the word "the" there, it should read "for the land".

That section has no appropriate meaning unless it refers to the land that was originally mentioned in the first sentence of that section. And this is why we have to be careful with this bill. We are not going to do a job unless we do, in committee, what my friend from Lakeshore has attempted to do today. Thank you, sir.

Mr. Speaker: Is there any other member who wishes to speak to the bill? If not, the Minister has the floor.

The hon. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, it is always very heartening to have a good reception for a major piece of legislation, and I think this is how this bill has been received here. It is a matter of great assistance to me, particularly in offering this bill and introducing it to hear the comments which have come forth in this debate on the second reading.

I did feel, Mr. Speaker, as I indicated perhaps mildly once or twice, that we were straying from the principle, but I think that was not a bad thing at all, because it has been said by the last speaker, the hon. member for Sarnia, that the important thing will be our discussion in committee.

Having said that, I think perhaps I may be permitted, in the short time that I have left, to confine my remarks to the principles of this bill. I shall endeavour to make some comments on detailed items, perhaps answer some of the questions, some of the points that were made by various speakers.

I would like Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding the time left today, to say something very briefly about the historical nature of this legislation. You, sir, had the honour of being chairman of a select committee of the Legislature which presented its first report on this subject of land expropriation in 1961, and then its final report on November 22, 1961.

The Legislature was prompt to act on that report, and to bring in the Expropriation Procedures Acts of 1962 and 1963. But in that report, Mr. Speaker, the committee did not give any firm or complete direction as a basis of compensation. In fact, the recommendation which appeared on page 12 of the report of the select committee, was as follows:

That a uniform statute provide a common basis for compensation for all agencies that are authorized by the provincial government to expropriate land; and that the requirement be that the authority make due compensation to the owner of land for any damage necessary resulting from the expropriation.

We followed that principle, it was written into the Act, The Expropriation Procedures Act, of due compensation.

It became apparent that the interpretation of those words could mean one thing in one person's mind or in the mind of one tribunal or one court, and a different thing in another. Due compensation seemed to be the great grievance in the matter of expropriation.

The chief complaint was that there was nothing certain about compensation, and it was not generally regarded as being definite enough or, perhaps, I might say, generous enough. So we asked the law reform commission which was appointed in 1964 to take the matter of the basis of compensation under study as a special and urgent study, and to produce for the Legislature some recommendations which would enable us to enact a bill determining the basis of compensation.

I was not aware that the hon. Mr. McRuer, who at the same time was appointed the commissioner for the inquiry into civil rights and was also at the same time chairman of the law reform commission, was going also to produce a report on expropriation. But he has done so and it has been most helpful.

He has gone into the whole field of compensation, procedures, methods, nature of tribunals, and various details, so we have the two reports from which this Act, Bill 5, arises. I should say to the House that in drafting this legislation—I think perhaps I said this in introducing this bill—we have attempted to incorporate insofar as we thought it was possible to do so feasibly and practically, the recommendations made by the hon. Mr. McRuer in his report and those of the law reform commission.

Mr. Lawlor: Is it a happy marriage?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, I think so. I must say that the suggestions which have been made and I think many of the things that were said today are quite properly said, perhaps more properly said, in committee; such things as the matter of cost, the matter of interest rates, the matter of notices containing times, the matter of procedures, the matter of places where hearings shall be held.

These things, I think, may be spelled out in the legislation. Certainly I should think many of them would be spelled out in regulations, and I think it is helpful to have these suggestions which I have noted and which, of course, will be on record for our consideration as we go to committee.

But the great principles, Mr. Speaker, and this I agree to and adhere to, the great principles of this legislation are, I think we have a good Expropriation Procedures Act, a fairly good Expropriations Procedures Act following the report of the committee which you chaired, the select committee of this Legislature. The principles which we have come to in this Legislature, the basic one, the important one, is the new basis of compensation.

That is what we sought specifically in the law reform commission and we now have market value together with disturbance, compensation for disturbance, for relocation, for injurious affection, for loss of business, that sort of thing. This is the great thing which is established in this legislation.

I think it goes a long way, it will go a long way, in removing the grievances which have plagued us through the past. We have established a new principle of the inquiry as one of the first steps concerning an expropriating authority when it begins to act; we have established the principle that any person whose land is taken may call for an inquiry as to the fairness, the need, the necessity, the trial of necessity, and as I said earlier in the debate today, that is not to judge the objectives of the expropriating authority.

We have established the principle of political approval; the approval by some political person, someone responsible to the electors, someone who may have to stand in this Legislature as a Minister and justify the action of the agency of the government, or the department of the government, which comes within his jurisdiction for his action in expropriation.

We have established the principle of equivalent reinstatement, and I suggest that while there is some difference of interpretation—not a difference of opinion—as to that, I would like hon. members to consider what other better term, other better title, you could find. I think home for a home is not adequate. Equivalent reinstatement, I think, means what it says. I think it is a good term and as it is used in the Act for the use of the land tribunal and for—

Mr. Singer: It is not the title we quarrel with, it is the method of carrying out the idea.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Right. Well it is a new principle which we have established.

Finally, the land compensation board which, I think, is something that is needed; something strongly recommended to us; and something which will help to solve a great many of the grievances which have plagued us again in this field of expropriation.

I would like, Mr. Speaker, just to point out that we have established the principle, which is a principle really in this bill, that this Act shall come into force the day it receives Royal assent. I believe so much in the importance of this legislation that I would urge hon. members to assist us in seeing the bill through committee.

The Act is to come into force on the day it receives Royal assent, except section 28. Section 28 is the section which sets up the land compensation board and we have left that, for the moment, with the proviso which is also in section 46, that the Ontario Municipal Board shall carry on until the land compensation board is in readiness to perform.

We do not think that hiatus will be long, but we feel this Act may come into force very quickly and the Land Compensation Board may not be ready. But the important thing is that section 46 does provide that sections 13 to 21 apply in respect to expropriations for which compensation has not been settled or determined before the Act comes into force.

The effect of that—and I would like this to be very clear before the House—is that those sections, 13 to 21, are the sections which provide the new basis of compensation. Therefore, regarding any expropriations which are presently going on, or which may arise before this Act comes into force, the matter of the compensation to be paid for the land or the property taken, will be done according to the terms of this legislation, this Act.

Mr. Singer: In so far as value.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: In so far as value—the matter of compensation—the words I used. There was a suggestion that the Act be retroactive. I think it would be extremely difficult, to take this legislation backward into the time where matters have been settled and make the provisions of procedures and even compensations apply. But we have provided that this legislation shall apply to those things which are outstanding in the way of compensation. To that extent it is retroactive.

The hon. member for Downsview questioned the term “injurious affection”. If I had time today I would deal with it, but I should like to dispose of this second reading today, Mr. Speaker. Injurious affection is something we can discuss at great length in committee. I would like to reply to the hon. member for Huron-Bruce (Mr. Gaunt) and the hon. member for Riverdale, who raised the question about the treatment of the farmer.

I said yesterday, briefly, and I will say it now: the farmer, as a citizen, gets the new basis of value. He gets the relocation; he gets compensation for injurious affection if it is there and he gets equivalent reinstatement where his residence is concerned.

While it is suggested that he carries on a business, I do not think it is the business in the sense of a store. He is a manufacturer, a resident, a producer. I think the terms of the Act are very wide—amply wide to cover him. If not, this is something we can also discuss in committee.

I would say in closing, Mr. Speaker, that I shall certainly be open to review these suggestions and to review the section to the bill as we go through the matter in committee. If we can do that, we will have produced something which will be of great value and I trust will meet with approval outside this House as it has met approval here.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, before the question is put, I wonder if I could ask two very brief questions of the Attorney General.

The first one is, when the bill goes to the legal bills committee, will public representations be allowed at that point?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, it has always been my practice to welcome public attendance before that committee. I think it has been helpful and we anticipate it again.

Mr. Singer: I am glad the Minister said that.

The second point is, has he any date in mind as to which it is likely that the bill will proceed to the legal bills committee?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I do not have an actual date in mind, but I am seeking the earliest day that is available. What date it may be I do not know. Perhaps the House leader might have some word—I would just say this, just as soon as we can get it there.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, Mr. Speaker, it is necessary to clarify that, because there are a lot of people who have expressed an interest. I assume it will not be tomorrow. Is that a safe assumption?

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): Next week!

Mr. MacDonald: Not until next week?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Well tomorrow is Thursday, and Friday morning is a short day.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, if it is not tomorrow, I agree with the House leader that it would be out for this week.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Yes.

Mr. MacDonald: But I think that clarification is necessary at this stage.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow there is a second reading of one bill that we would like to call and then immediately go on with the Throne Debate.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Which is that?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Bill 17. If there is no objection we could do it right now.

THE MILK ACT, 1965

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food) moves second reading of Bill 17, An Act to amend The Milk Act, 1965.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Tomorrow, Mr. Speaker, we will have as the first order of the day the continuation of the Throne Debate.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 6.05 o'clock, p.m.

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to control automobile racing, 1968-1969.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to prevent the establishment of automobile racing in Parkdale against the wishes of the residents. Mr. Speaker, I wish to stress the bi-partisan sponsorship of this bill and the unanimity of all elected representatives from west Toronto on this matter.

Mr. Speaker: Before we proceed with the orders of the day there are one or two matters that remained with Mr. Speaker, one of which will be held over, but I do wish to correct an error yesterday in Mr. Speaker's attributing a Speaker's ruling in 1960 to Mr. Speaker Downer. At the time the Speaker was Mr. Speaker Murdoch.

On November 27, there was a question asked of the Minister of Highways (Mr. Gomme) to which he made a reply and which reply was subsequently transcribed from the tape and appeared in the draft records of this House—Hansard—as the Minister having said the word "cannot". The next day, on the 28th, the member for High Park (Mr. Shulman) rose in his place on a matter of privilege and suggested that the Minister had said the word "can't".

I asked the members concerned, the member for Lanark (Mr. Gomme), and the member for High Park, to join me in listening to the tape. The hon. member for High Park stated that he was satisfied that Mr. Speaker should listen to it, so the Minister of Highways and the chairman of the committee of the whole House and I listened to the tape. I would report to the House that the Minister certainly did not say "cannot" as the draft Hansard reporter's record had it. I was unable to tell from the tape whether the hon. Minister had said "can't" or "can". The tape was played over several times with the same result. I therefore have taken the hon. Minister's word that his word on that occasion was not "can't" or "cannot" but "can". I therefore will not have an amendment or an addendum placed in Hansard.

Just so there may be no mistake in the House—and the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) will probably remember and agree with me—I would like to call to the attention of the members that I am on record in this House as having said that I know of no better way of asking a question than by beginning with the word "why".

That has been my attitude here for some months after a memorable exchange during the last session. Despite some inaccuracies in those things we read from our press gallery, it would appear that they are not always present or not always up on the procedures of this House. So that there may be no mistake I always welcome questions with "why", whether the Minister to which they are directed does or not.

The hon. leader of the Opposition.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy and Resources Management (Mr. Simonett) and since he is not here to reply to the question, I would perhaps raise a point of order.

It is that Ontario Hydro yesterday announced a $1.2 billion expenditure, the funds for which must be guaranteed by the province of Ontario. I would say, sir, that I object to the fact that this announcement was not made by either the Prime Minister or the appropriate Minister in the House, and that the Minister is not in his place today to comment on questions that might have arisen from that particular announcement.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if I might speak on a point of order. I too read that report this morning and I knew of this event, at least I knew that it was being contemplated, but I did not know that the report was going to be made or would be published in the papers today. As I read it, I really wondered whether Hydro had in fact issued it or whether that had been what is commonly referred to as a leak—

Mr. Nixon: There is some doubt in the press gallery.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Yes. I was in London last night and I read this in the morning paper on my way down here this morning, but it did not read to me as if it were a direct release from Ontario Hydro. So that, just how it got into the paper I do not at the moment know, but I can assure the hon. member that left to my own devices I would have said something about it here in the House for a whole variety of reasons.

It is quite an important announcement and will have a very profound effect upon the economic life of this province in the years that lie ahead. I think it is a matter of great interest to all of us. Perhaps I would have preferred to have been able to announce it in this House rather than have it appear in the papers as it did. However, apart from all those considerations, I can assure my hon. friend that it was not released in the manner it was released with my consent.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Municipal Affairs a few days ago answered a question for the Minister of Energy and Resources Management and I think he is indicating that he has the answer to this one. If you permit me to put the question, perhaps he would answer it for me.

1. Have fuel elements been changed under full or partial load conditions in the Douglas Point nuclear power station? If they have, is this being done on a regular basis?

2. How many hours has the Douglas Point nuclear power station been operating at, or above, its designed capacity of 200,000 kilowatts?

3. Is there any special significance to the importance of December 1 as the deadline for decision of Ontario Hydro to decide and announce the $1.2 billion nuclear and coal-fired expansion?

Hon. W. D. McKeough (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first question is "no". The answer to the second question is 2,180 hours, at the designed rating of 200 megawatts net or higher. And the answer to the third question is "no". It is recognized that this date and the amount of money mentioned in this question are identical with a speculative newspaper article.

Mr. Nixon: Perhaps the Minister would not be prepared to answer a supplementary question, but he used the word "speculative" and there is some indication that there was a release associated with the specific information in the article. Can he give us any further information?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I have not discussed this with the Minister's staff. Recognizing the urgent public importance of this question, which there is, they wanted it answered in the House today, but I would assume from this that they have decided that the article was speculative.

Mr. Nixon: Well, I might say, Mr. Speaker, that while I have not had a chance to read the release that has just been handed to me; it is dated December 4, which is yesterday, and says:

ONTARIO GOVERNMENT PRESS RELEASE

Hon. John P. Robarts today announced the Ontario government has approved plans to build two new generating stations with a combined capacity of five million kilowatts.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well, Mr. Speaker, perhaps my face should be a little red.

An hon. member: It is. It is.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I knew that a release was being prepared but I did not know when it would be. As I say, I left here yesterday afternoon and only got back this morning. It may be that this was released in my absence and without my final expressed authority. But in any event, if that is a government release with my name on it, I think you may take it that it is correct.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister is extensively quoted in the release and I would presume then that the Minister of Municipal Affairs would consider now that the announcement was not speculative and that we might assume Ontario Hydro is operating this important resource with a little more efficiency than the government is announcing it.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, I think we would have to say that the leader of the Opposition has caught us with our pants down.

Mr. Nixon: Beautiful spectacle!

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, I was going to credit the fourth estate with enterprising vigour but apparently it is the government's bureaucracy.

I have four questions, the first of the Minister of Highways.

Is it accurate, as suggested in a letter to the editor of the Telegram on December 2, that some of the curves on Highway 400 are not engineered for 70 miles per hour?

Hon. G. E. Gomme (Minister of Highways): Mr. Speaker, all curves on Highway 400 where the 70-miles-per-hour speed limit applies were engineered for 70 miles per hour or better.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, my second question is to the Minister of Health.

What steps will the Minister take to remove the possibility of periodic high-level pollution by phosgene gas from the Allied Chemical plant in Moore township, as detailed in a letter to the Air Pollution Control Service on November 7, 1968?

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Speaker, may I take that question as notice? I did not get back to my office in time to see it.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Agriculture and Food.

Can we expect that the report of the Minister's farm income committee will provide the public with detailed information on farm costs, particularly in the fields of machinery and fertilizer, and their impact on net farm income?

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food): Mr. Speaker, it is very difficult for me to say what the report of the farm income committee will contain because I have nothing to do with either its preparation or its drafting or anything more than its terms of reference.

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): The Minister does not talk to his deputy?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Now that is it, and the terms—

Mr. Nixon: Does the deputy come to work anymore at all?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I beg pardon?

Mr. Nixon: Does the Minister's deputy come to work anymore?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Really, I do not know how he stands the pressure of meeting almost, I would say, 24-hours-a-day on committee work.

Mr. MacDonald: I sometimes wonder how he stands the Minister's replies.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Perhaps that is something that the hon. member cannot quite understand. But what my hon. friend, the leader of the New Democratic Party, is trying to get me to say is that I know what is in the farm income committee report and that I had something to do with drafting it, and you will not get me to say that.

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): Even if it is true.

Mr. MacDonald: I will not get the Minister to say it, but—

Mr. Pitman: What an admission!

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, I have no idea what they will say. I would say this, Mr. Speaker, that their terms of reference were most broad, inasmuch as the costs of machinery and fertilizer, in fact all other articles and services that go into production of agricultural food products, have a direct relationship on farm income.

I would think that the farm income committee would likely be making specific reference to these matters that the hon. member has raised. I would also remind him that the federal government has appointed the Barber commission on farm machinery prices. I would expect that that committee would deal with these matters in quite specific detail.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, when the Minister says "he expects," the information to be in the report, I think this is a knowledgeable reply.

My final question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Was the Minister stating government policy in his flat rejection of a provincial capital gains tax to decrease speculation in land, as reported in his remarks to the House Builders' Conference in Toronto yesterday?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, I think probably there were three elements to my reply yesterday to the questions which were asked, and I might summarize them.

I said, first of all, that I felt in my own mind, philosophically and administratively, it would be difficult to impose a capital gains tax on land speculation or on profits from land speculation, as opposed to a capital gains tax on other kinds of profits from other kinds of speculation, meaning the market and other forms of investment.

I further pointed out that for competitive reasons, in my view, and I think it has been substantiated by a number of reports, it would be difficult to impose a provincial capital gains tax in one province alone, for competitive reasons which we are well aware of.

And thirdly, in my view again, it would be difficult—and I think this is well recognized—if not impossible, difficult at any rate, to impose a capital gains tax on any one segment of capital gains without having a mechanism for a personal income tax. I would have to say, of course, that the government policy in this matter, as in all matters pertaining to taxation, will be announced in due course by the Provincial Treasurer.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member of Correctional Services has an answer to—

Mr. MacDonald: All of the answers are debatable.

Mr. Speaker: —the other day.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Lakeshore (Mr. Lawlor) asked the following question:

Why is a certain prisoner, who until recently was serving time at Millbrook for arson, being held in a detention cell at Guelph, when the apparent cause of his removal was mental illness?

First, I would like to thank the hon. member for not divulging the inmate's name. I am advised that this man was transferred from Millbrook Reformatory for examination at the neuro-psychiatric clinic at Guelph. On the advice of the psychiatrist, he was placed in medical segregation on full privileges. On Monday, December 2, 1968, he was certified as a mentally ill person, and was transferred to the Ontario Hospital, Penetanguishene, on the following day.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of Mines has answers to two questions from another day.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence (Minister of Mines): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Question No. 217, from the member for Thunder Bay (Mr. Stokes), which I took as notice, was:

In view of the public reaction to strip mining, about which the Minister assured the House that the removal of large quantities of material will not detract from the natural beauty of Picton's Sandbanks Provincial Park, is the department limiting the amount of sand which can be removed, and how much sand has been removed over the ten-year period from 1958 to 1968?

The answer to this, Mr. Speaker, is that Lake Ontario Cement have a lease on approximately 40 acres adjoining the northeast section of The Department of Lands and Forests' Sandbanks Provincial Park, which contains approximately 1,200 acres. The lease permits the removal of sand, to be used in the manufacture of cement, to just short of the water level. The pit has been operated for about ten years, and some 700,000 tons have been removed. The operator of the pit has been instructed to maintain the banks at roughly 45 degrees or at the angle of repose.

There was another question, Mr. Speaker, No. 218, from the member for Sudbury East (Mr. Martel):

Is the Minister aware that employees of INCO at the Copper Cliff smelter are unable to obtain good drinking water, and what action will the Minister take to correct the situation?

This is a novel experience, I think, for the district engineer there, but we sent him up in any event. He informs me that he drank at several water fountains in the Copper Cliff smelter on December 3, and found that the water was quite potable. However, not being in any position to analyse the water himself, he did take samples of all the fountains, and they have been forwarded to The Department of Health for analysis. I will have a further report for the member at the same time.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville has a question from yesterday, of the Minister of Education; and the Minister of Municipal Affairs is prepared to answer the questions for Energy and Resources Management.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): The first is of the Minister of Education. What steps does the Minister plan on taking to assist long established commercial business schools from financial bankruptcy as a result of the greatly expanded programmes of adult education that do not make use of the facilities and staff presently available in such business schools?

Hon. W. G. Davis (Minister of Education): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member well knows that the old adult education retraining programme has expanded tremendously in the past few years, and this has certainly complicated their problems. In the past—and this was prior to the federal legislation on adult occupational training—we arranged for students to be sent to private schools in communities where public facilities did not exist. At present, because of federal legislation, the department cannot arrange for training in private schools and the federal authorities cannot place students directly into private schools because of the wording of the federal Act, and I give the hon. member the wording:

Where, pursuant to section 4, a manpower officer arranges for the enrollment of an adult described in that section in an occupational training force that is not operated by a province or by a provincial or municipal authority in a province, that is approved by the government of the province in which the course is operated, the Minister may authorize the payment of such charges for tuition or otherwise for the training of that adult in the course as are provided for by the regulations.

There are perhaps, Mr. Speaker, two possible solutions. We are working on both of them.

First, the federal Department of Manpower and Immigration is investigating the legality of interpreting the words "approved by the government of the province" to mean other than a provincially supported school. This would then include the private and commercial schools.

Secondly, we are attempting to have several aspects of the federal legislation changed, including the section governing the use of private schools.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Speaker, if I may ask of the Minister a supplementary question, how quickly could we expect some solution to this problem because these schools are—especially the ones in my own community—in real danger of having to close within a very short period of time, and may not be able to wait too long for federal approval?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, we have indicated the problems to the federal Department of Manpower and Immigration and I think they are aware of the urgency and, as I say, we cannot move any more rapidly than they are prepared to, to deal with this situation.

Mr. B. Newman: Thank you. A question of the Minister of Energy and Resources Management. Apparently it will be answered by the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

In the light of the activities of American chemical companies who use Fighting Island in the Detroit River as an industrial waste disposal site, would the hon. Minister inform the House what steps he is taking to abate the pollution of the river by such use?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, the answer is that the Wyandotte Chemicals Corp. owns Fighting Island and disposes its waste there. Routine surveillance of these operations is maintained by the Ontario Water Resources Commission. On the basis of inspections of the area to date, the company is doing an adequate job in controlling its waste.

Mr. B. Newman: May I ask the Minister if he is aware of the report of the international joint commission that does criticize quite strongly the actions of the Wyandotte Chemical in the pollution of the river at that source? This is a Canadian island.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Yes, I was sent a copy of that report a few days ago and I read it with a great deal of interest.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Lakeshore has a question of the Minister of Revenue from yesterday.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): This is the first question to this Minister, Mr. Speaker.

What prompted the recent government decision not to impose a reduced property tax on places of worship? In the Minister's experience as chairman of the select committee on taxation, is this a defensible decision?

Hon. J. H. White (Minister of Revenue): This question does not relate to The Department of Revenue, but because of my high personal regard and respect for the member for Lakeshore I have obtained a copy of the Prime Minister's (Mr. Robarts') statement dated Nov. 15 which I will send to him and which gives the government's reasons for this decision.

If the hon. member has an opportunity to read this with care he will see that the answer to the second part of his question is "yes".

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sandwich-Riverside has a question from yesterday of the Minister for Municipal Affairs.

Mr. F. A. Burr (Sandwich-Riverside): Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Is the Minister preparing legislation to amend section 401 of The Municipal Act to permit plumbers and electricians to operate in neighbouring municipalities without "establishing a regular place of business" in each?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, the matter referred to is under study, and in due course the amendments to The Municipal Act will be brought forward.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough East has questions from yesterday.

Mr. T. Reid (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Education.

With reference to the Minister's reply of Monday, December 2, to my question about the purchase of straps by Ontario schools, would the Minister consider establishing specifications concerning the length, width, thickness, weight, substance and flexibility of straps that are currently being purchased? If so, would the Minister consider varying such specifications depending on the sex, age or size of the children who are expected to be strapped?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, as I recall informing this House, I believe it was on Tuesday, concerning the departmental policy suggesting that corporal punishment should be discontinued and indicated to the hon. member that this memo would be going out to the principals, superintendents, etc., I can only assume from this question (which the hon. member must feel is of urgent public importance) that either the hon. member was not listening to my answer or that he disagrees with our point of view and feels that corporal punishment should not be discontinued and wants to establish regulations to condone its use.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, if the Minister would accept a supplementary question.

Hon. Mr. Davis: No, I do not think there is any need. I think the matter has been stated very clearly, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. T. Reid: I would like to ask him if this—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister will not accept a supplementary question so the member will go on to his next question.

Mr. T. Reid: Why does the Minister not just abolish—

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, the second question for the Minister of Education is this:

Have the scholastic and personal data of some 20,000 Scarborough high school pupils been recently supplied to the Honeywell Controls Company (or its subsidiaries) and entered into a computer owned and controlled by this private company for retrieval demonstration purposes at symposiums, conventions and exhibitions? If so, what immediate steps is the Minister of Education of Ontario taking to protect these pupils from such commercial exploitation?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, The Department of Education's data centre did not provide any such material. However, I am informed that a board of education did make a master-file programme available for a demonstration at an educational conference and in order to illustrate this programme I am informed that fictitious data was created and no factual data concerning the students or schools was used nor were students or schools identified.

It is also possible that there have been instances where timetabling projects, which do not relate to information with respect to students per se or student records, but which could have names, may have been undertaken by a board in conjunction with a manufacturer or service bureau to illustrate the timetabling techniques that could be developed with the use of the computer.

Mr. T. Reid: A brief supplementary if the Minister would allow, Mr. Speaker.

Was there a demonstration at the Minister's information systems committee conference at the Constellation Hotel in the spring by Honeywell Controls; and if so, can the Minister assure me that this information was in fact fictitious as opposed to actual information, with perhaps the name of the students removed?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I understand there was a demonstration at the MISC conference; not having been there for the demonstration, although I was there at the earlier part of the conference, I am informed that it was strictly fictitious material that was used in the demonstration.

Mr. T. Reid: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, the third question to the Minister of Education:

What educational justification is there for the Minister's decision that the foundation levels of the Ontario foundation tax plan should be increased by $20 for secondary vocational school pupils and only $15 for secondary academic pupils?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member in researching this question probably ascertained that the cost relating to the academic and to the vocational are approximately $450 and $580. This was increased by $15 to $465; the other $580 plus $20 to $600; and with my very rapid mathematics, this means a 3.5 per cent increase in both areas. They were approximately the same percentage increase and, of course, a partial reason at least relates to the basic costs of the various types of programmes and to the higher student-teacher ratio in the academic compared to the vocational.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question arising from what the Minister said:

Would I be correct in deducing from the Minister's remarks that the cost of vocational education is substantially higher than the cost for secondary academic education per pupil?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I thought that was rather self-evident and I think it is very clear in the Minister's report. It was $450 plus $15, which is $465 and $580 plus $20, which is $600. The vocational cost is higher per student because of the smaller number of students, and to a degree the facility that is provided as well. It is $465 to $600.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Thunder Bay has questions from yesterday, and one today.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): Mr. Speaker, one for the Minister of Lands and Forests. Will Indians be required to purchase fishing licences as of January 1, 1969? Will treaty Indians be exempt from this provision whether or not they live on a reservation?

Will the fishing licences for all residents for smelt fishing be $1 or $2 as dip nets are used for this purpose?

Hon. R. Brunelle (Minister of Lands and Forests): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. member for Thunder Bay, the first question: The matter of whether or not Indians will be required to purchase fishing licences after January 1 is under review and we hope to have a decision in the near future.

With reference to the question of nets: Most resident fishermen will require only a $3 fishing licence that takes smelt since they generally use only dip nets less than six by six feet in the spring.

The $1 resident smelt licence allows the holder to use a larger seine net up to 30 feet by 6 feet in size, in certain parts of the province. The $2 dip net licence available allows the holder to take coarse fish year round during the daylight hours, and to take white fish and herring during the fall in some lakes.

The $1 resident licence to take smelt for personal use allows the holder to use a thirty-by-six-foot seine net in March, April and May in any part of Ontario except (a) Algonquin Park, (b) Peterborough and Victoria counties, (c) Durham and Northumberland north of Lake Ontario, (d) the Trent River, (e) Dalrymple Lake in Ontario county.

A dip net may be used by a resident during this period and in that area described, without a special licence other than the new $3 resident fishing licence and the $2 resident dip net licence to take fish for personal use allows the holder to use a six by six foot dip net at any time of year for coarse fish, and in some waters to take white fish and herring as well, in October, November and December.

Mr. Stokes: Second question: Will the Minister explain why it is necessary for the federal fisheries research board to pollute 40 lakes set aside by The Department of Lands and Forests in the Kenora area for pollution research, as stated by Dr. J. R. Vallentyne in today's Globe and Mail?

Could such research not be conducted in the many Ontario lakes already polluted?

If the federal fisheries board project goes ahead, can the Minister assure the House that the lakes concerned will be restored to their former unpolluted condition once the experiments have been completed?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, the department has set aside 56 small lakes in 17 watersheds, averaging only 33 acres, for the federal fisheries research board to study the aging of lakes and the effect of chemicals which pollute water or cause lakes to age. The board is conducting experimental work and requires careful control of the waters. They cannot use polluted waters for this purpose, and also this will take somewhere between 10 to 20 years in order to have the final results.

My department has been assured by the federal fisheries research board that no downstream watershed will be affected and that their studies involve not only aging lakes but determining whether the process is reversible. Also, we have discussed this matter with the Ontario Water Resources Commission, another interested body and they have given their approval.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Humber.

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): Thank you, Mr. Speaker; a few questions of the hon. Minister of Health: The first question is: What is the rate of illegitimate births in Ontario for 1966, 1967 and to date, 1968?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, this question should be directed to the hon. Provincial Secretary (Mr. Welch), who is the Registrar General.

Mr. Speaker: I will have it re-directed for answer, I hope, tomorrow.

Mr. Ben: Fine; thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Minister of Health:

Will the Minister table the letter which he sent to Dr. E. H. Botterell, vice-president of health sciences at Queen's University in connection with the doctor shortages in Ontario?

Secondly, is the report in this morning's Globe and Mail correct in stating that the Minister's suggestion to produce more doctors was received negatively by the Ontario College of Physicians and Surgeons?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to table the letters since it is an ordinary piece of correspondence, many hundreds of which pass between my department and those with whom we have to deal. If we were to table all our correspondence, I am afraid your resources, sir, would be taxed beyond endurance.

Mr. Shulman: Nobody wants the Minister to table them all, just that one.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: The answer to the second part of the question is "no", the report is not quite accurate, sir, as stated in the newspaper report. It is taken out of context.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Speaker, would the Minister accept some supplementary questions? First of all, if the letter is in ordinary course why does the Minister have objections to tabling it at the request of a member of the Opposition? My second question is, if the report was taken out of context, would the Minister be kind enough to supply the questioner with the statement so that he can read the context from which it was taken?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, again I say that in my view it is not necessary to table a letter of this kind. First of all, the letter was sent to the deans only a very few days ago. For some unknown reason, the deans have chosen to begin the discussion with the newspapers before they began it with me at all. This, to me, is a little bit out of the ordinary procedure. Secondly, the statement has been taken out of context. The answer that the college gave me was not negative. They pointed out to me the very grave difficulties, in their view, of doing what I had asked them to do, but I had asked them to deal with the question as though it would take a prolonged period of time and not only to provide one doubling-up, as I did in this most recent letter to the deans.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for—

Mr. Ben: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker. How about the other part? Do you think we could have the text out of which the statement was originally taken out of context?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, I have explained this.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister, I believe, has answered the question as he has said.

The hon. member for High Park has a question.

Mr. Shulman: I have a question of the hon. Attorney General in four parts:

1. Has Dr. Fred Jaffe, medical director of the Centre of Forensic Science, resigned, effective at the end of this month?

2. Was Dr. Jaffe's resignation the result of a failure of the government to co-operate with his requests to improve the services of the departments of pathology and forensic medicine?

3. Does the Attorney General feel there is any possibility of hiring a pathologist equal to Dr. Jaffe's high qualifications to replace him?

4. Will the government have to pay a higher salary in order to replace Dr. Jaffe?

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, the medical director of the centre of forensic science has resigned; his resignation to be effective December 31, the end of this month.

I am not aware that his resignation is the result of any failure on the part of the government to co-operate in any way or to provide him with facilities or any breach of the terms of his employment. My understanding is that he proposes to return to private practice.

On the third part of the question—is there any possibility of hiring a pathologist equal to Dr. Jaffe's high qualifications?—I cannot do more than speculate. It is always a question whether you can replace a very capable and qualified person with someone who will follow his tradition and possess his capabilities. I would hope that we would be able to get someone to do so, because I think it is well known that our centre is very highly regarded across the continent. And the staff there is regarded as first-rate.

Will the government have to pay a higher salary? I would not know that either. I believe the salary at the moment is $27,000. It is possible that, in order to entice somebody to come to us, we might have to pay more; but I cannot answer, except to speculate.

Mr. Shulman: Will the Minister accept a supplementary question?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes.

Mr. Shulman: In view of the fact that Dr. Jaffe has been in this position a relatively short time before his resignation, would the Minister be willing to initiate discussions with him to see if the problems could be ironed out, so that the province could have the benefit of keeping this man, if at all possible?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: We have had some discussions, I think. I have not talked with him personally. Usually when a man leaves a salaried position to go into private practice, he has, I think, in mind that he can do better, in a material way at least. I would not want to say that is Dr. Jaffe's thinking, but one way to perhaps keep him there would be to go to the Treasury Board. I could consider this and see what might be done. We think very highly of Dr. Jaffe and I regret to lose him.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, I undertook to get some information for the hon. member for Lakeshore. I regret to advise you, sir, I have not yet got that information.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sudbury East.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): A question of the Minister of Education.

Will the Minister explain to the House how it was possible for Mr. F. Costa, a teacher at the George Brown College of Applied Arts, to be dismissed approximately two and a half months after the May 31 deadline, which is contrary to the terms of a standard contract?

And the second part: Why was Mr. Costa not granted a board of reference by the Minister of Education?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the hon. member is aware that under the legislation relating to the colleges of applied arts and technology, the responsibility for the engagement of staff rests with the college and any enquiries, really, should be directed towards the college concerned. Contracts with the staff do not come under the jurisdiction of The Teaching Profession Act, which applies only to teachers in elementary and secondary schools. Therefore the person to whom this contract would apply is not eligible for a board of reference under that particular Act. This Act only applies to the elementary and secondary school teachers.

I am informed, however, in looking into this matter, that an arbitration board has been set up in conjunction with the George Brown College and this board is looking into Mr. Costa's grievance. I am informed that the board is meeting this very day under the chairmanship of Professor Horace Krever and with a representative of the college and an independent member. Mr. Costa previously at least, indicated his willingness to accept the decision of the board as being final.

Mr. Martel: If I might, though; the point I am trying to get at, Mr. Speaker, is that the standard contract says that he cannot be dismissed after May 31 and yet this man was. I would like to know how this is possible.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, as I recall the question, it related to the right to have a board of reference. The board of reference applies to those procedures under The Teaching Profession Act which applies to elementary and secondary school teachers. This teacher was employed by a college of applied arts and technology.

Mr. Martel: I have the contract.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I know, but it does not come under The Teaching Profession Act.

Mr. Martel: Under the contract he cannot be dismissed.

Hon. Mr. Davis: That is what the grievance is about, but it does not come under The Teaching Profession Act.

Mr. Martel: That is a pretty poor situation.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Cochrane South.

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): I have a question of the Minister of Education and University Affairs.

Has any consideration been given to making funds available to graduates of Ontario French secondary schools to enable them to pursue their studies in their own language in another jurisdiction, when no such courses of studies are obtainable in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Yes, Mr. Speaker, the present terms of the Ontario student awards programme make it possible for any student in this province requiring financial assistance to pursue his studies in any Canadian university. This applies to Canada only.

Under the terms of this award, a graduate of an Ontario French-language high school, for instance, could apply for assistance to pursue studies in his own language in another jurisdiction, perhaps Quebec, regardless of whether such courses of study are available in this province or not.

Mr. Ferrier: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Highways.

Has the Minister received an application from the township of Mountjoy requesting The Department of Highways to take over Dalton Road as a secondary highway?

If so, what action does the Minister propose to take and when may the township expect a reply from him?

Hon. Mr. Gomme: Mr. Speaker, a request from the township was received October 17, 1968, and my reply dated November 5, 1968, provided the township with our answer and it is as follows:

Dear Mr. Proulx:

Since receiving your letter of Oct. 17, 1968, I have had the Dalton Road investigated carefully in line with your council's resolution No. 68-203. It has been found that the service characteristics of the road do not warrant its designation as secondary highway. The daily average volumes of traffic over the road are low and typical of desirable township road service. In that regard, it is not unreasonable for the township roads to serve quite high traffic volumes, particularly where most traffic is of a local nature and oriented to an adjacent urban centre such as Timmins. On two occasions, in 1966 and again this year, the road has been appraised through the department of municipal roads division. The recent appraisal discloses some deterioration in the road's physical condition. Any work needed, however, may well be carried out by bylaw under normal subsidy policy. Mr. W. A. Stewart, the district municipal engineer at New Liskeard, will gladly be of assistance in these matters.

Mr. Speaker: Might I ask the hon. leader of the Opposition if he would care to have the member of his caucus place a question, now two days old, to the Minister of Municipal Affairs for the member for Oxford (Mr. Innes), and clear the decks; or does he wish it held? It has to do with noises.

Mr. Nixon: If you will permit, I would like it held until the member is here.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Prime Minister has a statement.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, before we get into the orders of the day, I would like to bring to the attention of all the members of the House that 23 wall decorations and six sculptures have recently been installed in the new complex, on the other side of Queen's Park, in the Macdonald Building and the areas adjacent to it. Its art work was produced by 29 Canadian artists, designers and sculptors who were commissioned at the start of the Queen's Park project to promote a greater appreciation of the work of Canadian artists and to enhance the general architecture of the buildings. Twenty-three of the artists had sculptures commissioned on Ontario residences, and one of the remaining six is an Eskimo sculpture.

The 23 wall decorations are located in key areas where they will add to the attractiveness and interest of the structure's public areas, and enhance the basic utilitarian purposes of the buildings. Each wall decoration is closely related to the architectural environment of the block. But, the artists were given the greatest possible freedom and concept and evaluation.

The various panels consist of painted murals, tapestries, ceramics, sculptured metal, and other contemporary media. The six sculptures are located at strategic locations, including the foyer of the Bay Street entrance, and the courtyard at the centre of Macdonald block. I would hope, Mr. Speaker, that as the duties of the members take them through the buildings, they will take time to view these works. They are excellent examples of contemporary art in a variety of forms.

I might say a few words about the genesis of this particular aspect of the Queen's Park project. Initially there were four leading architectural firms asked to combine their ideas and their experiences to form the associated architects for the Queen's Park project. These firms were Allward and Gouinlock, Gordon Adamson and Associates, Mathers and Haldenby, and Shore, Moffatt and Partners. This group worked closely with the Minister of Public Works, his Deputy and the chief architect.

These buildings are primarily utilitarian. I think that was indicated in the designs, but it was felt by the architect that the decorative panels, works of art and several major pieces of sculpture would add interest to the corridors, to the buildings which of course are used very extensively by the public, and in addition, it would encourage the recognition of the creative abilities of our Canadian artists and craftsmen and would generally enhance the total aesthetic appearance and appeal of these buildings.

In approving these proposals, steps were taken to assure that the works were appropriate—selected for lasting achievements. The associated architects, the four firms, sought the advice and assistance of the Royal Canadian Academy of Arts, and requested it to name an art consultant committee that would advise the government and The Department of Public Works in the choice of the artists who might be commissioned. The committee consists of Cleve Horne, Peter Haworth, and Clare Bice who is president of the Royal Canadian Academy. The committee and the architects first settled on the locations for selected works and then prepared a list of some 700 Canadian artists, whose abilities were felt to merit some consideration. Nearly a year was spent in gathering information, photographs of work already in existence, background qualifications and accomplishments of well-known artists and so on.

A budget of approximately one per cent of the building costs for the commissioned art work was approved—and I would like to say that this is a practice presently quite widely accepted in making public buildings, something more than simply blocks of granite.

Ten sculptors were invited to participate and five of their works sited in the buildings. A sixth major piece of sculpture was added by one Paulosie Kanayook, an Eskimo from Povungnituk, Quebec. He was commissioned to portray a seal hunter with his catch. Ordinarily the Eskimos carve in soft stone, which is referred to as "soapstone", on a relatively small scale. However, he executed this work in black granite and it is on a much larger scale. This particular man has had a very interesting life. He is a well known hunter in his own land, and among his own people. He has been doing Eskimo carving, as they are referred to, since he was 12 years of age.

The wall decorations, there are 23 of them, have been designed to fit in with the general architectural environment of the buildings, as I said, they are in a great variety of media. They have themes characteristic of Ontario's cultural, social and economical life—mines and minerals of northern Ontario portrayed in some, the rural atmosphere of Ontario farms and villages in others, and of course the Stratford festival. I have a list of the various artists involved. I won't take the time of the House to read them, but I do recommend that you find time to view these works. They lend a great deal to the whole atmosphere of these buildings and I think we can all be very pleased with what we have been able to achieve.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The first order; resuming the adjourned debate on the amendment to the amendment to the motion for an address in reply to the speech of the Honourable, the Lieutenant-Governor at the opening of the session.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, when I concluded my remarks the other day, I was making some observations on the broad area of constitutional reform, which of course is a very central theme to the intellectual deliberations of a good many people in this country. In contrast to the Prime Minister of Ontario (Mr. Robarts), I was perhaps so indiscreet as to indicate for the House, four areas of legislative jurisdiction that I felt might be handed over to the federal government. Tonight, in support of those proposals, I point to the recent conversion of the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs (Mr. Rowntree) and make reference to a speech he made, where he belatedly, after a good many people had done so, acknowledged somewhat lukewarm support for the notion of federal jurisdiction over the marketing of securities in Canada.

Of course all these areas surround environments that, one way or another, very profoundly, very deeply affect the lives and well-being of Canadians.

I want to add that for a good many years, perhaps more than a decade and a half—ever since I studied under Bora Laskin, who was then professor of law and an outstanding authority in constitutional law at the University of Toronto—I have regretted that in Canada, there has not been a vehicle provided by governments for public participation in the discussion of constitutional reform. Certainly, the Confederation of Tomorrow conference, however great its success was—and I am one of those that shared the very great enthusiasm for that meeting—surely it did not provide a vehicle for public discussion; nor did the constitutional conference at Ottawa. The Prime Minister of the province has an advisory committee which I believe is called, “the advisory committee on the Constitution,” and it is staffed—perhaps it is not the right word—it has among its membership Canadians who are very distinguished in many important fields in the life of this country, and I gratefully acknowledge having made available to myself the material that is prepared by this advisory committee. I do not share the description that my friend for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Sargent) put upon the material the Prime Minister handed us the other day. I am always grateful to receive it as it gives me the opportunity to study, at my leisure, those things that are said by thinking people and people who are the very nexus of this national problem.

We got, of course, the book which I hold in my hand, which comprises the papers prepared by the advisory committee. I have been heard to say, on previous occasions, that I thought they were written from one point of view, and in some respects, I make so bold as to say, that I do not think Eugene Forsey, in his retreat in Ottawa, now speaks for a good many thinking people in this country with the spirit of deep devotion that he exudes toward monarchical symbols in this country.

It is very appropriate to say that I have personal knowledge that one of the other distinguished members of the advisory committee, Professor John Conway of the department of humanities at York, a year ago this month I believe, delivered to the Prime Minister of Ontario, or whoever else it is that these papers are delivered to, a paper that he had prepared and which I suspect deals with the matter of the continuation of our attachment to historic traditions of the past. I would have hoped that in the year that has gone by the Prime Minister of Ontario would have made that paper available to us, because it is vital from my point of view that we see all points of view. I hope the Prime Minister will, at an early time, publish that paper written by Professor Conway.

I repeat, sir, and you have heard me say it before, that we have the advantage of Professor Conway's view in an excellent article written for Atlantic Monthly, and it is rather curious to note that he has to go outside his own country to write an article in which he subscribes to the notion that we Canadians should soon consider the disestablishment of some of the historic ties that have bound us in the past, from the point of view of establishing our own national integrity. I fervently believe that in Canada there is—

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, if you will permit me: The work that has been published really is the choice of the committee members themselves and it is not controlled by the government. I would like to make that point very clear. When we asked these men to serve and do the work they have done, I made it very clear to them that they would have complete control over the publication of whatever works they might produce.

I do not know whether Professor Conway himself wished this not to be published, but I will check and see. I would like to make it clear that it was not withheld from publication by the government; it was by the committee itself. At the time the committee was set up we felt that these men might want that type of protection so that they could decide themselves what products of their research they wished to be made public.

Mr. Sopha: I thank the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker, through you, for that enlightenment and I hope the committee will see fit. I do not treat myself as a person who is against the monarch in any personal way, I am not against monarchy per se, but I put my views in the light of the belief that in order to reach our fullest development, both materially and spiritually, we must treat ourselves completely as being masters in our own house. We have to build in this country our own traditions, apart from the notion of relying upon the traditions of other people. It is as simple as that.

I, sir, over the years here, have made my voice heard—and not always in such a way as to create a comfortable reception for myself—toward the end that this Legislature itself shall become uncluttered with symbolism and traditions of another age. The Premier speaks of legislative buildings as being blocks of granite; I think the Legislature is something more than the fine paneling and the surroundings of this Chamber. This place ought to be one of the most viable, imaginative and lively places in Ontario, and it ought to be what it is meant to be—a forum for debate.

In that regard I thought the debate yesterday on second reading of the expropriation bill was a very stimulating, imaginative event, and that is how I picture this place. To that end, we do not need to clutter it up with excrescences that do not add to the creation of the climate for debate.

My friend from York South (Mr. Macdonald) leads his troops, like remnants from Napoleon's army, down to Picton—"involving" himself, he says. The hand is the hand of Jacob, but the voice is the voice of Esau, and Esau sits in the second row, he involves himself in the politics of confrontation.

I say to him in reply, the place for confrontation in the political life of Ontario is right here, facing the government on the other side, and it is a mark of irresponsibility to take that confrontation elsewhere outside the House.

I do not want to descend again in any lengthy way to my remarks about the opening of the proceedings here, but I would say to you, sir, with the greatest respect, that instead of indulging in the daily repetition, the droning out of the exhortation to the higher power of wishes for the well-being of a wonderful little family 3,000 miles away—wonderful people, wonderful mother and father, beautiful children—maybe one day a week we might have a little exhortation coming from your lips, and out of our hearts, praying for justice for the 75,000 Indians who seek it in this province. No doubt on other days we could find other worthy objects of making special pleas, but that, to me, sir, is the test of relevance.

The Prime Minister, surrounding himself with constitutional conferences and advisors, and these matters being reserved to politicians, somewhat carries along the same vein.

It is appropriate to refer to this in this context: The other day when he came in here and out of the blue announced that he is thinking about television coming in here, I watched very carefully and listened very carefully to the way he put it.

The first thing that came to his mind about the television cameras was part and parcel of the central place on the stage that the leaders of government give to their thought and opinion in this province. The person who has the highest confidence of the Lieutenant-Governor says we might film the debates on leaders' day—that is the first thing. Then, as an afterthought almost, having got the leaders front and centre stage to the exclusion of everybody else—presumably the cameras would pan up close to them—and then he says we might have a film of some resolution; if, he added, it was a matter of wide public concern—he added the qualification to that one.

If it is going to be relevant to the life of Ontario, and entertainment is part of the life of Ontario, I would suggest to him that he not reserve it to the leaders. We might have a filming of the confrontations that take place between the member for High Park (Mr. Shulman) and the Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Grossman); or when the midnight marauders in the back row over there come in they might pan on them. Who knows, it might develop one of the highest television ratings in the province.

But more seriously, why restrict this to the leaders? Pointing across the way, which is the best place to select, how about the excellent performance of the Provincial Secretary (Mr. Welch) on the last day of the session last year? Could anything be more invigorating than the spirited contribution which he made to the debates of this House; or the very thoughtful analysis that took place over two days of the member for Armourdale (Mr. Carton). Those are two speeches in this House that stand out, which during the summer I took home and reread, especially that of the member for Armourdale, because in contrast to the moss-backs, he is one of the forward thinkers that sit on that side of the House.

I want to turn to this uncluttering that I am speaking about, the atmosphere of this House and making this House relevant to the life of Ontario. Did it ever occur to you, Mr. Speaker, that up there in the galleries—and I have no desire to refer to the galleries presently here today—the only audiences we ever get here are captive audiences, that is all? Who ever wanders in here other than the school children who are told to come here by their teachers? They are brought here by their teachers. That is the only audience we get. Why do people not drop in here? They do not drop in here because there is nothing going on.

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): It is because the member talks too long.

Mr. Sopha: Do they? There is nothing going on to attract them. That is why they do not come in.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Do not press the point!

Mr. Sopha: All right.

Especially as that is so, I have been very disturbed and I want to draw my own personal opinions to your attention, Mr. Speaker, about this question period. It is an ideal item of our business on which to focus to demonstrate the point I want to make.

I want to suggest to you, sir, with the greatest courtesy and respect to your high office, that firstly, I agree with the Prime Minister. I agree, I am very disturbed about the length of that question period. I have not been participating in it of late myself. I think it is far too long, and by its length it denigrates from the quality of the proceedings here. I agree with the Prime Minister that many of the questions that are asked could be answered—the answer could be elicited by picking up the phone and calling the Deputy Minister and getting the information.

But aside from that, and that is not the most important consideration, in no way, as a private member of this House, do I like to see any incidents where the rules of the House by analogy make this place akin to a schoolroom. And that is what a notice question, handed to your office in the morning, is. That is precisely what it is. You are in the same position at five minutes to twelve, or whenever you get those questions, as any school teacher out in one of the schoolrooms in this province. You are marking the papers.

And out there, of course, in the schoolrooms of this province, there is very deep reaction to disciplinary attitudes from the school teachers. I do not digress, except to say that it is interesting to note that the universities and some of the secondary schools of this country are today far more exciting places, intellectually, than the Parliaments of Canada.

But there is a reaction against that type of control. We, sir, come here as the supreme lawmakers of the province and we claim that title over here of being lawmakers. Every major programme that this province has embarked upon, every major one, I think, has been as a result of unanimity of opinion in this House. We are as responsible for those major programmes as is the government. In another sense, we are here as expressions of the sovereign will of the people of Ontario—living expressions of their sovereign will.

We are adults; some of the people in this House are persons of very wide experience, such as the member for York South. I do not select him to butter him up, but he is a person of wide experience in the political life of this province and we expect to be treated like adults. Therefore, sir, I ask: What is the necessity that we should hand you, our Speaker—who, in the opening words of your acceptance of office, identify yourself as the servant of the House—why should we hand you our questions for editing in the morning?

Notice is a requisite, I would think, but I am told that in the Ottawa House notice is given as a matter of form and courtesy; the member desiring to ask a question notifies the Minister in the morning that he intends to ask it.

Then, sir, as to their propriety within the rules, I suggest to you that it would be sufficient for you, from your seat, to rule upon them as they are asked. In some of them, you would not have to rule.

The Minister on the other side, in regard to one category could say, "I do not think this is a matter of urgent public importance", and you are called upon to rule at that point, as the Speaker at Ottawa does. The Minister, in regard to another type of question, could say, "I will take it as notice". And in regard to a third type, he could give the answer, having been notified. But within those three categories does not that, sir, I ask rhetorically, relieve you of the responsibility which you have found to be a very onerous one, which has invited from members of the House some disagreement with your practices in dealing with them? It would shed from your shoulders a responsibility that attracts disagreement. You do not really sit there as a judge; you are not really a judge of that nature.

So I say to you, sir, that when you are considering these matters you might take into account these comments that I have made, and I hope the question period will become thereby, what it ought to be, a very viable period in the life of this House. Where else is the opportunity given to members to make the proceedings of this House contemporary? They can make it as contemporary as today's newspaper because that is the source of their questions, or from the television stations or the other media.

I wanted, because we must take account of the developments in the political life of Ontario, to say, sir, a word about the leadership contest of the NDP from which my friend from York South emerged as victor o'er the dark domain. When I read in the press that his leadership was being challenged with the member for Riverdale (Mr. J. Renwick) as adversary, aided and abetted by the three spoilers from High Park, Beaches-Woodbine (Mr. Brown) and Scarborough West (Mr. Lewis), my mind went back to March 20 last year when, in this House, the member for Scarborough West pledged undying allegiance to his aging chief. Now it is important to put this on the record. We hearken to what the member for Scarborough West said on March 20, 1968. That is barely six months ago:

Our party is no longer a rump group. We will not play the role of clown to the establishment. We will not join in that bi-partisan corruption of self. We are in this fight for the prize. I think one of my colleagues said [actually it was Chairman Mao who said] politics was war without bloodshed, and we so serve notice, amicable notice, gentle notice, friendly notice, but unmistakable notice.

Mr. Speaker, did you notice how long it took him to say "notice"?

Mr. Speaker [said the member for Scarborough West] we are going to achieve the heights of power, I want to say to you, under the leadership of a man who, in the context of what prevailed before, that was the most successful politician in this province in last October's general election.

Now on March 20 he meant, of course, none other than Donald Cameron MacDonald. Such was the open loyalty to the old fellow from Steve the Knife who even then, was the leader of a lark plot to do the old boy in.

Well, they are all true, all true.

Mr. Speaker, I myself last spring warned the member for York South about his dangers. I suggested that to be on the safe side he should equip his bifocals with rear view mirrors so as to be prepared for the attempted coup; but, of course, he did not heed the warning until he got the "Dear Don" letter from Jim. That is how it began. Do you remember? They were sitting upstairs talking and Jim went out of the room, so the newspaper report said, and somebody slid in and handed him the letter that began "Dear Don". What a spectacle! The national president of the party, criss-crossing this province in the private, publicly subsidized airplane of his co-conspirator, the well-heeled member for Beaches-Woodbine. There he was in the best junketing traditions of the Minister of Trade and Development (Mr. Randall) flip-flopping across this province telling the people of Ontario that the most successful politician in the Ontario election of '67 was headed for certain failure in '71, that he was irrelevant and did not even possess the will to win. How is that for party loyalty?

Well, sir, I watched the spectacle on television and what a comic performance it was. If you did not see it, you will scarcely believe me when I tell you that there on the TV screen was none other than our old colleague Ken Bryden, decked out in a turtle-neck sweater, sporting four-inch sideburns and looking every bit like the business agent for the Animals. I almost fainted from shock.

After the vote was taken and Jim went down the political drain, the two contestants embraced and said they did not really mean what they had been saying about each other. Now, what had they been saying? At one point along the way the member for York South called the member for Riverdale "Hitler", and the member for Riverdale called the member for York South "Messiah". I could not figure out which was worse, but I was ready to act for the first one that retained me against the other. But at the end of the convention Jim went to the mike and moved a motion to make it unanimous—meaning, of course, "Macdonald cannot win".

When the show was over, a commercial was flashed on the screen—you have to believe me, this is true—the commercial came on the screen bearing the words "the beautiful put on". I thought that was a most appropriate description. A few moments later the radio version was about to go off the air and the announcer said: "We will now return to normal programming".

Now the member for York South assured his listeners that he could win—he could hardly have done less. An interviewer asked the member for Riverdale if he felt MacDonald could win. He artfully evaded an answer by saying that by the vote the delegates had said that he could. He could hardly have said less. Well, we know the answer; in all seriousness, he cannot; he does not have a ghost of a chance. I venture to predict that in 1970, one wave of Renwicks having been beaten back, the family compact will now throw the female member into it.

Mr. MacDonald: The member is outdoing the member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Sargent) today.

Mr. Sopha: Sir, I thought it was fair to tell it the way it is, but let me just say to my friends from the left. I know my words will be wasted on them, but it is important to get it on the record. Out of all this, and this was an event in the political life of Ontario, let me just say this.

Is it not about time that they faced up to the reality and acknowledged that the real role of this party, the real role in the political life in this province, has been to keep this government in office? One course, and one course alone, has kept the Tory party in power in this province for two decades beyond its time—the CCF, alias the NDP.

In election after election, they have deliberately set out to balk and frustrate the desire of the people of this province for a change in government. Has not the time come, I say to them? It is absolutely clear that they are no longer a party of reform, there is nothing in them akin to the climate of the Regina manifesto of the early thirties—that is the six spoilers; that is where the six spoilers stand. They are the radicals—they stand for reform, but when the old guard beat them off then it is clear that this is a party of compromise which is seeking to appeal to the middle class intellectuals in this province, I say to them, has not the time come to turn from these adolescent ways and to join forces with the only alternative to this faded, jaded—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sopha: I knew that it would be a vain plea but I say to them, finally, has not the time come to recognize—this seems to bother them and I am delighted—has not the time come to recognize that the greatest service they could render the people of this province would be to join forces and take their place in the government headed by this young leader of this party?

Mr. MacDonald: Agnes MacPhail, 30 years ago, gave the answer to that.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Speaker, at this point in my address I want a complete break so that this will show in Hansard as being a departure on another subject.

I turn to the third item of the motion proposed by the leader of the Opposition and I wish to read it into the record:

That this House regrets that the government has neglected the proper development of the northern part of the province of Ontario, and by the lack of a sound policy toward the north and its natural resources, the government has thereby failed to promote the economic well-being and prosperity of all the people of Ontario.

I have entitled this portion of my remarks, "Northward Lies the Path of Progress—a New Approach to the Economic Development of Northern Ontario".

As I rise to speak on this occasion, I am conscious that it was 60 years on June 8 since the first member for the constituency of Sudbury was elected to this assembly. At that time there was a total of nine members representing the 200,000 people in the area I arbitrarily define as Northern Ontario, that is the land mass north and west of the French River and Lake Nipissing. Sixty years later, the 750,000 people are represented by 15 members and I am very proud to be associated in this House with the members representing Rainy River, Kenora, Fort William, Port Arthur, Thunder Bay, Sault Ste. Marie, Algoma, Algoma-Manitoulin, Nickel Belt, Sudbury East, Nipissing, Timiskaming, Cochrane North and Cochrane South. The northern members have one thought in common—a strong conviction of the neglect of the area.

Much has happened in 60 years and I begin my remarks by saying that among the three-quarters of a million inhabitants whom the 15 of us represent there are many who have a real and anxious apprehension about the future of the north. That apprehension cannot be expressed more forcefully than it was on Sunday, September 24, 1967.

On that day, Alexander Carter, bishop of the diocese of Sault Ste. Marie, presided at the official opening of the University of Sudbury. The magnificent edifice which he dedicated was a fitting monument to the efforts of those of the Jesuit Order who came to the Sudbury area three-quarters of a century ago and all those priests who followed in their footsteps and who struggled to provide the opportunities that education can afford. To many of the several hundred assembled for the occasion of paying tribute to accomplishment as well as to dedicate the building for future endeavour, the bishop's words as he delivered them were not calculated to leave his listeners in a state of equanimity or to give further reason for complacency. On the contrary, he spoke in terms of gloom about the past and he provoked a sense of challenge for the future life of Northern Ontario. Let me quote part of what he said:

Our professors and our students are called to give this part of northern Ontario a leadership which it badly needs. One of the reasons, if you would like to know why I worked so hard to help to found this university in northern Ontario, is that I was not here too long before I realized that we had a desperate and a critical lack of leadership, and that lack of leadership still exists and is going to exist for a long time. This community in northern Ontario needs leadership because this community is one of the neglected areas of Canada. For a place which has the immense riches which it has given to our country and to the United States and to the world, the immense riches taken out of our ground, we have received very little in return. And if we have received very little in return, it is because we did not have the leaders. And, therefore, the young people that go through our university and the professors who come to work in our universities, must supply this leadership and must supply it from within our community and as part of that community.

These are words of challenge. They point to the deficiency of the past and they call for what is in reality the only solution to the difficulties that beset northern Ontario. One of the listeners on September 24 was a Minister of the Crown in the right of Ontario and sat for a northern Ontario constituency. Probably he did not realize the full significance of what he heard. Twenty-four days later, he was defeated at the polls.

I define the area called northern Ontario to be all of that part of Ontario north and west of the French River and Lake Nipissing and easterly to the Ottawa; that is to say, the districts of Nipissing, Timiskaming, Cochrane, Sudbury, Algoma, Manitoulin, Thunder Bay, Rainy River, Kenora and Patricia, ten in number. These represent almost four-fifths of the land mass of Ontario, or 317,586 square miles.

The naked fact is that in the 25 years of power this government has abandoned northern Ontario. Put another way it has not developed the resources of the area to provide the optimum living standard for the inhabitants; rather this government has stood idly by and has allowed the resources to be enveloped by foreigners.

Instead of development we have suffered envelopment, mainly by the United States which in large part has used up its own resources and has for many years looked covetously at ours. One has only to read the Paley Report, commissioned by the President of the United States in 1951, in order to conclude that northern Ontario is far more important to the U.S. than was the Oregon Territory in 1867.

In mute testimony to what I say, I point to the fact that there is not in northern Ontario a single industry of any size, other than a steel mill which utilizes the ores from the mines in the production of finished products. Indeed, short of this stage, to a large extent the refining of the ores, and particularly of base metals, takes place elsewhere.

In recent convention the heads of local government in northern Ontario bewailed the fact that gasoline and beer prices are higher in northern Ontario. They are. But the problem is far deeper and more complex than this manifestation of price discrimination.

In sum, the problem is nothing less than the rational use of the treasure-house of riches in the raw state toward the development of a mature and sophisticated economy capable of sustaining in productive work and adequate living style many more hundreds of thousands of people than now live in the ten districts. These remarks have the sole purpose of seeking to chart the way toward intelligent utilization of the land and its resources in the best way possible for our own people in this province as a whole and for many, many more whom it would profit us, both spiritually and materially, to settle in the broad reaches of northern Ontario.

The way to do it is difficult; the problems are many, the problems we encounter are complex but nothing should deter us from making a new beginning and in the current phrase, with perseverance "we shall overcome".

It is necessary to look at what has happened in order to appreciate the magnitude of the challenge before us. In particular, we must examine the philosophy or the rationale upon which the present economy of northern Ontario has been built. It is easy to see the result of the philosophy and that result is subsumed in the oft-repeated phrase which describes us as "hewers of wood and drawers of water". This has been our fate.

It is reflected in a basically simple economy, wherein the workers are engaged in the production of raw materials which in turn are carted away to be turned into manufactured goods elsewhere by other people, and largely this takes place in other countries. Here is the besetting sin in all of its stark reality. We have simply failed to plan for or to develop anything resembling a sophisticated economy in our northland.

The evidence to support this statement is best seen by being resident in the north and, with sadness for what might have been by the time two-thirds of this century had passed by, seeing our resources carted away to provide jobs and wealth elsewhere. It might have been otherwise if the national policy, the great contribution to Canadian nationhood and development invented and commenced by Macdonald and carried on by Laurier, in the opening up of the West, had not come to an end about 1930.

The logical extension of the national policy would have been the creation of native industry to utilize the raw materials with which a beneficent providence has so richly endowed us. The use of our natural resources to the fullest extent by and for Canadians first has plagued thoughtful politicians who cared deeply for Canada throughout our history. Possibly Laurier saw the potentiality when he uttered his famous phrase, "the 20th century belongs to Canada".

Well, it doesn't. Canada has not by a long way reached its full potential and it must sadly be said that the failure lies with ourselves. It is neither an exaggeration nor is it unfair criticism to level the major criticism at the Conservative government that has held the reins of office for 25 years last August. By the constitutional arrangement solemnized in 1867, the natural resources of Ontario were vested in the province. It was never a question of lack of sovereignty but was always a failure to exercise the sovereignty the province unquestionably has.

History will be the judge of this government which for 25 years has sat idly by and presided over a system whereby the wealth is ripped out of the Laurentian treasurehouse and hauled away to the United States. The more percipient of Americans must laugh at the difference of opinion which persistently preoccupies public discussion in Canada as to whether Canadian interests are to be looked after first.

The Americans have built a great nation. In fact they have built the most powerful nation in the world and they have done so primarily by looking after their own interests first. They have never hesitated to see that their own interests were protected and Canada should do exactly the same thing. The only way in which Canada will ever become a great nation is by seeing that we look after Canada first. We do not do that. In fact, we do the reverse.

We obligingly give the people of the United States a chance to build industries, to provide employment and unfortunately, to attract our young Canadians to the United States to take up employment we help to create there.

In a very real sense brains follow the resources. In its most glaring manifestation the taking away of our raw materials is not merely the result of a passive attitude on our part. We help the Americans to do it. In the earliest development of the Steep Rock iron venture, several millions of dollars of public moneys were spent in the construction of a dock at the Lakehead for the purpose of the shipment of iron ore to Pittsburgh and Cleveland. For every man employed in mining ore at Atikokan, how many jobs, I ask, are created in the fabrication of steel in the northern United States? It was no act of altruism which prompted the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, an arm of the United States government, to invest $5 million in the early development of Steep Rock Iron Mines.

There are the dimensions of the edifices of neglect of this government and of governments before it. But governments, when all is said, are merely reflections, even in a democracy, of what Toynbee calls "the dominant minority". Profound influence has been exercised upon governments by the power centres of the business community. Generally speaking, the financial and business community has been satisfied that Ontario remain a raw material producing economy. Indeed, the hon. D. D. Abbott, in 1947, as Minister of Finance, said that the production of raw materials was our proper role.

Could any more tangible evidence for such a proposition be summoned than the spasm which shook the country when the time came to build the section of the Trans-Canada Pipe Line across the Laurentian Shield in northern Ontario? Funds from private and classical sources of the investment industry were simply not available. Government had to fill the gap and, as with the CPR in 1874, a government fell in 1957 because of involvement of government where private enterprise, if sufficiently daring, ought to have been involved to the hilt. As a footnote to delineate the placid and obliging nature of Canadians, though the northern Ontario section of the pipeline became vested in the government as owner, it was resold to Trans-Canada Pipe Lines at little more than cost rather than as a "going concern," thereby representing a subsidy by the Canadian people to Texas millionaires. Let it be a measure of pride to Canadians that everything big that was ever built in Canada was built by the people collectively through government. There are no edifices of large magnitude to so-called "free enterprise" in this country.

Every once in a while the present Premier of Ontario makes a speech somewhere wherein he calls for a return to the national policy. He always moulds his phrases in terms of safe generality. He never mentions a project which would be a projection of the national policy. But after making a speech along these lines to the Canadian Association of Manufacturers at home, he departs for Los Angeles where he vigorously promotes the sale to foreigners of more of Ontario. I have contemplated that Americans must often be bewildered when dealing with us that we lack any of the hallmarks of the native Yankee shrewdness in business. Americans must be utterly confused when dealing with us, that having desperately tried to determine what we stand for, they reluctantly come to the conclusion in the face of uncontrovertible evidence that in the realm of the use of our resources in our own best interests we don't stand for anything.

We would fill the vacuum if we determined that our aims are truly Canadian, based upon a clear Canadian identity which would crystallize of necessity into a new consciousness of what we are and what we stand for. I say to the Premier, through you Mr. Speaker, that he would make better use of his energies and be more loyal to his responsibilities if instead of these peregrinations to California, he required Texas Gulf Sulphur to show cause why it should not for good economic reasons build its smelter at Timmins, telling them at the same time that it is the policy of his government, in the interests of the people of Timmins, to maintain that town as a viable community.

I am convinced that those who have the ear of government in this country, that is to say, those who make the major financial and economic decisions, do not realize the depth of feeling for this country and its future among its people. An Englishman visiting us the last two days, spoke of it in terms of

"an eagerness for Canada." I think that is a wonderful phrase to sum up the apparent feeling among the people of this country, for their country.

Historians will point to this period as a time of doubt among ourselves about our future as a nation, when the Canadian people were fraught with anxieties and stresses. If the very structure of our national life is threatened, then I suggest that one of the major reasons is the failure of the politicians to give some meaning in tangible ways to the potentiality of our resources, human and material.

In this century politicians have all but forgotten the artificiality with which this country was created by men of vision and determination like Macdonald. Simply but truthfully put, this country was created by running the ribbon of steel to its farthest western extremity. Laurier put the flesh on the superstructure thus created by opening up the west to the flood of immigration. Nothing testifies to the failure of 20th century politicians more than the fact that northern Ontario today has a mere 750,000 inhabitants.

The development of northern Ontario can only be seen in the context of the development of Canada as a whole. I make so bold as to suggest that if the government of this province would adopt the proposal I am going to outline later in my remarks, then the banner province would create a chain reaction across this country to reactivate in a meaningful way the yearning of the people of Canada as a whole. What I propose will be far different from the empty rhetoric of 1958 which caught the Canadian people up in a reaction to the potentiality of this country and then let them down with the dreadful realization that it was all campaign oratory.

As a boy I was taught the difference between Canadians and Americans. There are many. Most Canadians value the differences. Continentalists like the Minister of Trade and Development emphasize the similarities. He would do well to contemplate the significance of the remark made by that great Conservative Prime Minister, Sir Robert Borden, when he said: "We must decide whether a spirit of Canadianism or of continentalism is to prevail on the northern half of this continent." To understand what is happening in this country, the rape of its resources must be seen in the concept that to a large extent the Annexation Manifesto of 1849 is a living document to important sections of the financial and business community.

From time to time, politicians of deep conviction have expressed themselves in words which denote the true meaning of Canada. I call upon two of them in support. J. H. Harris, the father of a young man of ability who used to sit in this House, said in the House of Commons in 1949:

But for the sake of what development there will be, let us, in the interests of the prestige of the House of Commons, not be in too great a hurry to give away the resources we have. . . . Let us stop, think and consider what the natural resources are which we have in our hands and what we are going to do with them in the future, not for the use of this day and generation but for those of the generations which are to come.

In the same year that old warrior, T. L. Church, said this:

A country does not belong to those who inherit it today. It is an inheritance from the past. It is just a possession for the present. It is a trust for the future. Natural resources are trusts for the future. This generation has no right to give them away in the haphazard manner in which we are doing at the present time.

There is no industrial nation in the world whose residents own less of their country than Canadians. There is no western democracy which exercises less restraint on the use of its resources than Canada. There is no country with large amounts of capital representing the savings of its people where the collectors of those savings show less willingness to invest in equity and risk ventures than in Canada. When I directed a query to the president of Investors Syndicate in reference to the shifting of large amounts of capital into American securities, he said in reply that the major reason for buying American securities was that there were very few sound Canadian ones available. Besides being an indictment of our financial community, that statement demonstrates the vicious circle into which our economy has drifted.

The major reason for the lack of suitable investment opportunities in Ontario lies at the feet of this government. It has neither propounded any sort of credible philosophy for the development of the treasure-house of riches, nor has it given the required leadership which would infuse confidence among the timid in the financial sector. Since the end of the national policy about 1930 we, as Canadians, have lacked a sense of destiny. Perhaps a people who lack a sense of destiny have no destiny.

The time has come to take a closer look at northern Ontario. Nowhere is the neglect of development more cogently illustrated than in a study of the population statistics in the ten districts during this century. I set out the figures for population in northern Ontario for this century according to the official censuses: Population of northern Ontario—1901: 99,918; 1911: 218,380; 1921: 266,900; 1931: 360,108; 1941: 456,011; 1951: 536,394; 1956: 628,107; 1961: 722,174; 1966: 739,712.

Certain facts become immediately apparent from these figures and a comparison with certain others. In this century the population of Ontario grew from 2,182,947 in 1901 to 6,960,870 in 1966, an increase of 4,777,903, and in the same period what comprises four fifths of the land mass of Ontario increased only 639,794.

Or let us look at the period which roughly comprises the life of this government. In 1941 the population of Ontario stood at 3,787,655. In the next 25 years it grew to 6,960,870. In the same period the population of the north grew from 456,011 to 739,712. The percentage increase for the whole of Ontario is roughly 84 per cent and for northern Ontario it is 67 per cent—far behind. The average annual growth of population in Ontario in the 25-year period defined has been 2.6 per cent, whereas in northern Ontario it has been 2 per cent even, again well below the average.

Confirmation of the failure of population growth in the north to keep pace with that in southern Ontario is more starkly revealed when one studies certain of the districts. In the three districts of the northwest, i.e., Kenora, Rainy River and Thunder Bay, the population in 25 years has increased a mere 85,780. Of this, the district of Thunder Bay, including the twin cities of Port Arthur and Fort William accounts for 58,473, and those two cities alone account for 41,537 of the increase. In 25 years the population of Rainy River has increased a mere 6,684 souls, but in the five years, from 1961 to 1966, Rainy River declined in population by 715 people. Kenora is little better off. Its growth rate in 25 years is far less than half the Ontario average, and in the five years, 1961 to 1966, it increased by only 2,521. Consider the vast expanse of territory in this district and contemplate the congestion in Metropolitan Toronto. One is entitled to wonder aloud whether, among all those Italian people who appear to want to come and settle in Ontario, and who make good citizens, it would not be better to take 50,000 of them and assist them to settle in agriculture in Kenora and Rainy river districts instead of trying to shove them into mid-town Toronto. This gloomy lack of growth is repeated elsewhere in northern Ontario. The total population of two other districts in addition to Rainy River have, in fact, declined. I set out the figures for Manitoulin and Timiskaming for this century: Manitoulin—1901: 11,828; 1911: 11,324; 1921: 10,468; 1931: 10,774; 1941: 10,841; 1951: 11,214; 1961: 11,176; 1966: 10,544.

So Manitoulin Island actually has less people now than at the beginning of the century. This makes it unique in Ontario. During the period there has been a marked decline in agricultural production on an island where this used to be a thriving industry. In addition the harvesting of pulpwood is no longer seriously encouraged and a few years ago the Ontario Paper Co. abandoned its limits on the island. During the same period Manitoulin Island has been changed largely through the efforts of The Department of Lands and Forests into a tourist and recreation area.

There is no doubt that this is a valuable industry. However, its enhancement is not conducive to either the development of resources or to the fostering of an increased population. For myself I am concerned about the maximum utilization of our resources to achieve the true destiny of northern Ontario and accordingly I have no interest in seeing it turned into a second Switzerland. It ought to be added that the policy of this government in encouraging recreational use is not only short-sighted but it reneges from the challenge of hard work and ingenuity that economic development on a rational basis entails.

I turn to the district of Timiskaming and I set out the appropriate census figures for this century: 1901: 1,252; 1911: 26,592; 1921: 26,657; 1931: 37,043; 1941: 50,604; 1951: 50,016; 1956: 50,264; 1961: 50,971; 1966: 47,154.

In the 25-year period, 1941 to 1966, the population of Timiskaming declined by 3,450. This does not say much for the Ontario Northland Railway, which was formerly the Timiskaming and Northern Ontario Railway, and was built in the first decade of the century as a "development road". Timiskaming is a prime example of the folly of the policy of tolerating dependency on raw-material-producing industries, and the total abdication of responsibility by government of encouraging alternative employment opportunities. Not only is the policy attended by the irrational use of resources but it points to wanton disregard for the day when those resources are either used up or are no longer economically attractive. And there is etched the sad story of the decline of the district of Timiskaming. Once one of the richest mining areas of the world, once an important lumbering area, it presents a sorry picture of decay and disillusionment. Currently the Ontario Northland Railway is engaged in an obliging way in carting away a rich deposit of iron ore to Cleveland to subsidize industry there and create employment for Americans. It takes less effort and imagination to order things that way.

To return to the matter of decline in population in the three districts of Rainy River, Manitoulin and Timiskaming, it is apparent that this situation is a reflection of the policy of this government that the great bulk of the population is going to live in sprawling urban areas adjacent to Lake Ontario and Lake Erie. What a waste of the great open reaches of this province! The failure in 25 years to do anything meaningful toward making life in northern Ontario attractive to larger numbers of people compels one to the irresistible conclusion that the philosophy of the Conservative Party means that the government has constituted a barrier to development rather than a bridge toward the maximum attainment of the true potential of the northern part of the province.

All of us in this House are aware that the most important resource of the province is people. I am not unmindful of the fact that in order to attract people to live in northern Ontario the totality of the environment must be made attractive. We do not do things in the way the Russians do in shipping large numbers of people to a dismal and demanding environment in Siberia. Moving or remaining in a given location is a matter of voluntary choice and that is a necessary adjunct of the democratic way.

I pointed out earlier that the average annual rate of growth of population in Ontario as a whole during the period 1941 to 1966 was 2.6 per cent per year. Now let us look in comprehensive fashion at the percentage rates of growth in the ten districts for the period. (See Appendix, Table A, page 421).

The figures for the decade, 1951 to 1961, are a reflection of province-wide burgeoning population throughout Ontario during the high point of immigration to Canada. But observe what has happened in the last five years of the period, 1961 to 1966. In those five years the average rate of growth for Ontario as a whole was 2.2 per cent a year, yet the closest of the districts are Sudbury and Kenora where the growth averages one per cent or less than half the average growth for Ontario. This does not mean only that northern Ontario is failing to keep up in expansion of population. It is in fact falling behind. The statistics for population in the years 1961-1966 show a startling and depressing migration out of northeastern Ontario. In the six districts of Algoma, Cochrane, Manitoulin, Nipissing, Sudbury and Timiskaming, in 1961 the population stood at 505,651. In the following five years there was a natural increase of 52,278—natural increase is the excess of births over deaths—but in 1966 the population at 516,228 showed a surplus of only 10,577, which meant that of the natural increase of 53,278, some 41,701 migrated out of the area. No doubt the greatest proportion of these were young people who move because there is little to attract them to plant their roots in the place of their birth.

If we recognize that the natural resources are the life blood of this province then this presents a situation which is perilous in its implications for the population which will be resident in the southern part of the province. In other words, in terms of simple economics, it is in the interest of the inhabitants of southern Ontario to have a strong and healthy economy in the northern part.

When one looks at the labour force statistics one realizes that three of the districts are in better shape in terms of numbers employed and increased employment opportunities than the other six. I deal with the 25 years, 1941 to 1966. (See Appendix, Table B, page 421).

The three districts with the largest urban areas accounted for 60 per cent of the labour force in 1966. They are Thunder Bay, Algoma and Sudbury.

Finally, I want to say a word about these urban areas. There are four cities in northern Ontario — North Bay, Sudbury, Sault Ste. Marie and Fort William-Port Arthur. Logically, the latter two must be viewed as one city. Little distortion occurs in a study of them if we disregard amalgamations and annexation of their metropolitan adjuncts.

Here are the relative figures for the 25-year period:

Now the figures for each city, Mr. Speaker, will be 1941, 1951, 1956, 1961, 1966; and I am glad to report these are the last statistics that I shall read.

Mr. Peacock: Could they not work them into the text?

Mr. Sopha: No, I asked Hansard and they declined.

It is to be seen that North Bay has had a very modest increase. Sudbury and Sault Ste. Marie have doubled and that because of amalgamations and annexations. The most encouraging expansion has been at the Lakehead where it represents native growth, and the projected annexations under discussion currently will add only a few thousand people.

The total population of northern Ontario stood at 739,712, and of these numbers 279,665 lived in these four urban centres, or 38 per cent. When one considers the many towns and townships dotted across northern Ontario then one gets a true picture that as in southern Ontario life is largely urban in setting. But the fact that there exist in the north a mere four cities in itself is itself testimony corroborating the failure to stimulate native sophisticated industrial ventures which utilize the raw products of our mines and our forests.

All of the leading economists in the modern age of the industrial revolution have stressed the pre-eminent importance of capital in economic growth. I now turn to the role of capital in the development of the north. But first I wish to sketch in the background against which I put my remarks.

The way in which I invite this House to view the area which I have defined as northern Ontario is to see it as a young giant with a very immature economy. In other words, it is rather like many of the developing young nations of the world. In the proposal that I shall make ultimately, I approach the problem as if I were dealing with an emerging nation and was postulating a plan for its development. Two remarks in this connection are very germane.

Firstly, unlike most of the under-developed nations, northern Ontario is endowed with a system of stable political institutions, provincial, municipal, administrative and judicial. Therefore, in planning the intelligent development of the area, we are neither distracted nor vexed by the everlasting series of problems which political instability leaves in its wake and which absorb both attention and effort leaving vitiated the approach to economic matters.

Secondly, I remind the House that long before we saw and heard the manifestations of separatism in Quebec in the last decade there were stirrings of unrest of a similar nature in the north. For as long as I can remember, some 30 years, and probably much before that, individuals and groups in northern Ontario have advocated the secession of northern Ontario from the southern part of the province. What else can such suggestions be than a symptom of protest correlated to maltreatment and neglect economically and socially?

The only solace, if it be such, that these persistent complaints have ever elicited are the worn-out phrases used by generations of politicians from southern Ontario in making their periodic peregrinations into northern Ontario telling the inhabitants what an industrious people they are and what a great future they have.

Leslie Frost employed this technique, as an artist approaches his easel, to a lesser extent the present Premier indulges himself in it. What I am saying is that the time has come to throw all those speeches in the wastebasket and have done with them once and for all.

Now the time has not come—without referring to the very recent visit of the Minister of Energy and Resources Management, which I think was only last week, to North Bay. He made one of the types of speeches to which I have referred, but in this one he hectored his audience with remarks about—“dissemination of gloom and doom”, I think it was. He treated them in a rather pusillanimous—that is a nice word—way, and said that they should be given the old football coach speech, they should dispel the gloom and doom that attends so many people in the north.

And here I want to read into the record the reaction of television station CFCH in North Bay, this is the editorial comment they made about his speech.

Someone, somewhere along the line, got the idea that politicians were both good after dinner speakers and boxoffice attractions. Some are, but many simply are not.

Yet they continue to be invited to all sorts of events all over the country. The chamber of commerce in this town got stunned last night, and if they learned nothing else they should know now that it is advisable to work through several other possibilities before settling for just any politician as an after-dinner speaker.

J. R. Simonett, Ontario's Minister of Energy and Resources Management, was the guest speaker at the chamber's annual meeting last night. He inflicted the dullest, the most irrelevant and uninspiring speech on the assembled crowd, most of whom paid $4 a head for the affair.

His speech was an insult to the intelligence of the people of this area. Most people here probably know that North Bay is located at the intersections of Highways 17 and 11, but Mr. Simonett found it necessary to tell us that, plus many other equally well known facts; plus some other things that he or his speechwriter got from the wrong book.

Such as North Bay is home to two major publishing houses. If Mr. Simonett brings the same talent to his job as Energy and Resources Management Minister of this province, we are in rough shape—

An hon. member: They once gave the Treasurer a nice reception up there too.

Mr. Sopha: That is the end of the quote.

Well since that interpolation occurred, I was going to refer to it earlier, he got his at the hands of one of the chief Tories in the area.

There is a very good man, and let it be said about John Cram that he is working very intensively, with great vigour, toward the development of that portion of northern Ontario represented by my friend from Timiskaming (Mr. Jackson). I wish we had 20 or 30 more like him.

Now the time has come, I am saying, to substitute action for empty rhetoric, and to do something concrete and positive to get started on a programme which will see, if it be economically feasible, the creation of a sophisticated industrial economy in the north which will employ the natural resources of the area in productive use.

I have in my hand a volume entitled “Northeastern Ontario Region Economic Survey 1966,” prepared by the then Ontario Department of Economics and Development. It is hardly worthy of the name, but it is worthy of a Minister whose eyes naturally look southward and who never, in anything I have ever heard him say, indicates that he has any depth of feeling for Canada or its future. I suspect that he feels very much at home in New York, Chicago or Los Angeles.

The authors of this work encountered no difficulty in getting their conclusions about the area—that is Nipissing, Sudbury, Algoma, Manitoulin, Timiskaming and Cochrane—all on one page. The last line is calculated to make the most complacent among us uncomfortable, the timid uneasy, and those with a sense of the destiny of Canada discouraged.

I go out of my way to remind my colleagues that we are talking about the "Treasure Chest of Canada." That's what the authors call it in the introduction of this survey. Now here is the last sentence of the conclusion:

It is anticipated that intensive development of these resources, both in the field and factory, will continue and that the tourist industry will expand as the region is opened up with the building of new roads.

My chief complaint about that statement is of course that if there was anything in the way of understanding of the potential of the use of the resources, the "Switzerland syndrome" would scarcely be noticed. The implication of the statement is one of inhibition against disturbance of the natural state of things. If, as I fervently believe, the future of Ontario lies in the north, then realization of the potential will inevitably involve a great deal of disturbance and alteration of the state of nature.

Now to return to the matter of capital investment. There is probably no other single factor which has plagued and inhibited the growth of northern Ontario more than the lack of capital. No evidence is required to be summoned to support the contention that the mining industry alone has generated huge amounts of capital in the form of profits and dividends. Since the turn of the century, mining companies in northern Ontario have produced some $20 billion worth of minerals and have paid out more than $2.75 billion in dividends.

Of course, there has been substantial reinvestment in plant and expansion of mining operations in the area, but I add the qualification that this has been directed to the increased production of raw materials. Apart from profits from raw material-producing enterprises, large amounts of capital are generated from the wages and salaries paid to the inhabitants. These savings come to reside largely in the hands of the classical financial institutions—banks, trust companies and the insurance companies. These savings, experience has shown, take the form of capital leakages.

In order to approach intelligently the problem of development, a great deal needs to be known about capital flows into and out of northern Ontario. The study should include private and government capital flows. Information about government capital flows is relatively easy to come by it is hoped. Insofar as private capital flows are concerned this poses a very knotty problem. It is very difficult to come by any meaningful statistics which would reveal the magnitude of capital flows.

One thing is certain however. Capital does not find its way into the development of native industry utilizing the raw materials produced in the north. One is supported in the view that capital is not available to any entrepreneurial enterprise, by the persistence of complaints by small business operators of a shortage of capital. To this may be added the continual pleas by tourist operators to the government to make available capital to them, which points to what has been a chronic lack of availability of capital from classical private sources.

The significance of this particular aspect of the economy is that if there is a strong leakage of savings out of northern Ontario then any increase in income will have a very limited effect. For myself I have never been convinced by the almost liturgical repetition of the statement that Canada and Canadians lack capital to purchase equity in their own industries and thereby development must involve the sale of equity to foreigners. I want to interpolate, Mr. Speaker, to wonder whether anyone else has noticed that a country like China—Red China—which is capable of pouring a billion dollars a year into this country—into Canada, in the purchase of our wheat—is a country that manages to spend that amount of savings without branch plants. It has not got branch plants in it. Chinese industry is owned by the Chinese.

Now then, what is the necessity, since we consider ourselves a much more sophisticated economy, and indeed we are, than Red China? What is the necessity then, by way of parallel to the dependence on branch plants?

The Premier of the province, I am moved to say, got terribly offended at the notion of placing the appellation of branch plant on the provinces by Ottawa the other day. Did he not, right here? And yet the same man treats branch plants as a term of opprobium. He made a journey to California and made this speech to a respectable group there in which he advocated that they establish more branch plants in Ontario.

Now where does his ambivalence towards the words "branch plant" come from? Those are the two thoughts that I wanted to interpolate.

If we think in terms of Communist China, we might get out of this branch plant syndrome in which we have become enslaved in this country.

Mr. Sopha: Insofar as private capital growth is concerned, this poses a very knotty problem. It is very difficult to come by any meaningful statistics which would reveal the magnitude of capital flows. One thing is certain however. Capital does not find its way into the development of native industry utilizing the raw materials produced in the north. One is supported in the view that capital is not available to any entrepreneurial enterprise by the persistence of complaints by small business operators of a shortage of capital.

For my own part, it is not the shortage of capital that plagues us, it is the injudicious use of the capital we have. For example, it is said that per capita investment in life insurance by Canadians is nearly, if not the highest in the world. Yet when one examines the annual statement of insurance companies, they reveal with great consistency that these corporate giants invest only a very insignificant proportion of their portfolios in equity securities.

It is impossible to come by statistics as to how much in life insurance premiums is collected in northern Ontario. Inquiry among those in the industry would enable one to place a conservative estimate of something of the order of $25 million per year. Very little of this money comes back to northern Ontario, and then only in relatively modest investment in realty mortgages.

I look for support for my complaint to a recent study of the housing problem in Sudbury prepared for the Chamber of Commerce. Note how the authors refer to lack of capital in the financing of house construction:

The major metropolitan areas of the country have been found to be the best areas for investment by financial institutions. The economy of these areas is established on a broad base covering all types of manufacturing and commerce. In addition, because of the large volume of business, the funds of the financial institutions can be administered more economically. Sudbury, on the other hand, is still basically a mining area. The economy of the area is affected immediately by any change in policy by the mining companies.

However, to point to a specific example of the capital leakage, look at the group insurance premiums paid by employees of International Nickel to Aetna Life Insurance Co. of New York. One does not know where these end up, but it is not in northern Ontario. To the extent that they are reinvested in the United States, then, workers in Sudbury are subsidizing the American economy. Which naturally leads me to reflect that when one considers the Croesus-like wealth that Sudbury has produced, it is sad to observe that this wealth is reflected in the erection of tall buildings elsewhere.

Sudbury ought to be, in its physical accoutrements one of the most appealing cities in Canada. It is one of the ugliest—but even that ugliness has a beauty to the permanent resident. Sudburians take a great pride in their city—they have a sense of identification with it. They realize that when the outsider comes in and hurls epithets of abuse about the physical appearance; they know that, to the extent they may be justified, it is merely pouring salt into the initial wound inflicted whereby Sudbury's production of wealth has gone elsewhere to provide the aggrandizement of other places.

Part of what I have called the injudicious use of our capital is, I am sure, correlated with ignorance of investment opportunities. Wherever one goes one encounters an abysmal lack of knowledge about the characteristics of the north. This ignorance has for half a century been the subject of jocular communication among residents. What others think and believe about us is almost a cultural configuration in the north.

On the other hand, this government has been dreadfully deficient in this area in that it has neglected its responsibility to disseminate intelligent and factual information about the north. I am one who refuses to be convinced that the problem of development in any backward area, where you have a stable political system, is one of shortage of capital. The owners of capital are guided by motivations of self interest and the desire to make a profit. Before investment will take place, potential investors must be apprised of what the actual situation is and of the opportunity for profit.

It is in this area that those who advocate a minimum of state interference with the working of the economy would accord that the state should strive to the utmost to make the business and financial community aware of opportunities for investment. This means more dynamic action than that subsumed in putting advertisements in Toronto newspapers enquiring, "Have you thought about northern Ontario?"

In the light of the proposal which I shall make later, I can say at this point that much more vigorous action is required on the part of government to acquaint itself with the characteristics, needs and opportunities of this area. However, I am prepared to go much further in my advocacy of state intervention in the economy.

At no time since the dawn of the Industrial Revolution has the prevailing philosophy of economic thought ever advocated a complete "hands off" policy with regard to activity of the state. The age of the Industrial Revolution is now all but ended and we have entered the collectivist age. Most western countries in the contemporary world exercise far more control over their economics than do jurisdictions in Canada.

When we examine the role of the provincial government, we are faced with the basic fact that the province has sovereignty over the natural resources of the province. If those resources are not to be used in the fabrication of finished or semi-finished products within our province, or at the very least within Canada, then this fate amounts to an abdication of the responsibility of government. Government participation in the process of production may take one of two broad forms:

1. It can encourage and stimulate private enterprise, strengthen the operation of free markets and supplement and correct them when they are too weak or inadequate to produce the desired results, or
2. It can seek to control or eliminate private enterprise and to restrain or replace free markets.

The government of Ontario has done the second in such areas as the production of electricity and with alcoholic beverages. A liberal, so far as it is efficacious, must prefer the first alternative. In that area a great deal can be done and still leave plenty of room for the manoeuvrability of private enterprise. The point is and we should finally conclude, after seven decades of experience, that without vigorous encouragement private enterprise is not going to alter its way of doing things in the "Treasure Chest of Canada" and without government stimulus any change in the order of things to which we have become accustomed is not going to occur.

I can merely report that in northern Ontario there is a large measure of resentment against the activity of private enterprise in ripping the wealth out of the ground and mowing it down in the forests and carting it away to create much greater wealth elsewhere. There are many, many earnest and idealistic people in that part of Ontario who consider carefully and dispassionately the possibilities and potentialities of the north, and they find it difficult to restrain their eagerness to get going toward the fulfillment of the destiny of the north. I recognize that the forces which control the market place are powerful, but if they are harnessed in the interests of society by means of appropriate fiscal and economic policies and other instruments of government action, then it must and will follow that meaningful contributions can be made to economic growth and development of northern Ontario.

An intelligent approach to the development of northern Ontario must proceed in recognition of the lessons of experience learned from the haphazard and pragmatic development of southern Ontario. The great forests that once covered the southern part have long ago vanished and in many areas they were succeeded by farms that have, over the intervening years, been only marginally successful. Small settlements of long ago have grown into large cities, and in some cases have become megalopoli, where many problems now of gigantic proportion may well become practically insoluble, such as the disposal of wastes. We see an expanding megalopolis which now stretches from Niagara to Port Hope, where industry places irresistible pressures on valuable land. Transportation of large numbers of people rapidly poses very vexing problems difficult of solution. I wonder in passing whether the confinement of large proportions of our population in urban centres is a fate that they really deserve from the sociological and psychological aspects.

To put the matter in another way, I reiterate that which I have said many times in this House, that the future of this province, as well as this country, lies in the north. If Canada, and this province as an integral part of Canada, is to achieve its destiny, then it will be achieved in the north. We are too much inclined to forget that we are a nation of the north. We are one of the few industrialized nations of the world which still has a frontier, and the concept of the frontier is a meaningful one to Canadians. If only those of us who live in the north could get the thinking of this government oriented toward the frontier which beckons.

These are hardly the empty phrases of political controversy, when they come from one who witnessed an election campaign in very recent years in Kenora where the government candidate sought endorsement on a platform which was hypercritical of the policies of neglect by his own party. Indeed, during the last general election, in my own campaign, the Conservative candidate roundly condemned his own party for a lack of attention to the needs of Sudbury in particular and northern Ontario in general. I say to the government in the strongest possible terms that there is a deeply ingrained feeling among the inhabitants of northern Ontario that time is wasting and the task of developing the full potential of the area awaits forthright and determined policies based upon economic feasibility.

At this point it may be useful to say a little more about the characteristics of the region known as northern Ontario. Speaking generally, it may be divided according to its predominant geographical features. A large part is encompassed in the Canadian Laurentian Shield, rich in ores and minerals with fairly extensive areas of soil captive within it of varying depth. In the far north are the Hudson and James Bay lowlands, shading in the eastern part into the Great Clay Belt which bends southerly and extensively to the northern end of Lake Timiskaming. Generally speaking, the whole of the area is recognized to have similar and closely related social and economic, as well as resource, industrial and local development problems.

The area lends itself readily to regional sub-areas encompassing the need to solve more intimate problems on a smaller scale. What is wanting, however, is a statement in comprehensive terms of the peculiar needs for its development and thereafter a truly effective and feasible long-term northern plan. I emphasize the word "northern" because I reject out of hand as being unsuitable to the Canadian character, history and experience, the quiet assimilation of Canada's distinctive northern character that must come in the wake of the growth of the urban megalopoli. Beyond that we see in the southern part of the province the heavy cost we pay in using good agricultural land by industry.

There was during the last years of the 19th century and in the first two decades of the 20th century a clearly defined policy of government under the leadership of Laurier which had the pronounced end of filling up with people the broad empty open reaches of this country. For the last half century we have derogated from the policy and we have arrived at a situation where haphazard and pragmatic growth has resulted in more than 70 per cent of Canadians living within 100 miles of the American border. There are other dimensions to the problem. By geography, northern Ontario has a natural role to play in the east-west context of this country. It is the land bridge between the east and the west. With its scant population distributed over large distances, it does not play its most effective role in providing a strongly balanced and continuous line of east-west development. Baldly stated, one sees here a substantial and permanent loss to Canada's economy.

Therefore, at this point I turn to the task of making a specific definitive proposal for the development of the northern part of this province. I say in parentheses that many thoughtful and concerned people have put forward proposals for development in the past. I believe that there is nothing in what I am now going to advocate which in any way seriously conflicts with any other scheme or proposal.

I come now to the very core of my proposal. I am about to suggest an imaginative new approach to the development of the north—the area which comprises four fifths of the land mass of Ontario. As I do so, I know that my words will fall upon willing and ready ears in the north for there thoughtful people have for many years felt cheated of destiny as they helplessly watched the wealth of the resources being plundered with no care for whatever legacy would follow in the wake of their depletion.

If the plan needs a theme, who can put it better than a Canadian who has a great love for the land that is Canada, Bruce Hutchinson, when he said in "The Unknown Country":

My country has not found itself, nor felt its power, nor earned its true place. It is all visions and doubts and dreams. . . . We have not yet grasped . . . the full substance of it in our hands, nor grasped its size and shape. We have not yet felt the full pulse of its heart, the flex of its muscles, the pattern of its mind. . . . But now our time is come and we are ready.

I make not a call to consensus but a call to conscience. A merciful providence has endowed us with bountiful riches in this the northern half of the North American continent. With the riches goes a moral responsibility. Normally we are obliged to use our resources providently for the optimum benefit of our own people and at the same time we are obliged, as citizens of the world, to share them equitably and justly with the peoples of less fortunate lands.

To the end of those meaningful and noble objectives, I now propose that a major study be conducted in the most intelligent manner of which man is capable, of the character, people, resources and potentialities of northern Ontario. I suggest that the study should be headed by an economist from one of the Scandinavian countries. The similarity of geography, geology and resources commends such a person from the point of view of background, training and experience. Scandinavia, like ourselves, is of the north and its problems resulting from the superimposition of social and economic configurations upon a northern environment have a similarity in their climatological and geographic features. Most important of all, such a person would bring to the task the qualities of objectivity and non-involvement with vested interest and pressure groups within our own province. No doubt there are many Scandinavians who possess the highly developed qualities of learning, insight and experience necessary. Such a person is Gunnar Myrdal, who has achieved world-wide fame in the field of economics and indeed the related discipline of sociology. I do not need to catalogue his achievements here. They are too well known. He has conducted important researches on behalf of the government of the United States and the United Nations. I, of course, have no way of knowing whether Mr. Myrdal is available for the task but doubtless there are many in the same tradition of competence. I have selected Scandinavia as the most suitable area of background for the chief investigator. If this is considered unsuitable, I mention the name of Dr. W. R. Mead, of the University of London, a distinguished geographer. He specializes in the study of the social geography of the Scandinavian countries. The ideal situation would be a combination of the two men, Myrdal and Mead.

I do not, of course, insist upon any self-proclaimed right to name the persons to conduct the investigation and chart the plan for development. I would be completely satisfied with any person of demonstrated competence who was chosen on the basis of non-involvement with any of the major interest groups. The investigation, I feel, must bring to the task independence and objectivity. Before embarking on the task of setting out the areas, matters and things which I feel ought to be studied, I wish to submit that the chairman or joint chairman have available a staff of persons of ability in the following fields: geography, geology, economics, psychology, sociology, demography, political science, mineralogy, chemistry and physics, soil science, forestry, agronomy, hydraulic engineering, transportation engineering, marketing, and such other disciplines as the chairman might wish to call upon. Bearing in mind the problems to be solved, I would think the above disciplines are a minimum necessity.

It is necessary to note at this point that I am not suggesting that any inquiry into the physical, natural, sociological or environmental features of Ontario is either going to be complete or to produce ready-made solutions to all problems in a short space of time. What I do say is that no matter what length of time is required for a comprehensive, intelligent plan for development within reasonable limits, a start must be made somewhere and now is the time of beginning. This will be a continuing enterprise and no doubt will have to be turned out in phases. The important warning to be issued is that if the suggestion that an intelligent approach be made to the use of our resources in the treasure chest of Canada be ignored, it would involve considerable peril to the future of life in this province. I suggest that the following areas be studied:

Resources — A complete inventory should be made of the natural resources of northern Ontario — mining, forestry, agriculture and water. Further, the potential of increasing resources in all of these categories should be studied. To this end a complete study of the Laurentian Shield should be completed, including surveys with scientific equipment.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): We have six of them going now.

Mr. Sopha: That is no answer.

Mr. MacDonald: Certainly what you are suggesting is no answer.

Mr. Sopha: Well, I take the responsibility and in my stance I do not want to get way-laid; what I am doing here is far more responsible than the remarks made by my friend about a possible revolt by the Indians in this province, which of course is complete nonsense. This is far more responsible.

Mr. MacDonald: They may be revolting after some of the member's comments last spring. After sober second thoughts he withdrew them.

Mr. Sopha: The trouble is the member does not know Indians; he does not know them, he has no contact with them.

Mr. MacDonald: The member did not, until he talked it over with somebody.

Mr. Sopha: I acted for six Indian bands and still act for them. I do not mind this digression, I still act for six Indian bands. I just recently defended one for manslaughter at the Gore Bay assizes, a treaty Indian.

People — A great many basic facts need to be gathered together about the present population of northern Ontario, including statistics about their ages, health, income, distribution over the area, and migration, both within the area and in and out of it. I am speaking here only about the basic vital facts about the people at this point. No doubt much of the work has been done in this area but the figures need to be gathered together in comprehensive form. Full reliance should be placed upon a sociological survey, as well as a demographic one. In particular there ought to be separate and independent studies of the sociological character and the economic role of the relatively large native Indian population.

Economic feasibility studies — This is a very broad subject and is the very core of my proposal. It is not enough to know what the resources are. We must go much further and determine within the framework of prevailing and anticipated economic considerations whether the exploitation of resources is or will be practicable. Simply put, the matter of location of an ore body, to use an illustration, is not sufficient because for one reason or another it may be uneconomic to exploit it. No doubt many feasibility studies have already been done by private interests. These particular sources ought to be tapped and the way this would be done could be determined by the terms of reference of the inquiry I propose.

Potential of the use of resources within northern Ontario — Here is the ultimate end of the whole exercise. We want to know both to what extent and in what manner the native resources of the region can be utilized in a sophisticated way in the manufacture or production of finished products within northern Ontario. Put negatively, if it is not practical to build another heavy steel industry in northern Ontario, then let us find out once and for all. Such a finding based upon sound economic principles would put an end to a great deal of rhetoric. On the other hand, I would like to know the outlook for a tubing mill, a wire drawing factory, the manufacture of finished wood products and many other finished products made from the raw materials produced in the north.

Agriculture — I have already referred to the taking up of valuable agricultural land in southern Ontario in industrial development. Then what is the potentiality for a large agricultural industry in northern Ontario? I am mindful of the fact that there are large areas of agricultural soil in the clay belt and in northwestern Ontario. From this base, many questions arise which need to be answered. Is the climate favourable? What is the prospect of the development of faster growing species? What is the future of pasturing of cattle in the large areas available? Surely, as more and more arable land goes out of production in southern Ontario, for reasons of space requirements, we ought to determine whether northern Ontario can be the site for this essential industry. These and many other questions about the potentiality of agriculture need to be answered.

Transportation — Here we meet a very broad and complex area where much investigation is required. I have never been convinced that lack of transportation facilities, road or rail, or discriminatory freight rates are the root of all evil for northern Ontario. A great deal has been said about this by a great many people. It is fundamental from my point of view that an intensive survey be made, both of the present facilities in all types of transportation, road, rail and air, in order to determine whether they meet present and anticipated needs in connection with every other aspect of the inquiry. Rate-making procedures ought to be examined. The policy and schedules of the publicly owned airline ought to be inquired into. One of the most oft repeated grievances one hears from politicians at all levels of government about northern Ontario is related to the matter of access roads. The study I propose would have as one of its ends the determination of the most suitable network of roads opening up virgin territory for the most productive uses by all aspects of the new economy and with particular reference to the tourist industry.

Capital for development — A great deal needs to be learned about the configuration of capital flows into and out of northern Ontario. Of the utmost importance is the assessment of the quantities of capital that may provide a source of funds. For development of our northern hinterland to have a distinctively Canadian flavour, we need to know the capabilities of our own people in the provision of the funds both from classical private sources and from governments, the collective agency for the participation of the body politic.

Structure of industry—Even to refer to the organization of industry from the structural aspect is to enter a highly controversial and sensitive area. For my own part I hold to the view that the Canadian people will have to decide eventually whether industry is to conduct itself in accordance with the common good and the best interest of the people as a whole. Further than that, industry will play the essential role in the future development of the resources of the area. If we hope to build the economy of northern Ontario to a considerable extent on the use of natural resources, then we need to know the present structure of the industries producing raw materials. The investigators must necessarily gather information in respect of present pricing policies and agreements, tacit or overt, concerning the organization of production, and the allocation of markets. To say these things is to allude to the world of reality in which decisions concerning the lives and welfare of the people are most frequently made in remote and inaccessible places. Very frequently these major decisions, some of them more permeating, pervasive and influential than government decree, are made outside Canada.

It is apparent that any decisions government may make, or actions it might take, are likely to be largely ineffective if their success depends upon decisions taken in the head offices of the major producers. It would be small comfort also, and the efficacy of action would be much diluted, if we should embark on a large-scale production of finished or semi-finished products in northern Ontario, and the increased revenues were channelled out of the region to be used in other parts of the world. To be specific I relate that I am one who has been rendered very uncomfortable when I see large amounts of the profits from the exploitation of our mineral resources in the Sudbury basin being used to finance exploration development in Nicaragua, Honduras, Guatemala and Indonesia. There are many other implications, sociological, political and economic, which stem from the structure of industry, which need to be studied.

Water resources—One of the greatest benefits which a beneficent providence has bestowed upon northern Ontario is the abundance of fresh, pure and potable water lying in and draining from the area. An integral part of the study would involve the making of an inventory of the water resources of the region. A great deal of research is necessary before serious engineering alterations can begin to shed light upon the effects, upon ecology of major changes in drainage patterns. We must at all costs avoid serious and irreparable damage to the natural order of things that major changes might involve. The study applied in this area must, of course, attempt to assess the effect of the necessity of disposal of industrial wastes. It is fundamental that an intelligent allocation of water resources be proposed between industrial needs and retention of the present character as the foundation of the tourist industry and recreational use.

Living costs—This is a relatively straightforward part of the study. It entails an examination of the comparative living costs with other areas and a determination of the factors which contribute to what is supposed to be a higher cost of living in northern Ontario. If this is a fact then it is in a sense a penalty imposed for living in the area. Many of the differentials could possibly be reduced if the reason for their existence was known. To a large extent higher wages and salaries can compensate for higher living costs but there is a limit even here to what can be done. It may be that an enquiry in this area would provide data upon which the provision of other amenities would dissipate the disability of higher cost of living to a large extent.

Environmental factors—It is idle either to suggest or to believe that people in very great numbers will change their place of abode except for very compelling reasons. I have said and I firmly believe that the concept of Canada as a country of the north is in danger of being lost. If Canada is to fulfill her destiny, I re-emphasize that it will be realized in the north. This country, with its wide open northern spaces cries out for the most important human resource—people. The north must, if my plan is to be attended with success, be rendered, as far as it is possible, an attractive place to live. There are many natural amenities which people would find agreeable. Beyond this the age of science can transform the environment in many ways to make it acceptable and accommodating to human beings. Perhaps the experience of other countries can be studied and their methods borrowed. One must appreciate that as the resources on the southern fringe of the Laurentian Shield are used up we are going to have to reach farther north. The time to begin the study of how environmental problems are to be handled is in the present.

I have outlined the major areas of investigation. The things the study is going to tell us will not make us comfortable. Maybe we have become too comfortable—possibly the “comfortable pew” is a national syndrome and the national whine about the ineffectual use of our resources has become a conditioned reflex. While we sit passively by, south of the border the moving force is the continual use of our resources. There are powerful continentalist forces within Canada and the study I propose will generate many antagonisms because it will disturb patterns of economic activity which have become convenient and profitable. Anti-Americanism is not a basis for the programme I propose, for it is at once sterile and negative.

Yet the saving factors for the worth of my study are incontrovertible, irresistible and constructive in their implications and objectives. If we recognize the prime role of government to be the creation of wealth and its equitable distribution in the fields of health, education and welfare, then at a time when the government of this province is engaged in a frenzied search for dollars to finance the programmes it has undertaken, what source, I ask, is more likely to be rewarding to the Treasury than the great wealth which can be created by the utilization of our own resources? Put another way, if we do not generate wealth in this country then we are going to have less and less to distribute.

Lastly, I want to make the point that the research I am suggesting is of value whether it is related to short-term goals or long-term objectives. Too often research in the field of economics is abandoned because the benefits are felt to be remote. Such an attitude is self-defeating, for the day arrives sooner than anticipated when the knowledge and insight which research can provide is wanted immediately. Policies can be determined only after adequate research. In fact, facts precede policies.

Nor am I asking that the study become so sophisticated that it be unintelligible. Too often in the age of the knowledge explosion, to give an impression that an area of study is imbued with complexity becomes an end in itself. What I am striving to do is to bring a new rhythm to our approach to the north. That rhythm should be based upon our universal belief, even faith in its potential. Then we should superimpose a real determination to plan for and proceed with practical steps to make a new and vital approach to the development of four-fifths of the land area of this province. All that is needed are three human qualities—commitment, direction and focus. Either we will be merely a footnote to history or a vital part of it—the choice is ours.

There will be little disagreement in this House that northern Ontario, with its rich mineral resources, its vast water and power sources, its extensive forests and its uncultivated farm lands is indeed the untapped treasure house of our province. It is only a few years ago that a Conservative Prime Minister unfolded a “Roads to Resources” plan. Has not the time arrived for this government to unfold an “Industry to Resources” programme? Has not the time come to put an end to the policy of digging Canada up, cutting Canada down and shipping Canada off to a foreign land for processing? For make no mistake about it, if we continue to be satisfied with a donkey economy we shall end up with a greatly accelerated loss of our best brains.

Here we are in Ontario at the end of 1968 spending hundreds of millions of taxpayers’ dollars on institutions of higher learning with the result that hundreds of the scientists and engineers who graduate from them cross the border and in many cases secure lucrative employment in industries which process the raw material dug from the earth of northern Ontario.

Let me repeat what I said at the outset of these remarks. Our problem today is not American investment. It is for us in this House to determine the next stage of our economic and industrial development. It is for us to set the goals and then say to the foreign investor: “This is what we propose to do and you are welcome to invest your capital in our enterprise and ‘whosoever will, may come’.” But make no mistake about it, these things are not going to happen by divine intervention. The building of the CPR, the opening of the west, the cultivation of the prairie, the development of vast power projects, were not acts of God. These were human undertakings by men of faith and vision, commitment and foresight, men who added a new dimension to Canada’s development. And so I say to the Prime Minister of Ontario, who ranks second to none in his Canadianism: Are you ready to follow in the train of Macdonald, Cartier and Laurier? Are you prepared to accept the challenge that northward lies the path of progress?

If so, I urge you to accept my proposal for the launching of a great comprehensive study under the direction of the best minds we can employ in order that we may find a way to add a new dimension to the development of our province. If you are willing to follow the course I have put forward today, you will be taking the first substantial step toward the development of a new national policy for Canada. You have the unquestioned right, you have the unquestioned power and the unquestioned responsibility to do so.

In the far-off places of the world, in Africa, and in Asia, people with far less technical knowledge, far less endowed with natural resources and with far less experience and financial means, are undertaking the task of building new nations. Why should we be satisfied with a lesser destiny? As I take my seat I commend to the Prime Minister these words: "Some people see things as they are and ask why; I see things as they never were and I ask why not?"

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Mr. Speaker, I would like, in the remarks that I propose to make in this debate, to deal initially with the individual tragic case of a man who deserves consideration by the government to relieve him of the plight in which he finds himself at this time.

This is not a new case. Because it is not a new case, I am going to put it on the record completely so that we can draw the attention of the government to the urgent need for an ameliorative change in the hospital care programme of the province.

The case deals with the plight that Mr. William R. Boulter and his wife Ruth find themselves in because of her chronic illness. I refer briefly to the fact that on March 1, 1967, at my request my colleague, the member for Scarborough West (Mr. Lewis), on page 1061 of Hansard, dealt with Mr. Boulter's case. Again on July 23 of this year, I dealt (in the closing remarks for this party) with the case of Mr. Boulter and that reference is on page 6189 of the Hansard ending in 1968.

Mr. Boulter is 59 years of age; his wife is about the same age. His assets consist of the equity which he has in his home property, amounting to, probably, in the neighbourhood of $12,000; his household goods and no other assets; nor has his wife any other assets. He is employed by Western Tire and Auto Supply Co. and has a gross pay of $110 per week, a take-home pay of about $91 per week.

I propose to put on the record correspondence which I believe to be almost complete in this case.

The point of the case refers to the regulations published under The Public Hospitals Act. It is regulation 523 in the revised regulations of Ontario, as amended by regulation 102 of the year 1966, made on April 5, 1966, and filed on April 13, 1966. I mention the amendment only because of completeness and not because it affects the substance of the problem with which Mr. Boulter is faced.

That section makes the distinction, in two definitions, between a person who is called "chronically ill" and a person who requires custodial care. The definition of a chronically ill person appears in paragraph (e) of section 1 of that regulation and is defined to mean a person who, in the opinion of a medical practitioner, has reached the apparent limit of his recovery or has a chronic illness or other condition of a long-term nature and—I emphasize these words—"requires continued medical and skilled nursing care in a chronic unit or a hospital for chronically ill patients."

The definition in paragraph (h) of section 1 of that regulation deals with a person who requires custodial care. That is defined as meaning the personal care, assistance and protection required by a person who has reached the apparent limit of his recovery and whose condition is such that such care is necessary, but who does not require continued medical and skilled nursing care in a hospital. The custodial person, to finish the definition off in paragraph (i) means a person who, in the opinion of a medical practitioner, requires custodial care.

Just to be perfectly clear, Mr. Speaker, the distinction between whether or not you are a custodial person or a chronically ill person depends solely upon the question whether or not you require medical and skilled nursing care in a hospital. If you do, you continue to be covered under the Ontario Hospital Insurance scheme; if you are chronically ill but do not require that care, you are not entitled to be covered under the Ontario Hospital Insurance scheme.

Mr. Boulter wrote to the member for Etobicoke (Mr. Braithwaite) on June 18, 1965. It was the second letter which he wrote, but it is sufficient to start the chronology of the matters that I want to put on the record. It is a letter dated June 18, 1965, from Mr. William R. Boulter to Mr. Leonard A. Braithwaite:

Dear Sir:

Some years ago my wife underwent an operation for cancer and although the operation arrested the cancer, she came out of it completely paralyzed. She was admitted to Our Lady of Mercy Hospital four years ago and I have been contributing to her stay there through the Ontario Hospital plan and our group insurance where I am employed.

I have been recently advised that soon Mrs. Boulter must be discharged from Our Lady of Mercy and more recently that her benefits under the Ontario Hospital plan expire on July 31.

For a short time, she has been placed in the rehabilitation ward. Now that ward has reported to the Hospital board that nothing further can be done to improve her condition. Upon the apparent recommendation of Drs. O'Hara and Cranfield to the board, it has been their decision that she is able to be cared for at home.

My wife is still completely paralyzed on her right side, cannot stand nor attempt to walk without support from some person, cannot even use toilet facilities without considerable help. She certainly can't receive attention at home that she would get in a hospital. I haven't the means to place her in a private hospital. If the hospital board's decision is not countermanded and if I have to bring her home, it will simply mean that I will have to leave my employment to take care of her. In a very short time, we will both be on welfare.

I would appreciate it if you would bring this to the attention of the Minister of Health. I would gladly meet with the Minister to discuss this trouble fully if he would grant an appointment.

I anticipate your assistance, sir, and I am sure you will give me all the help you can and for this I thank you in advance.

And the member for Etobicoke wrote to the Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) on June 22, 1965:

Dear Sir:

On May 11, 1965, I wrote to you in connection with Mrs. Ruth Boulter. To date no reply has been received. I received the enclosed letter from Mr. W. R. Boulter yesterday and felt that in view of the urgency of the matter, I should forward it directly to you.

An early reply would be appreciated.

And on July 12 the member for Etobicoke wrote to Mr. Boulter:

Dear Mr. Boulter:

Please find enclosed herewith a copy of letter received from the Ontario Hospital

Services Commission, which is self-explanatory.

We will be in contact with you as developments occur.

That letter was from John B. Nielson, who at that time was chairman of the Ontario Hospital Services Commission, dated July 9, 1965, to Mr. Leonard A. Braithwaite:

Dear Mr. Braithwaite:

On June 22, 1965, you wrote to Dr. M. B. Dymond, Minister of Health, about Mrs. Ruth Boulter, a patient in Our Lady of Mercy Hospital.

Our records show that Mrs. Boulter has had approval for continued hospital care as a Commission responsibility to 31 July, 1965. This approval was given on the advice of Dr. J. B. O'Hara, chief of the medical staff of the hospital, who stated in April, 1965, that he wished to retain Mrs. Boulter in hospital for an intensive course of physiotherapy with the hope that she might improve physically in a sufficient degree to go home or be cared for outside of hospital.

We have had no further advice from Dr. O'Hara about the progress of his patient, but we presume that if the patient has failed to progress an extension of her hospital stay will be requested. We have no confirmation of the statement Mr. Boulter made to you that Mrs. Boulter must be discharged from hospital.

I think you recognize that any action on our part depends on the reports we receive from a hospital patient's physician and in this instance we do not have a recent report but anticipate receiving one before July 31, 1965.

Mr. Boulter then replied to the hon. member on August 5, 1965:

Dear Mr. Braithwaite:

Further to my letter of June 18, and Mr. John B. Nielson's reply of July 9, 1965, Mrs. Warrington, social worker of Our Lady of Mercy Hospital, who stated that she was acting upon instructions from Dr. O'Hara, advised me that I must take my wife out of the hospital by July 31. When I arrived at the hospital last Saturday my wife was dressed, her personal things packed, sitting in a wheel chair.

There was not a nurse or a hospital employee anywhere to be seen and Mrs. Boulter has yet to be officially discharged.

I have had to take a week's leave of absence without pay to care for my wife this week. Several efforts to contact Mrs. Fox of the Red Cross to arrange for a homemaker have been unsuccessful. Even the past few days have convinced me more than ever that Mrs. Boulter needs care that cannot be given at home and that no practical nurse could cope with her condition.

I cannot afford to take any more time off from work and could not possibly afford a registered nursing service. I would welcome a visit to my home from a representative of Dr. Nielson's office to see for himself the situation in which I have been placed because of Dr. O'Hara's decision.

Thank you for your efforts on my behalf. I look gratefully to your further assistance.

On August 17, the member for Etobicoke wrote to Mr. William Boulter:

Dear Mr. Boulter:

Please find enclosed herewith copy of letter received today from the chairman of the Ontario Hospital Services Commission. You will note that not only was Mrs. Boulter supposed to have been eager to come home, but also the authorities state that they are satisfied that she could get along reasonably well at home and that she has been trained in the hospital to look after a great many of her personal needs, including the preparation of food. I also note that arrangements were made for a homemaker to visit at regular intervals.

In view of the foregoing I do not know if there is too much else that I can do that would help at this time. However, I would appreciate hearing from you in writing if the foregoing is not correct, or if there are matters which have arisen which were not contemplated by the authorities when Mrs. Boulter was released.

The letter to which the hon. member referred was dated August 13, 1965, from John B. Nielsen, who was then the chairman of the Ontario Hospital Services Commission:

Dear Mr. Braithwaite:

I am writing in reply to your letter of August 5, 1965, regarding Mrs. Boulter.

On July 21, 1965, we received a report on Mrs. Boulter from the hospital. In this report, Dr. O'Hara gave us his opinion that Mrs. Boulter could be cared for at home and accordingly he listed her for discharge from hospital with the result that she was sent home, as Mr. Boulter has indicated to you, on July 31.

We have tried to get in touch with Dr. O'Hara but he will be away for a period of about two weeks. In the meantime we have to assume that Dr. O'Hara has acted in the best interests of the patient and, with his experience and professional judgment, we feel we have to support his position. We do not feel that we should send anybody to Mrs. Boulter's home as suggested by him, but we will speak to Dr. O'Hara about the whole matter on his return from vacation, but without any assurance that any change in the present position will be proposed or considered.

It may be that you have a considerable amount of personal knowledge about the circumstances surrounding Mrs. Boulter, but in the event that you are not fully informed about the whole matter, I would suggest that you might possibly talk to Mrs. Warrington, who is the social service worker at Our Lady of Mercy hospital who could tell you more about the whole situation.

I had a rather lengthy telephone conversation with her today from which I gathered that Mrs. Boulter has been eager to go home although she has been confined to a wheel chair, but her husband has consistently stated that she cannot be cared for at home.

I understand that the authorities at the hospital were quite satisfied that Mrs. Boulter could get along reasonably well at home and that she had been trained in the hospital to look after quite a few of her personal needs, including the preparation of food.

Mrs. Warrington also informed me that she had spoken to Mrs. Cook, who is a welfare worker in the Township of Etobicoke, and she had made arrangements to have a homemaker visit the home at regular intervals to give some additional help.

I think in the light of the information which has reached me, the best decision has been made here regarding Mrs. Boulter, even though the decision is evidently unpalatable and unacceptable to Mr. Boulter. If you wish, I will be in touch with you after we have talked to Dr. O'Hara in the next couple of weeks.

Well, sufficient to say at that point, Mr. Speaker, that Mrs. Boulter, having spent two or three weeks at home, was then admitted to the Riverdale Hospital for chronically ill persons and the problem then disappeared for the better part of a year.

On May 10, 1966, however, about one year later, Mr. Boulter received the following letter from the executive director of the Riverdale Hospital, George McCracken:

Dear Mr. Boulter:

I am advised by the doctor in charge of your wife's case that she no longer requires care or treatment in hospital. Under these circumstances benefits under the Ontario Hospital Services Commission will terminate shortly. Should your wife remain in this hospital beyond the termination date of her insurance benefit, there will be a daily charge of $16.40, payable in advance.

Please advise Mrs. Harrison, of our social service department, what arrangements you will be making for your wife's discharge from this hospital.

On May 20, Mr. Boulter wrote again to the member for Etobicoke:

Dear Sir:

Some years ago my wife underwent an operation for cancer and although the operation arrested the cancer she came out of it completely paralyzed. She was admitted to Our Lady of Mercy Hospital five years ago and I contributed to her stay there through the Ontario hospital plan and the group insurance plan of my former employer.

Last June I was advised by that hospital that as my wife's benefits under the Ontario hospital plan were due to expire on July 31, 1965, and as nothing further could be done for her in their rehabilitation ward, I was to take her out of the hospital on that date, upon the apparent recommendation of Drs. Cranfield and O'Hara, of that hospital, to the Ontario Hospital Services Commission, it was their decision that she was able to be cared for at home.

My wife is completely paralyzed on her right side, cannot stand, nor attempt to walk without the support of some person, cannot use toilet facilities without considerable help; she certainly cannot receive attention at home that she would get in a hospital.

I had to bring my wife home, taking time off work without pay to attend to her. Then within a few days I was fortunate to have her placed in Riverdale Hospital where she has been a patient to this date. I recently received a letter from the Riverdale Hospital dated May 10, a copy of which is enclosed, advising me that the benefits under the Ontario hospital services were about to expire and I must arrange for discharge.

So once again I am back on a merry-go-round. I have not got the means to place her in a private hospital. If I have to bring her home it will simply mean that I have to give up my job to stay home to take care of her; then it will be only a short time before I will have to apply for welfare for both of us. In all sincerity let me assure you that I am not using the hospital as a means of evading my responsibilities. If I had any intentions along these lines I could have done as so many people have done, disappeared; then who would take care of my wife?

Surely there is something that could be done to establish her in a hospital or institution where she can receive the proper care so that I can continue my work and life without being subject to worry each year.

I would appreciate it if you would bring this to the attention of the Minister of Health. I would gladly meet with the Minister to discuss this trouble fully, if he would grant an appointment. I appreciate your assistance, sir, and I am sure you will give all the help you can.

For this I thank you in advance.

And the member for Etobicoke wrote on May 31, 1966 to Mr. John B. Neilson, the then chairman of the Ontario Hospital Services Commission:

Dear Sir:

Please find enclosed herewith, copy of a letter received recently at this office from Mr. W. R. Boulter, 254 Albion Road, Rexdale, in connection with his wife Ruth.

Enclosed also is a copy of a letter received by Mr. Boulter from the Riverdale Hospital. As you will note from Mr. Boulter's letter of May 20, 1966, he finds it impossible to give Mrs. Boulter the home care she requires. Further, he does not have the money to put her into a private home.

I would appreciate it if you would be good enough to look into the matter to see if suitable hospital accommodation can be secured by Mr. Boulter for his wife.

May I hear from you at your earliest convenience.

On June 16, 1966, Doctor R. S. Peat, the senior consultant, hospital care standards division of the Ontario Hospital Services Commission, wrote to the hon. member:

Dear Mr. Braithwaite:

The chairman of the Ontario Hospital Services Commission, Mr. S. W. Martin, has referred your letter of May 31, 1966, to me for attention.

I have made enquiries into this case and discussed the matter with the physician at Riverdale Hospital, Mrs. Harris, of the social service department of Riverdale Hospital, Mrs. Cook, social worker for Etobicoke Township, and the administrator of Our Lady of Mercy Hospital. I have also talked with Mr. Boulter by telephone. From these people, I have gained some insight into the problem.

Mrs. Boulter, who is now about 55 years of age, is a registered nurse, a graduate of St. Michael's Hospital.

In 1961, following surgery, she suffered a right-sided paralysis involving both the arm and leg. Although there was considerable recovery she has been left with extensive disability from the paralysis. It is the remaining disability rather than any illness which makes care necessary at this time.

She cannot stand or walk, wash, dress herself, use the toilet or get in or out of bed without at least one person to help her. Her speech has recovered quite well and her mental impairment has also recovered so that her memory is good.

There has been some improvement during the past year at Riverdale so that while she formerly required two people to assist her, she can now walk with one person helping her. She has a pleasant personality and from all reports, was an excellent and enthusiastic worker. She did much extra voluntary work during the war. Everyone concerned has indicated that she is a most deserving person.

Mrs. Boulter was a patient in Our Lady of Mercy Hospital from July 1, 1961, to the summer of 1965, when she was discharged with the understanding that she did not require further hospital care.

Mr. Boulter took leave from his employment without pay to care for her and then obtained a homemaker for the day-time. After a three-week interval at home, she was re-admitted to Riverdale Hospital. The physicians at the hospital have assessed her condition and have decided that she does not require the facilities of a hospital but requires only custodial type of care, either in her own home or in a non-hospital type of facility.

The type of care which Mrs. Boulter requires is not provided under the Hospital Insurance Plan. Mr. Boulter was advised of this by the hospital in a letter dated May 10, 1966.

I am sure that Mr. Boulter appreciates that the physicians are required, by law, to discharge patients when they no longer require hospital care and when the patient has received maximum benefit from the hospital treatment programme. Thought has been given to nursing home care or care in the homes for the aged, especially one of the charitable institutions. Concern has been expressed about the cost of nursing care for this patient, or alternatively, the cost of homemaker service.

Mr. Boulter has a full-time job and probably may not qualify for welfare assistance under present regulations. Yet his income is understood to be inadequate to meet the nursing home costs on a continuing basis and to maintain his home at the same time.

It is understood that Mrs. Boulter is anxious to be home. It would seem to me that she would not likely choose to be placed in a nursing home if it can be avoided.

Although she is disabled, she is not sick. She has a home and a husband and it would seem to me that every consideration should be given to the possibility of adjusting the home to fit the disability and adapting it for the use of a wheel chair.

This might involve the construction of a ramp, the widening of doorways, perhaps the installation of a special toilet. I merely mention these possibilities for I have not seen the home.

Thought might be given to special gadgets which might increase her independence. Perhaps someone might be found who herself needs a home and could be present during the day or even live in.

We fully appreciate the magnitude of the problem, since this patient will require care on a continuous basis for no further recovery can be anticipated. Much time, effort and thought is required to work out the most suitable plan for this type of care.

While the insurance benefits have been extended to July 31, 1966, it is most important that plans for the continued care of this patient be made as early as possible in anticipation of the patient's discharge from hospital. Because of the nature of this case, the hospital has endeavoured to give more than the usual advance notice of the patient's discharge. Difficulties may result if the planning is delayed until the patient is actually discharged or the insurance benefits terminated.

Mrs. Cook, social worker in Etobicoke township, has an interest in this case and will give every assistance possible to Mr. and Mrs. Boulter in the development of some satisfactory plan for her continuing care.

I could not say at this time what arrangements will be made or whether any financial assistance can be arranged by welfare or other organizations.

Yours truly,
R. S. Peat

A copy of that letter, Mr. Speaker, went to the Minister of Health and to the chairman of the Ontario Hospital Services Commission.

The member for Etobicoke then wrote on June 23 to Mr. Boulter:

Dear Mr. Boulter:

Please find enclosed herewith a copy of letter received recently. You can see from the letter that you are being made to appear to be the person who does not want your wife home whereas she is very eager to get home. In view of the letter and its contents, if you still feel that you will be unable to look after your wife if she is sent home, then I would suggest that you send me a letter stating your reasons for your decision and I will forward same to the Ontario Hospital Services Commission.

Mr. Boulter wrote to the member for Etobicoke on July 14, 1966:

Dear Sir:

Further to your letter of June 23 relative to the discharge of my wife from Riverdale Hospital, I don't think it is a case of my not wanting my wife home. In all sincerity, let me assure you that nothing would delight me more. It is a case of taking proper care of her when she is home and keeping my job.

As I have stated several times, I simply cannot afford day care. I have had several long talks with Dr. R. S. Peat, Mrs. Cook, nurses at Riverdale Hospital and my wife. From these discussions I have been given to understand that through the therapy my wife is receiving her condition is improving very much but she is still in no shape to take care of herself.

If the hospital or some other such institution could continue this work for a little longer, from six months to a year, I am confident with the way Ruthie is trying she could then come home in a better condition to look after herself in my absence.

Would you be good enough to approach the Ontario Hospital Services Commission with this suggestion?

The member for Etobicoke on July 19 then wrote to R. S. Peat, the senior consultant at the hospital services commission:

Dear Sir:

Thank you for your letter of June 16, 1966. We brought the contents of your letter to the attention of Mr. Boulter and recently was in receipt of a letter setting out his position in the matter.

I am enclosing a copy of Mr. Boulter's recent letter and would appreciate your comments in connection with the suggestion made therein by Mr. Boulter.

On July 25 Mr. Boulter received a further letter from the Riverdale Hospital, from the executive director:

Please be advised that your wife's benefits under the Ontario Hospital Service Commission will terminate on August 10, 1966.

Please advise Mrs. Harris in our social service department as to what arrangements you will be making for your wife's discharge from this hospital.

On July 27 the same letter was repeated by Dr. McCracken to Mr. Boulter. On July 28 Dr. Peat wrote a further letter to the member for Etobicoke, a copy of which the member sent on to Mr. Boulter, and that letter, July 28, from Dr. R. S. Peat is as follows:

Dear Sir:

Thank you for your letter of July 19, 1966 with the letter from Mr. Boulter concerning the care of his wife, Mrs. Ruth Boulter, who is a patient in Riverdale Hospital.

Mr. Boulter's request as set out in this letter is for a further stay in hospital for his wife in the hope that further recovery may be achieved. You will appreciate that this is a matter for the attending doctor. I have suggested to Mr. Boulter that he might arrange to discuss the matter at the hospital with the doctors concerned.

This is a very difficult problem because of the continuity of the care needs but there are a number of people anxious to help Mr. Boulter work out satisfactory plans for Mrs. Boulter's care, including the public health nurse from the Etobicoke health department and Mrs. Cook from the welfare department. It is understood that Mrs. Cook had someone in mind who might provide care during the day but Mr. Boulter did not mention in his discussion with me whether this possibility had been followed up.

I have suggested that he should see Mrs. Cook to determine whether some assistance might be available to him in the circumstances.

I hope that a satisfactory plan may be worked out and I fully appreciate the magnitude of the problem from Mr. Boulter's viewpoint.

On September 29, Robert Winters, the then Minister of Trade and Commerce at Ottawa, wrote to Mr. Boulter:

Dear Mr. Boulter:

I was sorry to learn from Mrs. Johnston of the difficult time you have been experiencing in trying to secure hospital accommodation for your wife. You most certainly have had your share of trouble and I wish there was something I could do to assist you. As you know, the management of hospitals comes entirely within the purview of the provincial and municipal governments. The federal government is not permitted to interfere with the internal administration of such institutions.

Mrs. Johnston, however, is making discreet enquires on your behalf and she has been untiring in her effort to find some way to help you find a solution to the heavy burden you are carrying.

Kindest regards,

Yours sincerely,
Robert H. Winters.

Mr. Speaker, Mr. Boulter came to see me on Oct. 12, 1966, and I discussed this case with him at some length at that time. On January 9, 1967, I wrote to the chairman of the Ontario Hospital Services Commission:

Dear Sir:

I would appreciate the courtesy of an appointment with you to discuss the case of Mrs. Ruth Boulter, the wife of Mr.

W. R. Boulter of 254 Albion Road, Rexdale, Ontario.

Mrs. Boulter is presently in the Garden Court nursing home but was for the greater part of the period from July, 1961, to date, a patient in Our Lady of Mercy Hospital and Riverdale Hospital.

I propose to bring Mr. Boulter with me when I meet with you. I would appreciate it if you would advise me by letter or by telephone of the time which would be convenient for you.

Yours sincerely,
James Renwick.

Mrs. Boulter had, on leaving Riverdale Hospital, gone to the Garden Court nursing home, and had been in that nursing home for some period of time. Any financial resources which Mrs. Boulter had at that time disappeared in the payment for the care at the Garden Court nursing home.

I sent, on January 9, a copy of that letter which I had written to the chairman of the Ontario Hospital Services Commission, to Mr. Boulter for his information. On January 19, Mr. S. W. Martin, the chairman of the Ontario Hospital Services Commission replied to me:

Dear Mr. Renwick:

Thank you very much for your letter of January 9, which I did not at once acknowledge as I thought we might be able to quickly arrange a time for meeting, mutually convenient for both of us. I realize this must be a very busy time of year for you; it has been impossible to get together. We do have a fairly complete file on the case of Mrs. Boulter and I would appreciate an opportunity to discuss this with you in the very near future.

Mr. Speaker, it being six of the clock, I move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): Tomorrow, Mr. Speaker, we will continue with the Throne Debate and there will be a private members' hour.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 6.00 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 6, 1968

The House met at 10.30 o'clock, a.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: This morning our guests in the east gallery are from Danforth Technical School in Toronto and later, in both galleries, at about noon, we will have the students from Uxbridge Secondary School in Uxbridge, visiting us.

Petitions.

Presenting reports.

Motions.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I move that the last day for depositing private bills with the Clerk, free of penalty, be extended to Friday, January 31, 1969.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, an explanation of this is simply that, as a result of the fall session, we are just extending the time so that those people who wish to present private bills to the Legislature will be able to do so, as they have done in previous years when we did not meet in the fall.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of bills.

THE POUNDS ACT

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Pounds Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Deacon: Mr. Speaker, this bill is one that has been developed in co-operation with members of the humane society and veterinarians, with a view to giving proper control and regulation of municipal pounds where many abuses in the treatment of small animals have been found.

IMPAIRED DRIVERS

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act respecting impaired drivers.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to reduce the mortality on our highways by removing drivers who have been drinking from the roads. It is very similar to legislation which has been so successful in England.

Mr. Speaker: The other day the member for High Park (Mr. Shulman) requested a clarification of the rule respecting money bills and whether or not private members may introduce such bills. He raised this matter on the introduction of Bill 25, An Act to amend The Law Enforcement Compensation Act (1967), by the member for Sarnia.

Rule 112 provides: That the House shall not adopt or pass any vote, resolution, address or bill for the appropriation of any part of the public revenue, or of any tax or impost, to any purpose that has not been first recommended by a message of the Lieutenant Governor in the session in which such vote, resolution, address or bill was proposed.

I suggest that the rule makes it quite clear that the proposal of such a bill is the prerogative of the Crown. That this principle has been recognized by the House since its inception is illustrated by the paragraph on page 54 of Lewis' Parliament Procedure in Ontario.

Another exception to which private members are subject is the rule which forbids them to introduce any motion or bill calling for an expenditure of public money. Such bills can only be introduced by the government and then only after presentation of a message from the Sovereign or his representative recommending the expenditure.

The question naturally arises—what is a money bill? In my years in the House my understanding has always been that a money bill is any bill which seeks to impose any tax or impost, to repeal any such tax or to direct or redirect any such tax or any of the public money to any specific purpose.

A fuller definition is to be found in May's Parliamentary Procedure, 17th edition, pages 841 and 842, but I think a fair summary is that any bill, the real purpose of which is to raise, repeal, abate, or direct the appropriation of the public revenue, is a money bill.

Referring to specific bills, each bill must be examined on its own merits to determine whether or not it is, in fact, a money bill. The mere fact that the Act which it seeks to amend is itself a money statute, does not necessarily mean that the amending bill must be so classified. If the amended bill does not seek to raise, repeal, lower, or direct the funds administered by the Act, it is not a money bill.

Referring specifically to Bill 25, An Act to amend The Law Enforcement Compensation Act (1967), introduced by the member for Sarnia, while I recognize some merit in the argument that the proposed amendment is procedural, I am of the opinion that its effect is to direct the payment of awards under the Act, and in fact enlarge the class of persons eligible for such awards. For this reason I have come to the conclusion that the proposed amendment is a money bill and cannot be introduced by a private member. I therefore declare the bill out of order and direct that the order for second reading be discharged.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): Mr. Speaker, I recognize the difficulty you have had in coming to this conclusion. I might say, with respect, I have had difficulty in accepting your conclusion. However, speaking for myself, I am prepared to accept that conclusion. It is a fine distinction that you have drawn, sir, but I imagine in view of what I have said, a proper distinction that you have drawn.

If you would permit me, sir, to amplify just for a moment on my intention. I would bring to your attention, of course, that this was an attempt to rectify or remedy the restrictive interpretation of the existing statute by the law enforcement compensation board on October 12 this year in the Bottrey case. I would exhort the government, through you, Mr. Speaker, to entertain—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is, of course, quite out of order, but I am sure the hon. Attorney General who has carriage of this legislation is not unaware of the situation, and Mr. Speaker will also be glad to draw his attention to the disposal of this bill by the chair.

Mr. Bullbrook: All right, sir, I certainly accept that. I think the Prime Minister probably is correct in this respect. It is difficult for us in the Liberal Party to find ourselves confronted with the government on one hand who will not entertain this legislation, and socialists on the other hand who do not want it.

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member, of course, is again speaking theoretically because neither the hon. member, nor the House nor Mr. Speaker has any idea whatsoever of what the policy of the government will be with respect to this matter. As he has pointed out, it is the recent decision of the board, and in due course I presume that the government will give it its consideration. For all the House knows, there may be legislation prepared and not introduced. Therefore, I would strongly suggest that not only are the hon. member's remarks now particularly out of order, but he is embarking on something which is entirely theoretical and, as I say, I am quite sure that these matters have not escaped the notice of the government.

The hon. member for York South.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, I think obviously we need some clarification of this whole rule and therefore the member for High Park has done a service to the House in seeking that clarification. But I am rising at the moment chiefly to put a question to you, sir, and that is about my grasp on one reading of your ruling. At one point you said that it would not be a money bill if it added or subtracted from existing expenditures that had originally been initiated by the government—

Mr. Speaker: I did not say that.

Mr. MacDonald: There was a phraseology which suggested that, and the point I wanted to draw to your attention was that it seems to me there is a contradiction between that and what the hon. member for Sarnia has introduced. As I understand his bill, it would change the classifications, and therefore it would perhaps add to, and in other circumstances it might subtract from, existing expenditures which originally had been initiated by the government and therefore it would not be a money bill. Perhaps I am misinterpreting what you said and perhaps we should leave it to a later date.

Mr. Speaker: I believe that the hon. member is misinterpreting, and I have sent him down my copy of the ruling, which I would ask him to return. I think he will find in it that what I did say was that a procedural change in a money bill does not necessarily make the amending bill a money bill, but if it does attempt to redirect or enlarge the classification, or as in this case, of persons entitled to the payment, out of public funds, then it undoubtedly itself is a money bill. I hope that is the interpretation the hon. member will get from the ruling as he reads it now.

The hon. member for High Park.

Mr. Shulman: I am rising on a point of order. The member for Sarnia in his remarks suggested that we in this party did not support his bill and, of course, this is not the situation. Actually, we have a resolution already on the floor of the House which supports the principle of this bill.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Shulman: Let me finish, sir. The point on which I arose was that the rules of the House must be followed, and of course we have had constant trouble from the Liberal Party, who do not know the rules of the House. And I think it is time they learned them.

Mr. Bullbrook: Mr. Speaker, if I might—

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member on a point of order?

Mr. Bullbrook: Mr. Speaker, if I might, a point of order arose from the hon. member for High Park and I took my seat at that time. I had not finished making comments, and if you will permit me, I would like—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member had finished making comments unless he has a point of order or a point of personal privilege.

Mr. Bullbrook: Mr. Speaker, with the greatest respect, I had not finished sir. I took my seat because you called order.

Mr. Speaker: Yes, but the hon. member was out of order, and therefore as far as the chair is concerned he had completed his remarks, unless he had a point of order or a point of personal privilege.

Mr. Bullbrook: Am I correct in understanding then, sir, that you are not going to permit me to make further comments in connection with your ruling? Is that correct?

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member has a point of order arising out of Mr. Speaker's ruling, he is quite in order.

Mr. Bullbrook: The only point of order I wish to make is this, I find it very difficult to understand in this respect: You have just had come before you a bill attempting to bring in legislation obviously within the constitutional purview of the federal government in connection with impaired driving. If you accept that type of legislation, I cannot understand why you cannot accept this type of legislation, sir.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member, of course, is again embarking into the future because bills which are introduced are not submitted to Mr. Speaker to make a ruling; he does not see them until they are introduced. If any member raises a point of the propriety of introduction, then Mr. Speaker is always glad to take it under advisement. In due course, in any event, such a bill would be checked by the officers of the House or by Mr. Speaker. So if the hon. member's point is that this bill is also out of order, I most certainly would be glad to have it looked over, take the matter under advisement and advise the House of my ruling. But the hon. member will understand that the bill presented for first reading to Mr. Speaker, as is the custom of this House, has not been vetted by him, nor has he had any opportunity to decide whether it is or is not proper.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I have a few remarks. It was never the intention of the government to let up on the right of any member to speak here, but we do take the position that we must follow the rules of the House. I mentioned to you that I considered the hon. member for Sarnia to be out of order, but I realize in making that comment we are in the middle of the Budget Debate and he can rise in his place and make what comments he likes about a whole variety of matters in that debate. But he cannot do it in referring to one of Mr. Speaker's rulings, and that is why I drew to your attention that in my opinion he was out of order.

Mr. Bullbrook: And I suppose that was in order?

Mr. Speaker: As the hon. members will understand—and it was drawn to my attention and the attention of the House very forcibly yesterday by the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha)—the rules of this House are, and perhaps properly so, rather restrictive. Those Speakers preceding the present Speaker were of the same mind as the present Speaker that there must be a reasonable latitude, provided the work of the House is not interfered with, and provided that we remain within a reasonable ambit of the rules of this House.

Therefore, as far as I am concerned, I trust that this matter is now closed, and each of the parties concerned has had an opportunity to express its opinion. I have not heard from the hon. member for Sarnia, whether he wishes me to take under advisement the bill which he mentioned particularly. I shall do so in any event—that is the bill which has just now been introduced. If he does, I will be glad to do so, and rule on it officially, otherwise it will be looked after in a normal course.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I have a question for the Attorney General.

Is the Attorney General aware of the scurrilous recorded telephone messages being given out apparently by the National Socialist Party of Canada, to those persons who call Toronto telephone number, 532-4232?

If not, will the Attorney General inform himself of the character of these messages?

Thirdly, will the Attorney General advise what steps, if any, he will take to protect those groups in our community who are being slandered by these hate messages?

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney-General): Mr. Speaker, I did see, I must confess, an article in the newspaper about these messages. I didn't think from the comments which I read that they were so serious that they needed investigation.

On receiving this question from the hon. member, I called the telephone number which he set forth. I got a recorded message which came in answer—and, I think, lasting maybe three minutes—urging Canada not to get involved in foreign aid, but to spend our resources on our own areas.

There was a reference toward the end of the message to wealthy people of the Jewish race going abroad and leaving others to carry on the work here. But I doubt if it was slanderous.

There may be other messages, and apparently from what I gathered listening to this message, this would go on for this week, and then there would be a new message next week.

I would undertake to inquire into the nature of these things—I am not sure, that the hon. member should say these are slanderous remarks—I don't believe what I heard in that particular case was slanderous. It was a case of remarks which were derogatory. Scurrilous perhaps; derogatory perhaps; slanderous, I don't think so.

However, I would continue to watch these and have the police keep track of them, so that we may know if there is anything actionable here.

I think we have to be careful—I do not mean careful, I think we have to be aware of the fact that we have a very wide area in which there is freedom for various points of view to be put forward in very strong and vehement terms. Whether these messages, of which I have only heard one, transgress that area, I will make myself informed and aware.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, by way of a supplementary question.

Would the Attorney General intervene with the authorities at the Bell Telephone Company—as his officials have done in the past where betting goes on—to see if the Bell Telephone Company will not move to do something about this?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I would accept the suggestion and inquire into it.

The point of view that I take is that if these messages—if there is no right. If it is wrongful.

If these statements are such that they should be suppressed—that they should not be allowed to be made—then the Bell Telephone Company certainly would be involved in permitting them to be made over its equipment

The primary question is: Do the statements which are being promulgated in this way offend against our laws of freedom of speech? If they do not—

Mr. MacDonald: Surely Bell has not the right to censor?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Pardon?

Mr. MacDonald: Surely Bell has not the right to censor?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, the primary question is do these messages—of which I have heard one—offend our principles of freedom of speech? If they do, then we act. We do not ask the Bell to do it.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, again by way of a supplementary question:

This Legislature, last year, unanimously passed a resolution urging the federal government to pass laws against group libel, group slander and hate literature, substantially because there is nothing in the law that talks about libel or slander to groups. It would seem to me that if the Attorney General wanted to, there are certain pressures he could bring to bear to stop these scurrilous messages being distributed to the public, and I would ask him if he will not carefully consider that?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Right.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Sudbury East.

An hon. member: We are waiting for that legislation.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Trade and Development.

Is the Minister planning to change the OHC geared-to-income policy to include a rent ceiling; and below the rent ceiling, a monthly rent based on not more than 20 per cent of income and a progressive reduction of rent based on the number of dependent children?

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Trade and Development): Mr. Speaker, I will take notice of the question and get the information in a few days.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Oxford has a question of the Minister of Municipal Affairs from some days back.

Mr. G. W. Innes (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Does the definition of unusual noises or noises calculated to disturb the inhabitants in subsection 14 of section 379(1) of The Municipal Act, chapter 249, Revised Statutes of Ontario 1950, empower a municipality to pass bylaws prohibiting the passage of diesel trucks, aircraft operations, and so on, if the nuisance therefrom infringes upon the municipality regardless of the point of its origin?

Hon. W. D. McKeough (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the question divides into two parts.

Section 379(1), paragraph 114 of The Municipal Act is permissive, and therefore no municipality is compelled to pass a bylaw to deal with the matter.

Secondly, as to the point of origin of the noise. I would refer the hon. member to section 242 of The Municipal Act which provides in part as follows:

Except where otherwise provided, the jurisdiction of every council is confined to the municipality that it represents. . . .

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, a question for the Minister of Health.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member withdrew those questions two days ago in the House. I advised him I still had two questions and did he wish to ask them or withdraw them, and he said he would withdraw them.

Mr. Sargent: No, they were resubmitted yesterday, sir, and he agreed to my asking them today.

Mr. Speaker: They have not come to the Speaker's office. They may have—

Mr. Sargent: The Minister will agree with that, will he not?

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member asked me if I was prepared to answer the questions. I said yes, but I had nothing to do with the procedural—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member, if he wishes those questions asked, will resubmit them to the Speaker's office.

Mr. Sargent: At this time, Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Minister on his move to a crash programme—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member may take the opportunity of making his remarks, if they have something to do with his question, when the question is properly here.

If the hon. member has those questions and the hon. Minister is prepared to answer them, I will be glad to have him place them this morning and ask that he resubmit them to me as of this morning so that Mr. Speaker's file may be complete. Is the hon. Minister prepared to answer the questions if the hon. member asks them?

Mr. Sargent: Has the Minister considered the system now in use in New York City for setting up flocks of birds to warn against encephalitis, the deadly sleeping sickness, as now practised by the New York City health department?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, the two kinds of encephalitis referred to in this programme in New York do not affect the people in Ontario and therefore this is not part of our public health programme.

Mr. Sargent: Will the Minister also advise if he is taking steps in Ontario to provide the new vaccine against the pending epidemic of Hong Kong flu in the United States?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, the development of vaccine to counteract special strains of influenza is a lengthy process and by the time the vaccine is developed we find that the epidemic, if such comes about, is usually at an end. The effectiveness of these vaccines is very much in question, and while they have application in certain groups of our population they are not generally widely effective and they are not widely subscribed to by practitioners. Therefore this is not part of our public health programme.

Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, the hon. leader of the NDP posed a question the other day which I took as notice:

What steps will the Minister take to remove the possibility of periodic high level pollution by phosgene gas from the Allied Chemical plant in Moore township detailed in a letter to the Air Pollution Control Service on November 7, 1968?

In answer, Mr. Speaker, the Air Pollution Control Service served Allied Chemical in Moore township under section 8 of The Air Pollution Control Act on November 28. The requirements are specific concerning all vents for toxic materials and scrubbing systems. In addition a detailed inspection and preventative maintenance programme is required of the company. Until such time as peripheral monitors are installed the plant must be patrolled every thirty minutes.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The first order: Resuming the adjourned debate on the amendment to the amendment of the motion for an address in reply to the Speech of the Hon. the Lieutenant-Governor at the opening of the session.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Mr. Speaker, when the debate was adjourned last night I was placing on the record the file relating to the tragic case of Mr. William R. Boulter and his wife Ruth, due to her chronic illness, and the result which flows from that under regulations made pursuant to The Public Hospitals Act which deprives Mr. Boulter and his wife, from time to time, of any coverage under the Ontario Hospital Insurance scheme. I would like now simply to continue with that.

I had referred last night, in closing, to a letter to me from the chairman of the Ontario Hospital Services Commission, in which we were endeavouring to arrange for a meeting to discuss this matter. That letter was dated January 19, 1967. Mr. Boulter and I did then attend on the commission and met with Mr. Martin and with Dr. Peat, to whom I have referred in the earlier correspondence.

We discussed the matter at great length and reviewed the whole of the circumstances related to Mrs. Boulter's illness and the problem with which the Ontario Hospital Services Commission was faced specifically due to the provisions of the regulations. It was an inconclusive meeting in the sense that no final decision was made, and then on February 13, 1967, Mr. Boulter wrote to me as follows:

Dear Sir:

This afternoon I received a surprise call from Dr. Peat of the Ontario Hospital Services Commission. He inquired about my wife's condition and whether she was receiving any therapy at the Garden Court nursing home. I assured him that nothing has changed since our meeting at the commission with the chairman, Mr. Martin.

Dr. Peat once again assured me that physical and occupational therapy would be of no use to Mrs. Boulter. Apparently he will do nothing toward getting her back into a hospital and feels the nursing home is the only place.

Dr. Omaradi, who seems so willing and interested in my wife's case, now wishes to step out of the picture entirely. His reason 'most unethical' toward Dr. Chang, Dr. Madigan, to the Etobicoke welfare. Apparently the vicious circle is still in operation.

Frankly, Mr. Renwick, I am disgusted and becoming disheartened to think that nothing can be done under the present regulations to aid Mrs. Boulter, who certainly deserves some sort of consideration from the commission. My thoughts now are the same as discussed with you before.

I would greatly appreciate your bringing this unfortunate situation before the Legislature and press. You may rest assured, Mr. Renwick, that any action on your part will be followed with great interest by upwards of 200 neighbours and friends who are 100 per cent behind me.

Once again, Mr. Renwick, thanks for your past interest in my wife Ruth and all you have done. Hoping to hear from you in the near future,

Yours very truly,
William R. Boulter.

Mr. Speaker, on March 22, 1967, I received a telephone call from Mr. Boulter to advise me that the Queen Elizabeth Hospital had approved an application for the readmission of Mrs. Boulter to that hospital and it was just a matter of waiting for a bed and that Mr. Boulter would keep me informed about it.

Mrs. Boulter was admitted March 28, 1967, to the Queen Elizabeth Hospital, and for a year nothing further happened, until March 13, 1968, when Mr. Boulter received the following registered letter from the Queen Elizabeth Hospital:

Dear Mr. Boulter:

As you know your wife has been a patient in this hospital since March 28, 1967. Her condition has been carefully investigated, treatment has been provided, and everything has been done to improve her situation and to make her more comfortable.

The attending doctors and medical specialists have now informed us that she does not need care in this hospital any longer. Under the regulations of the Ontario Hospital Services Commission we are not authorized to provide further care at this time. Within the next 21 days other accommodation must be found. The Department of Public Welfare of your municipality will be notified and can assist if you wish. Would you, therefore, please make arrangements for her to be accommodated elsewhere?

We would be glad to discuss the problem with you in the near future, since it will be necessary for her to be transferred on or before April 3, 1968.

Yours sincerely,

L. B. McFadden, Social Service.

On May 13, Mr. Boulter wrote me:

Dear Sir:

Further to our conversation of last week please find enclosed a copy of the letter to the Prime Minister written by Mr. H. H. Jeffrey, office manager, Sumner Equipment Limited. Mr. Jeffrey has been very concerned about my situation and I hope nothing has been written in his letter that will hinder your kind efforts in our behalf.

Thanking you once more, I remain

Yours truly,
William R. Boulter.

The letter to which Mr. Boulter referred is a letter dated May 9, 1968, from Mr. H. H. Jeffrey, of 79 Dalegrove Crescent, Islington, Ontario, to the Prime Minister of the government of Ontario (Mr. Roberts):

Dear Sir:

I wonder if you could assist me in a problem in arithmetic. The question is: How can a man earning in the neighbourhood of $6,000 per year pay a hospital bill on behalf of his wife of $7,811?

While you turn this over to your favourite mathematician to solve I will explain the reason for my problem.

In 1961, Mrs. Ruth Boulter was operated on for the removal of a cancer in the breast. The cancer was arrested, but during the operation Mrs. Boulter suffered a stroke which left her completely paralyzed on her right side, and unable to stand by herself, or walk. She was admitted to Our Lady of Mercy Hospital in July 1961.

In the summer of 1965 it was the decision of the doctors of this hospital that she required no further medical attention, so Mr. Boulter was advised to take her home or place her in a nursing home. She was brought home for a short period, then it was realized; first, that Mr. Boulter could not keep his job and stay home to look after her; second, that she still needed therapy, so she was admitted to Riverdale Hospital.

After one year in Riverdale, once again Mr. Boulter was instructed to remove her, and, after a great deal of hassling she was removed to a nursing home. The nurses were unable to cope with her in her condition, so after a time she was admitted to Queen Elizabeth Hospital where she remains at present.

On each occasion, Mr. Boulter was informed that his Ontario Hospital benefits had expired and she had to be removed. Yet, miraculously, after much argument and consultation the transfer to each hospital was effected and he was told not to worry about the financial problem.

Once again—an annual event—in March he was instructed to find further accommodation for his wife. He was unable to do so, and he has now received the bill from Queen Elizabeth Hospital for 15 days in April at $21.40 per day. This works out to the aforementioned $7,811 per year.

Perhaps by now he arranged to do enough to draw her file from the Ontario Hospital Services Commission. I might state that overtures have been made by Metro to Mrs. Boulter to have her mark her cross on a document, assigning the equity in their little bungalow over to the city for services rendered.

A person who has nothing can immediately fall back on welfare, but a working man must exhaust his hard-earned assets before he can become eligible for assistance. Although I am anything but socialist, I feel that there must be many cases similar to Mr. Boulter's, and legislation should be passed for the protection of all Ontario residents who, through no fault of their own, find themselves in this predicament. I am sure that if you want verification of the foregoing, Mr. Boulter would be delighted to be granted an interview with you personally, as it would relieve his worry to know that someone in high authority is interested.

A few observations might be pointed out now. First, in her condition, Mrs. Boulter is a wife by marriage only. She can not perform a wife's duties, meaning by this, care of the home, shopping, cleaning, etc., and therefore it is my intention that she should be a ward of the government. If Mr. Boulter was irresponsible and decided to disappear, some authority would be immediately assigned to take care of his wife. As you well know, many husbands desert their families, and the families are well taken care of.

I am concerned because this could happen to me or my neighbours, who like Mr. Boulter work hard and try to pay our way and live as proper members of our society. In such circumstances as outlined here, we are punished for doing the right thing. I feel very strongly about this situation, and appeal to you to give it your sincere consideration. Thank you,

Yours very truly,
H. H. Jeffrey.

On May 20, Mr. Boulter wrote to me again, saying:

As requested, please find enclosed from Queen Elizabeth Hospital the account on behalf of my wife, Mrs. Ruth Boulter.

The account is for 15 days from April 16 to April 30, 1968, at $21.45 per day, for $321.75, and 31 days from May 1 to May 31, 1968, at $20 per day, for $620, a bill of $941.75.

On June 10, Mr. Boulter wrote to me again:

Referring to our telephone conversation on June 6, please find enclosed a copy of a letter received by Mr. H. H. Jeffrey from Mr. John Robarts, also his answer to the Prime Minister. Hope you will be able to arrange for the mentioned interview with the chairman of the Ontario Hospital Commission. Thanking you once again for the interest you have shown, I remain,

Yours truly,
William Boulter.

The letter from the Prime Minister to Mr. Jeffrey is dated May 14, 1968:

Dear Mr. Jeffrey:

I have your letter of May 9 which I have read with interest and some concern. You mentioned a matter which apparently has been continuing for some time and which you indicate eventually was brought back to its proper perspective. Now this problem has risen again, and while your calculation is for 365 days, at the moment the bill is for only 15 days. But the chance of things working out to this annual total is what your friend is fearful of, and would like to have adjusted.

I have sent your communication to the hon. Dr. M. B. Dymond, Minister of Health, under whose department the Ontario Hospital Services Commission functions. He will be able to get the proper facts laid before him, and will then be in a position to write you further in the matter.

Yours very truly,
John P. Robarts.

On May 21 Mr. Jeffrey wrote to the Prime Minister:

Dear sir:

Thank you for your reply to my letter of May 9, regarding Mr. W. R. Boulter and his problem. I shall look forward to Mr. Dymond's letter.

Mr. Boulter has now received another invoice from the hospital for services for May. For some reason the charge has been reduced from $21.40 per day to $20. This manifests that if he is required to pay these charges each month, he will be bankrupt in a very short time, then what happens?

But you are missing an important—to me—point in my letter. Though I am very concerned on behalf of Mr. Boulter, there must be many, many similar cases throughout the province, so I repeat, I feel there should be legislation passed to protect all Ontario residents who are placed in this unfortunate situation. I think this is well worth your every consideration, and thank you in anticipation of your interest,

Yours very truly,

On June 17 I received a further note from Mr. Boulter:

Enclosed please find statement from Queen Elizabeth Hospital as requested. Hoping to hear from you soon about my wife, at your convenience.

That is the bill dated June 13, 1968, which then includes the account for the month of June, bringing the total to $1,541.75. On June 18, I had another note from Mr. Boulter, saying:

Enclosed please find copy of follow-up letter written to Mr. Robarts by Mr. H. A. Jeffrey.

This letter is dated June 21, 1968, addressed to the Prime Minister.

Dear Sir:

A month has elapsed since I received your courteous reply to my letter of May 9 regarding the problem of Mr. W. R. Boulter. Nor have I had a reply to my letter of May 21, copy of which is enclosed.

You stated that you have passed my original letter to Dr. Dymond, who after checking all the facts would be in position to write to me. Granting that Dr. Dymond is a very busy man, surely he would have been in a position to advise me of his views in this matter after more than a month's deliberation.

In the meantime, Mr. Boulter has received another statement from the hospital for services rendered for June, another $600. A year or two ago, when Mr. Boulter faced a similar situation, his case was given some prominence in the Toronto newspapers. Whether it was a coincidence or not, I am not sure, but at that time, he was advised, I think by the Ontario Hospital Services Commission, not to worry, that these expenses would be taken care of. They have been until this spring, then he started to receive the invoices, which prompted me to write to you.

I reiterate, I feel that legislation should be passed to protect others, placed in such a situation, from continual harassment, and I would appreciate your own views.

On July 2 Mr. Boulter sent me a copy of the letter from the Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) to Mr. H. H. Jeffrey dated June 26, 1968, as follows:

Dear Sir:

Your letter of June 21, addressed to the Prime Minister, has been referred to me for reply. I can understand your feeling that I should have replied to your previous letter to the Prime Minister, but I can assure you I still do not have any definitive answer to give you, in spite of my efforts to get such an answer.

I am rather concerned about your statement in the fourth paragraph of your letter: "Whether it was a coincidence or not, I am not sure, but at that time, he was advised I think by the Ontario Hospital Services Commission not to worry, that these expenses would be taken care of. They have been until this spring, when he started to receive the invoices, which prompted me to write to you."

The commission has no authority either to admit patients or to discharge them. This must be done on the recommendation of a practising physician. This is actually the problem presently facing Mr. and Mrs. Boulter. The physician in charge of Mrs. Boulter advised that she no longer needed hospital care and I am assured that Mr. Boulter was notified of those circumstances.

The commission, therefore, has no power or authority within the terms of the law to continue to pay hospital care for Mrs. Boulter when the attending physician has certified that she only needs domiciliary care. What I have been trying to do in the meantime, through discussion with my colleague the Minister of Social and Family Services, is ascertain what alternative solution to Mrs. Boulter's problem can be found.

Yours sincerely,
M. B. Dymond,
Minister of Health.

And on July 3 I received a note from Mr. Boulter enclosing Mr. Jeffrey's reply to the Minister of Health, dated July 2:

Dear Sir:

I do really appreciate your letter of June 26, and have learned a little from your explanation of the scope of the authority of the Ontario Hospital Commission. However, I am still a little baffled although I realize that I am in no position to dispute the attending physician's statement.

It was my understanding that the Queen Elizabeth was a hospital set up specifically for cases which include such as Mrs. Boulter's. Am I to understand that all other patients in this hospital do require hospital care?

It would appear to me that domiciliary care relieves one problem, only to present another. If Mrs. Boulter is sent home she would require day care while Mr. Boulter is away earning their living. This, Mr. Boulter, cannot afford. If he left his job to stay home to take care of her, it would only be a short time before all that he has worked for over the years is gone and they would both be applying for welfare.

I understand that this woman is physically unable to do anything for herself. If hospital care is not necessary, is there not some place within the jurisdiction of this province to look after such cases as Mrs. Boulter's, as I suggested before, such a person should probably become a ward of the Ontario government.

It is not my intention to be critical; rather, it is a motivation to attempt to bring relief for a fellow citizen who finds himself in a distressing situation brought on by most unfortunate circumstances.

After reading your letter I am satisfied that you are quite concerned and confident that between yourself and the Minister of Social and Family Services, some solution to the Boulter problems can be found.

Yours sincerely,
H. H. Jeffrey.

On July 13, Mr. Boulter sent to me a copy of the reply to that letter from the Minister of Health, and that letter is dated July 8, 1968, and it is addressed to Mr. H. H. Jeffrey, from the Minister of Health:

Dear Sir:

Further to your letter of July 2, which I have read with care and interest, I would point out to you that you are right in your belief. The hospitals of the type such as the Queen Elizabeth were set up for cases which have long-term illnesses, which need a degree of skilled nursing care and some medical supervision, but not the intensive care which can only be provided in an active treatment hospital.

However, patients in these extended care hospitals such as Queen Elizabeth, reach the point too, where they no longer need that type of care afforded by the hospital.

Such decision, as I pointed out before, rests with the physician. Many people, particularly as they become older, need a great deal of personal attention; some kind of nursing, skilled or less than skilled, which can be provided in the home or in a setting other than a formally established extended care hospital. I take it, Mrs. Boulter is in this condition and in the view of her physician, needs domiciliary care.

The kind of facility I believe Mrs. Boulter would need is a nursing home and the province does not operate any of those. For certain persons who are not able to afford the cost of their care in nursing homes, some assistance can be had through the Department of Social and Family Services, that is Mr. Yaremko's department. This, I think, is still on a type of means test and Mr. Boulter may not be interested in this.

I am sure you did not really mean that it is your view, such people should become wards of the government. I hope we never reach the time when we turn over the responsibility for the care of our disabled friends and relatives to government institutions. I think this would be a very backward step and would certainly not be in keeping with the kind of society we like to think of having here in Canada.

I believe that government should try to help all it can, and we do. I am sure you must realize we are fast reaching the place where the segment of society which must provide the production from which come the taxes to pay for all the social services, is becoming smaller and smaller; while those, who need the support, becomes larger constantly.

I believe we are at the place now where a large enough proportion of our tax income is going to pay for social services. I do not believe that the economy of our province can stand anymore but, of course, every one may not be in agreement with this.

I can assure you that, as a government, we are constantly looking at the situation and seeking to find ways and means of providing all possible in support of social services.

Thank you for letting me have your views.

Yours sincerely,
M. B. Dymond,
Minister of Health.

And on July 9, Mr. Jeffrey received a letter from James S. Band, the Deputy Minister of The Department of Social and Family Services:

Dear Mr. Jeffrey:

The Hon. John P. Robarts, Prime Minister of Ontario has asked the Minister of this department, the Hon. John Yaremko, to consider what assistance we might offer to your friends, Mr. and Mrs. William Boulter.

The Hon. M. B. Dymond, MD, Minister of Health has explained to you that the hospital charges are no longer covered by Ontario Hospital Insurance since the Commission, on the certification of the attending physician, deems that Mrs. Boulter no longer requires hospitalization but rather domiciliary care.

We shall have a senior representative of the department visit Mr. and Mrs. Boulter and make an attempt to find such appropriate care which would probably be much less expensive. You may be assured that we shall move without delay and at the same time, consider whether financial assistance can be made available to meet some part of the cost.

Yours sincerely,
James S. Band,
Deputy Minister.

On August 18, Mr. Speaker, Mr. Boulter sent on to me a copy of the letter which Mr. Jeffrey then received from Dr. Band and that letter is dated August 14, from the Deputy Minister of the Department of Social and Family Services to Mr. H. H. Jeffrey:

Dear Mr. Jeffrey:

You will recall the interest of the Hon. John P. Robarts, Prime Minister of Ontario and of the Hon. Matthew B. Dymond, MD, Minister of Health, in the difficulties of your friends Mr. and Mrs. Boulter.

We have made a number of inquiries as to the suitability of other accommodation for Mrs. Boulter and the ability of her husband to pay a part of this care, if that should be necessary.

I am happy to say that we have received word that the Ontario Hospital Services Commission will again accept the cost of Mrs. Boulter's care in the Queen Elizabeth Hospital.

I understand that the hospital charges will be covered from March 1968, so that Mr. Boulter is relieved of the bill, that was accumulated.

The Hon. Mr. Robarts and the Hon. Matthew Dymond will also be pleased to hear of this arrangement.

Yours sincerely,
James S. Band,
Deputy Minister.

Well, Mr. Speaker, Mr. Boulter telephoned me about this and said that he was simply delighted that his wife was now going to be able to continue as a patient in Queen Elizabeth Hospital but should he not have had some indication from the government of this decision and I, naively said to him, well Mr. Boulter, let us just let it rest that way. I am quite certain that that letter means exactly what it said.

On October 28, a registered letter was addressed to Mrs. Ruth Boulter, care of the Queen Elizabeth Hospital from the law firm of Messrs. Lang, Michener, Cranston, Farquharson and Wright, as follows:

Dear Mrs. Boulter:

I enclose herewith an account dated October 25 from the Queen Elizabeth Hospital, Toronto,

We are the solicitors for the hospital and have been instructed to collect from you and Mr. Boulter the indebtedness for your hospitalization which, as you know, ceased to be covered by the Ontario Hospital Services Commission in April of this year.

Unless payment of this amount is made within five days of receipt of this letter, we will commence some action against you and your husband in the Supreme Court of Ontario for the amount of indebtedness that exists at the time of the issue of the writ plus interest. As well, an additional claim for court costs will be made if this step proves necessary.

We trust that you will be guided accordingly, a similar letter of demand is being sent to your husband.

Yours very truly,

Enclosed with that is an account from the Queen Elizabeth Hospital dated October 25, 1968, amounting in all to $4,016.75, with a note at the bottom that Mrs. Ruth Boulter will be charged the rate of $20 a day while she remains a patient in the Queen Elizabeth Hospital. That was from that law firm and signed by Mr. A. B. Doran.

On October 30, 1968, Mr. H. H. Jeffrey wrote to the law firm of Messrs. Lang, Michener, Cranston, Farquharson and Wright by registered letter as follows:

Gentlemen:

I am a friend of Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Boulter. Mr. Boulter has shown me your letter written to Mrs. Boulter in the Queen Elizabeth Hospital demanding payment of $4,016.75 on behalf of this hospital with the threat of Supreme Court action should payment not be made in five days.

True, the legal profession requires that all concerned persons be notified but in my opinion serving such a notice on a helpless wheelchair paralytic exceeds all the bounds of decency, thoughtfulness and moral ethics. To cause such distress and anguish is extremely cruel and I am very surprised to learn that a prominent legal firm such as yours would adopt such measures. I am sufficiently Christian to hope that you personally are never subjected to similar cruelty.

The history of this case now goes back several years and I have been interested in Boulter's problem to the extent that I brought it to the attention of the Prime Minister of Ontario. Mr. Robarts was disturbed and took the trouble of turning it over to the Minister of Health. Mr. Dymond was genuinely concerned and checked into the case; finding that it was outside his jurisdiction he searched for a way to help the Boulters and took up the matter with his colleague, Mr. Yaremko, Minister of Social and Family Services. His department made a thorough investigation and the result was a letter from Mr. James S. Band, Deputy Minister, a copy of which is enclosed, stating that the Ontario Hospital Services Commission would accept the cost of Mrs. Boulter's care in the Queen Elizabeth Hospital.

Mr. Boulter has not had a bill from the hospital since May, when the amount outstanding at that date was $941.75. Naturally, he was shocked to receive the notice that you sent to his wife. Up until now he hasn't received the letter which you state was mailed to him. Copies of this letter are being mailed to the following very interested people: Rt. Hon. John Robarts, Hon. Matthew B. Dymond, Hon. John Yaremko. It is conceivable that if this case goes to the Supreme Court it could become very interesting.

Yours truly,
H. H. Jeffrey.

On November 1, 1968, Mr. William R. Boulter received the following letter from the law firm of Messrs. Lang, Michener, Cranston, Farquharson and Wright:

Dear Mr. Boulter:

Thank you for your letter of the 30th enclosing copy of a letter dated August 14, 1968 from Mr. Band addressed to Mr. Jeffrey. On receipt of your letter, we again checked with OHSC and they again confirmed they have not covered and will not cover Mrs. Boulter's hospitalization charges for period claimed for in the statement of account sent you with our letter of October 28.

Therefore, we must advise you that unless payment or arrangements for payment have been made for the account by November 7, we will be forced to commence an action against you and Mrs. Boulter without further notice.

Yours very truly,

On November 8, Mr. Speaker, a writ was issued out of the Supreme Court of Ontario with the Queen Elizabeth Hospital, Toronto, as plaintiff and William R. Boulter and Ruth Boulter as defendants. The claim is for the sum of $4,356.75 owed by the defendants to the plaintiff for the hospitalization services and accommodation of the plaintiff, rendered to the defendant Ruth Boulter from April 15 to date hereof.

The defendant, William R. Boulter, is the husband of the defendant Ruth Boulter. Further, the plaintiff claims from the defendants the sum of $20 per day for hospitalization services and accommodation from date hereof to date of judgment or date of the leaving of the plaintiff's hospital premises by the defendant Ruth Boulter, whichever is sooner.

That case, Mr. Speaker, is now in the Supreme Court of Ontario. An appearance has been entered on behalf of Mr. and Mrs. Boulter, a statement of claim has now been received from the solicitors for the hospital and the matter undoubtedly will proceed to trial.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): Who entered the appearance?

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Paul Ross of the law firm of Messrs. Ross and Cohen entered the appearance and I have been advised a day or so ago that the statement of claim has been received.

Mr. Boulter, in accordance with the laws of the province passed a couple of years ago has made application for a legal aid certificate in order that he will be in a position to defend this action on behalf of himself and his wife.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I simply want to say to the government what other members have said over the years, that this kind of treatment of a citizen of the province cannot be permitted to continue. It is no wish on my part to imply any criticism of any of the persons who were referred to in any of the correspondence.

I come back again to the very simple proposition that under The Public Hospitals Act, the regulation made under it, there is this very fine and subtle distinction about a person who has reached the apparent limit of his recovery, who on the one hand requires medical and skilled nursing care in a hospital for chronically ill patients, in which case that person continues to be covered, assuming the premiums have been paid, by the Ontario Hospital Services Commission; and a person who falls on the other side of what must be a very narrow line, who has reached the apparent limit of his recovery and whose condition is such that certain care is necessary but who does not require continued medical and skilled nursing care in a hospital.

The member for Huron-Bruce (Mr. Gaunt) has raised this matter on a number of occasions, and my colleague, the member for Hamilton Centre (Mr. Davison) had also raised the question on a number of occasions. There is a resolution presently on the order paper for the matter to be again debated. I suggest to the government that they must now bring in whatever amending legislation is required in order to eliminate this problem, not just for Mr. and Mrs. Boulter, but as Mr. Jeffrey said in his letter to the Prime Minister, for other persons who may find themselves or are now in that position in the province of Ontario.

I think it is a disgrace. I think it is in any other circumstances an imposition on the time of this House for any member to have had to take the time to put on the record the whole of this story. What I am interested in is one thing and one thing only: How do we get this government to respond to this kind of hardship to an individual citizen of the province? In what way, in what way is it possible for anyone, be he a backbencher of the Tory party, a member of the Liberal party, a member of this party, sitting in this House, to get any kind of action from the government about this matter? What do we do? What further can be done? Is there any way in which we can make any impression on the government benches?

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): That is their kind of society.

Mr. J. Renwick: Is it possible, is it conceivably possible that in some way I have now gotten across to the government that there is a serious social problem which they cannot pass off to the government at Ottawa? They cannot pass off to some municipality in the Metropolitan area, a problem which they, as a government, are going to have to face up to and deal with. There is no reason whatsoever why this matter should be allowed to continue in the court. I am asking the government, not only to clear up this instance but to take whatever steps are necessary to provide for the payment of this claim so that Mr. and Mrs. Boulter will be subject to no further harassment and all other persons in the province of Ontario who may be in this position at this time will be relieved from this kind of concern.

Mr. Boulter has no other alternative. I do not know now what can be done for him, but it does seem passing strange that in all likelihood the defence of that action will be on the basis of a certificate granted under the legal aid system of the province. Surely we are compounding the problem, and I know that the Minister of Health, the Minister of Social and Family Services (Mr. Yaremko) and I know that the Prime Minister, were as concerned as they stated in their letters, but they know the problem, it appeared for a brief fleeting time that at least for a short period Mr. Boulter would again escape the problem with which he is faced. I do not know how the confusion arose within the government but I ask the government if they will please move immediately to solve this particular problem and move immediately to provide a continuing and long term solution for it.

Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to carry on much longer in the Throne Debate. I have two or three very brief comments I am going to make. Time is going by in this month of December and I do not want to monopolize any more of the time.

I want to raise, however, in the brief few minutes before 12 o'clock certain fundamental aspects of the position of the New Democratic Party.

We want the government to understand, we want them to understand very clearly, that we are here for one purpose. We are here to bring down this government just as quickly and as rapidly as we can. We want to make absolutely clear to the people of the province of Ontario that we do not accept the structure of wealth, power and privilege which is represented by this government; that we are prepared in any way that we possibly can, to shift the balance of power within the community of the province of Ontario so that the people of the province of Ontario will have the kind of responsive, representative government which they are entitled to receive, and I want to give two or three, or four or five, illustrations of what I am talking about.

Mr. Speaker, we happen to have upset the Conservative Party and the Liberal Party by engaging in the processes of democracy within the New Democratic Party. I would suggest that when they get around to that same kind of democratic procedure, then we can have some useful exchange about it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order!

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Speaker I want to refer to the Proctor-Silex problem because for some reason or other the Tory benches and the Liberal benches were unable to understand that we were engaged in one thing and one thing only, and that was to focus the attention of the people of Ontario, and, if possible, of the government benches, on the situation at Picton.

Let me be perfectly clear, Mr. Speaker, we are not talking about the intervention of the government to force any kind of settlement in the Proctor-Silex situation. What we are saying to the government is that we in this party will not permit the union at the Proctor-Silex plant to be destroyed by the conjunction of two events—a court injunction issued under the authority of a statute of this Legislature, and the so-called right of the management of a plant, during a lawful strike, to replace the labour force.

Two years ago, this party understood what was taking place at Tilco in Peterborough. Two years ago this party believed that the focus of attention on that situation would have produced a solution. The solution, Mr. Speaker, is the Rand report. We do not intend to be taken down the red herring road of the Rand report. We intend to make absolutely certain that the government clearly understands that this party will not permit that union at the plant in Picton to be destroyed.

We are unalterably opposed to the use of the court injunction, under authority of the Legislature of the province of Ontario, in conjunction with the so-called right of the management, during a lawful strike, to replace the labour force to permit that union to be destroyed.

That, Mr. Speaker, is the guts of the problem, and that is what we are talking about when we say: "Yes there is going to be a shift in the power of the people of the province of Ontario toward themselves and away from the structure of wealth and power and privilege which this government represents."

Our objective is to bring whatever pressure we can to bear, through the public, and through whatever means outside this Legislature we conceive to be necessary for that purpose. This Legislature, as usual, never has anybody in the galleries because people in the province of Ontario do not consider it very relevant.

We intend, Mr. Speaker, to make it relevant, and we intend to make a very critical appraisal of what is taking place in this assembly, because the fact is that of all the institutions in the province which are being subject to critical reappraisal of all kinds, the one which escapes is this Legislature.

Why? Because it is not important to the people of the province. We want it to be a very important place; we want matters of public concern and public debate to be debated in this assembly so that the people of the province will come to hear what is going on.

Let us not consider that in our little myopic Chamber at this time, engaging in our little cross-fire across this floor, we are of any real significance, unless we, as an assembly, as a democratic assembly, are prepared to face up to the basic fundamental problems of a representative, parliamentary, democratic system and until we are prepared to make the people of the province of Ontario realize that we are concerned about them, and that we are concerned about what happens to them.

There are many areas in which I could make this same comment; I am going to deal, only very briefly, with two others.

We have heard a great deal about the law of landlord and tenant and the tenants' bill of rights and all the little changes that we could bring about in the law of landlord and tenant. Well let us go right to the fundamental root of the landlord and tenant relationship. The structure of privilege, the inherited structure of privilege, in that relationship, Mr. Speaker, is that the landlord is protected in the payment of the rent—protected to a degree which destroys any rights of the tenant.

If you look at The Landlord and Tenant Act, you will find that after 15 days a landlord can evict, he can exercise a right of distress, he can use the bailiff in order to execute his wishes; he can lock people out of their apartment. But the tenant for no purpose, for no purpose, is entitled to withhold his rent, and the shift in power which I am talking about in the field of landlord-tenant relationships is to shift the power so as to provide the terms and conditions under which a tenant may withhold his rent in order to compel the landlord to carry out the terms of the lease.

The ramifications of that would be very great in restructuring the whole relationship of landlord and tenant and this is but one example. If you look in any lease today you find no obligation of any kind on the landlord to repair, and if a building falls into disrepair, through lack of care, attention, hazard of any kind, the tenant has no right to withhold his rent until such time as those repairs are completed so that he can continue to live in a reasonable way in the accommodations for which he is paying his rent.

That is the guts of the landlord-tenant relationship and we, in this party, intend to make certain that that shift in power takes place so that the tenant in this society will, for the first time, have some positive way to make certain that the landlord fulfills his obligations under the lease which, as we all know, has become a standard document certainly throughout Metropolitan Toronto and in other of the urban areas in the province.

I want to deal only with one other area in this short time. There are many other areas and they are of differing importance.

I am saying to the government, in the field of university government, that the universities are established as we all know by Acts of this Legislature.

It is ceasing to be relevant or material whether they are private Acts or whether they are public Acts. The fact of the matter is it is this Legislature that has the authority to amend governmental structures of the universities. If it is not done by this Legislature, there will come a time when the student leaders, many of whom I respect, are going to say: "We deny the authority of this Legislature to pass that kind of law. We deny their right to legislate for the government of the universities."

Mr. Speaker, if that time arrives, we are in a revolutionary situation. That time is not all that far away and, Mr. Speaker, I am saying to the government that they must get about the problem of restructuring—in consultation with the student leaders, in consultation with the faculties throughout the province, and in consultation with other interested persons—a restructuring of the universities, in order to bring their government into relevance as to what is required in the 1970s for the government of the universities in this province.

These are basic fundamental things which must be done by the government. There are many more, but again, they are illustrations of what I refer to as the fundamental shift in power which must take place in this province, in order to destroy the structure of wealth, power and privilege represented by this Tory government.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

NOTICE OF MOTION

Clerk of the House: Notice of motion No. 16 by Mr. Kennedy.

RESOLUTION: That the government of Ontario should prohibit the sale of non-returnable glass bottles in this province.

Mr. R. D. Kennedy (Peel South): I move resolution No. 16, standing in my name, which has just been read.

Mr. Speaker, this resolution is a reflection of a growing concern with a growing problem. It first came to my attention through newspaper and magazine articles. It was accentuated this past summer when a distressed mother telephoned because her daughter suffered a severely cut foot on a non-returnable bottle.

A second incident involved a child across the road from my home. He was rushed to hospital with a very severely cut foot caused by broken glass.

I have since learned, that the accident rate from this cause is on the increase. Admittedly, these are not all due to non-returnable bottles, but this type of container is certainly adding to the problem.

I know of a public beach where littering has greatly increased—it is in Victoria county, in fact—since the advent of this type of bottle.

Mr. Speaker, a great deal of reference material has come to my attention. In the United States, according to Senator Seymour of New York, there are 80 million bottles a day used.

The Financial Post, in an article dated October 15, 1966, quoted a leading glass company as saying by 1970 the Canadian population would consume more than 300 million bottles of soft drinks from "non-disposable glass containers." In other words, no-return bottles.

I think the objections to these bottles, with some modifications, are clearly set out by Alberta's Minister of Highways. He said,

(a):

Many disposable bottles land on highways, where their shattered glass damages the tires of passenger vehicles.

(b):

Even more wind up in highway ditches, where, because they are particularly fragile compared with returnable bottles, they cause damage to tires and other moving parts of mowing and spraying machines.

(c):

Many end up in lakes, rivers, streams, where they cut the boots of fishermen and the feet of swimmers.

(d):

Being indestructible, economically speaking, they are a growing burden to municipal garbage disposal organizations. They can't be burned in incinerators or economically melted down and, therefore, must be separated from other refuse buried in pits.

I do not quite agree with him that these objections are in the right order of priority. I think the major one is personal injury. At least, this is the one, Mr. Speaker, that is certainly being impressed upon myself.

Then, he goes on to support returnable glass bottles, by saying:

By contrast, the returnable bottle is a vastly more attractive product. Being manufactured from "blown" glass, rather than the molded glass used in the disposable product, it is far less likely to shatter when thrown out of a car onto the highway—

Which should not happen, I interject.

It is strong enough to remain intact when subjected to the weight of a rubber-tired highway service vehicle when lying in a highway ditch. And, more often than not, it remains intact when thrown into a river or stream around camping grounds.

Its overriding merit—

He adds,

—is that it represents value and is generally retained by the user or recovered by someone else soon after it is thrown out.

Mr. Speaker, I visited two small retail stores and a supermarket, checking the three types of containers which hold carbonated soft drinks. These three are cans, non-returnable glass bottles and returnable glass bottles. This latter category is rapidly being phased out, according to the information I was able to gather. I was under the impression that cans and no-returns were more expensive and, in fact, they are, but only slightly. Generally the soft drinks cost about one cent per ounce.

In any event, one housewife shopper informed me that she did not mind paying the extra cost; she said she did not want the empties cluttering up her apartment. This seems to fairly represent the position of one group in this matter.

A second point that I would like to speak on—and it cannot be overlooked—is the position of the glass manufacturer. If the producers and soft drink firms have created a market for non-returnables, which has evidently been encouraged by consumers, no one should be surprised that throw-away bottles are being produced and used in ever increasing quantities. The profit motive is at work and we have no quarrel with that, on this side of the House anyway, Mr. Speaker.

A third group in our society that is most interested and is understandably happy and supports the retention of no-deposit bottles is the retailer. Returnable bottles are a nuisance and, I am told, an expense to the retailer, due to handling and storage costs. If there is no profit, this attitude is easily understood. In fact, should not the retailer be forced to accept empty bottles?

I mentioned earlier, Mr. Speaker, 300 million non-returnable bottles by 1970. When visiting the supermarket I found that fruit juices are now being packaged in 32-ounce non-returnable glass bottles. This beverage is not under pressure so there would not seem to be any need for this. It used to be in cardboard containers, as milk is, and perhaps some of it still is, but anyway on this day in this store it was in the 32-ounce non-returnable bottles. Milk is generally in cardboard or plastic containers.

If the milk industry started to use non-returnable glass bottles, based on current consumption, there would be, if individual quart bottles were used, 688 million, which is our annual Ontario consumption. It goes up about two million per year.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): Too bad, eh? Suppose they made a big profit on it?

Mr. Kennedy: We will cover that too, the matter of making some profit.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Kennedy: Of course, there would be a tremendous increase in littering, Mr. Speaker, if beer were distributed this way, and if the present situation on our highways as it now exists is any criterion. Now I set out this question—

Mr. Lawlor: Even if they make a big profit.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): There are a couple of fellows on the hon. member's side who will tell him about big profits.

Mrs. M. Renwick (Scarborough Centre): It bothers the Minister that they are on this side, does it not?

Mr. Lawlor: They do not come in non-disposable bottles.

Mr. Kennedy: They are expendable, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. member: They can be disposed of, too.

Hon. J. H. White (Minister of Revenue): Millionaire Maoists!

Mr. Kennedy: I set out this question, Mr. Speaker: If the public accepts non-returnable containers, if the retailers support this method of distribution, and if both the suppliers of beverages and glass manufacturers are promoting this outstanding success, we might quite properly wonder why the government should intervene. The reason is, Mr. Speaker, it is not in the public interest that beaches and recreation areas, and our forest lands and parks, be littered and polluted with refuse of any nature.

Mr. Lawlor: Hear, hear! No matter what the profit is.

Mr. Kennedy: The most dangerous offender is glass.

Mr. Lawlor: That is right.

Mr. Kennedy: It is chemically inert.

An hon. member: Is the hon. member agreeing with him?

Mr. Lawlor: It really runs against the grain, though.

Mr. Kennedy: Oh, I do not know, the hon. member can see the light occasionally. It is chemically inert. I attempted to find out the rate of decomposition of glass and could not determine very much information. But as far as we are concerned, in this situation for all intents and purposes it is indestructible, it has an infinite life.

In theory, if throw-away bottles continue to be thrown out over the years, our entire landscape would become submerged in them. Returnable bottles at least had the virtue that children and others would act as scavengers and this went part-way toward alleviating the problem. I understand from The Department of Highways that it costs in excess of $700,000 per year to keep our highways reasonably clear of discarded objects. Put another way, Ontario spends $4,000 per day in the summer months from May to October for the 13,000 miles of Ontario highways. Costs in Michigan state have tripled in the last six years for this same purpose.

The Alberta government has asked the federal authorities to work with the provinces in attempting to resolve this problem. A recent Globe and Mail article speaks of the danger to children, menace to traffic, garbage disposal and a litter problem that is getting out of hand in the U.S. Ontario is not far behind.

Both the Ontario Municipal Association and the Association of Ontario Mayors and Reeves have passed resolutions asking for legislation to prohibit the sale of disposable glass containers in the soft drink and in the beer industries. The Financial Post of October 19 last had an article on one-trip beverage containers that are getting a new look in Sweden. This is very interesting, Mr. Speaker. These are being made without glass or metal. This is one thing in Sweden we concur with; I thought the people on my right here might be interested in that.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Sweden has been quoted time after time in this House lately.

Mr. Kennedy: Yes, but sometimes improperly. I quote:

This fall, a paper-plastic container for beer and other carbonated drinks is being test-marketed. The container is much lighter, easier to destroy, and more economical than other one-trip containers. It has the advantage of not splintering, and is said to comply with safety requirements for the carbonated beverage container.

It is my belief that industry in Canada or the United States or both could move quickly and respond with a type of container which would not only be expendable but would disintegrate, and so would not be a menace to people and property, or a blight on the landscape. Also, this suggested new type of container would resolve the problems of no returns insofar as the retailer is concerned. Though I may be over-simplifying the problems, the glass companies could be the producers and so there would not be a violent reaction or upheaval in the industry.

I am not fully knowledgeable, Mr. Speaker, but I suggest the industry might enlist the co-operation of such agencies as the national and Ontario research councils. In fact, the Consumers' Association of Canada passed a resolution requesting glass manufacturers to join in the research which has already been begun by the Glass Container Manufacturers' Institute. The consumers' association also asked that the programme be speeded up.

Mr. Speaker, there are a few moments of time remaining for our side and I know the member for Victoria-Haliburton and perhaps the member for Prince Edward-Lennox would like to speak on this topic. So I would like to yield the remainder of the time to them. I just want to conclude, Mr. Speaker, by saying that the problem is sufficiently serious that I would urge consideration of this resolution beyond the airing which it has received here today.

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): May I interrupt the proceedings of the House for a moment, Mr. Speaker? I would like to direct your attention, sir, to the fact that a very large delegation is occupying both galleries. Mr. Speaker has advised that they would be here. I think the House would be anxious to know that they are now here—160 young people accompanied by the teachers from the progressive riding of Ontario are here to further their education. I am sure that you and the hon. members will want to see to it that they get a good lesson in democracy this morning.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, this is the fourth time that I have risen in this House and spoken on this issue. The first time that I spoke on this matter was in 1966, and it is found on page 5505 of Hansard.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. During a similar private members' hour either earlier this week or last week, a suggestion was made that time would be divided, but it did not interrupt the rotation of parties, and should not, I suggest to you, on this occasion.

Mr. Speaker: If I may say so, it was my understanding that when I replaced the Speaker, the next man on the list was the hon. member for Kitchener. I have the hon. member for Victoria-Haliburton on the list, and if it would be agreeable we will proceed in the normal order at this time.

Mr. Lewis: When next he rises, Mr. Speaker, it will be the fifth time on this subject in the House.

Mr. J. R. Breithaupt (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with great interest to the comments of the hon. member for Peel South (Mr. Kennedy) in bringing forth this resolution.

As you may recall sir, I brought the problem of these bottles to the attention of the House on June 3 last. At that time I said it would well be in the public interest to discuss this whole problem with manufacturers, distributors and merchants to find out the best solution.

My views now, after some research into the problem, are the same as they were then. A resolution begun by the Kitchener city council, which would ban these non-returnable beverage bottles, has found favour with many other municipal organizations.

We have had reports that there is some increase in broken glass litter in Ontario but I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that the facts are simply not known.

The problems of broken glass and damage done will not be solved by legislation to ban these bottles. In Ontario the use of alcohol has been banned on occasion and there are many examples of the futile efforts to ban books and publications of various types.

These items influence the bodies and minds of our citizens. However, only by education can we combat those influences which we feel and believe to be harmful to our society. Non-returnable bottles have become a focal point of public interest in litter and pollution. But what are the facts?

The federal Minister of Corporate and Consumer Affairs, the Hon. Ron Basford, is reported as having said last week that these bottles are not considered harmful and hazardous.

Well this approach, surely, is clearly not the view of many others in Canada or in Ontario. The facts must be known before action can be taken.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that there are at least nine departments in this government which can and should, work together quickly to get the information which is needed.

They are: Agriculture and Food, which can tell us of the injury to animals; the Attorney General can tell us of the success or otherwise of the programme of fines for littering in Ontario; education has a role, to inform the students about pollution and littering problems; Energy and Resources Management knows, or should know, the problems of waste disposal; the consumers' involvement comes through Financial and Commercial Affairs; let The Department of Health confirm whether these items are hazardous to health or not; Lands and Forests can tell us the cost of increased park maintenance because of broken bottles; Tourism and Information must carry on an educational programme against pollution to the tourists and citizens generally, and Transport can tell us of the costs of highway cleaning and refuse removal and of the damage to vehicle tires.

In addition, the Ontario Research Foundation, the parks commission and the Ontario Water Resources Commission have their obvious roles to play in getting us the facts now.

Let this government find out from its many sources of information just what is going on. When this is done, we can act intelligently rather than react to this very emotional matter.

We need to be informed. Many groups must be canvassed. The farm organizations and the humane societies could help us. The municipalities have some experience in collection and disposal problems for these items. The tire manufacturers, the glass container council, the hospitals, the beverage bottlers and distributors and the grocery chains, all have views on this subject.

Let us have the facts now. When they are received a balanced view of the problem may well lead us to legislation in the public interest.

I am not asking, Mr. Speaker, for some long-winded or time-consuming Royal commission or some lengthy study. This government could designate one of the Ministers to whom I have referred to co-ordinate the study today. They could have the answers by early February when we expect to come back after the adjournment of this session and then, intelligent sound legislation could be presented to this House and passed in the public interest.

A ban on these bottles without knowing the facts is an ostrich-like approach to the problems of damage, injury and pollution which they appear to compound.

Education and an effective anti-litter programme will be the only tools which can, in the long run, solve our problems of littering and pollution.

Mr. Speaker, I speak on the subject with views which are my own. I am certainly no apologist for the merchants and bottlers and distributors who enjoy the convenience of not having to give refunds and store these bottles. They are acting in a society which is wasteful and which seems to want convenience in packaging.

Perhaps a good solution might be to increase the deposit on bottles from two cents to five or ten cents so that we could resolve the problem of breakage and thereby, resolve as well, this littering problem.

There are certainly more than just one or two ways to get over the difficulties which we face here.

Many editorialists and commentators have seized upon the public confusion in this area to appear as oracles preaching that all will be well if we just ban one of the small parts of the litter which mars our countryside and beaches and which defaces our streets and parks.

Some have facts on which they base their views; many others have only emotions.

Mr. Speaker, here is an area where Ontario can lead the way if reasonable legislation is passed based on the facts. It may be that the balance of the welfare of our society will require some very stern measures to deal with these forms of containers. If the facts warrant, then it is up to this government to act with responsibility.

I regret the panic phrasing of this resolution which cannot intelligently resolve all of the obvious ramifications of the problem.

I have set out, Mr. Speaker, how the government could act, if it will, to promptly deal with this situation. If my views prevail I think we can do something positive about this problem.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, we have heard two sides of the issue now. One telling us that the bottles ought to be disposed of; we also heard just a word or two from the member for Victoria-Haliburton who demonstrated again, the futility of a backbencher in the Tory party. He has tried now on five successive occasions to get the ear of the government and so far, the government has refused to act.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That was four.

Mr. Young: No, he had another crack at it this morning.

We expected the Minister to jump up in his place and say, we are going to have action right away, after he spoke the fifth time.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am waiting to hear him.

Mr. Young: Now after the sixth time, we will see what happens.

On the other hand, we found the classic example of the Liberal position here this morning, to sit on the fence, have more studies, do nothing until we are certain of all the facts and then perhaps we will act.

Now this is an—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Young: Now this is an incredible situation and it is simply illustrative of the kind of dilly-dallying which can go on, the kind of postponing of any kind of decision.

I think all of us recognize that in this society we do have, as the hon. member has said, the profit motive which drives us in certain directions; and this whole litter direction is a thoroughgoing illustration of how this happens.

We have had, over recent years, the whole new packaging concept in a drive to sell goods. It has made them more attractive. It has done certain things I suppose to boost certain articles at the expense of other articles but as long as people are hungry, my guess is they are going to buy food whether it is in an attractive package or not—they are going to get as much as they can afford. But the thing that this has done is to multiply the desperate problems of the municipalities end up on end, because every time we bring out a new disposal package it means that the people at the municipal level have to make more provision for the garbage at the other end.

So costs have been rising at that end—not only costs but the problem of disposal. The very problem of space is becoming more and more desperate as time goes on, and in our big cities, the problem now is at a place where the people responsible for garbage disposal are really at their wits' end not knowing what to do. They are crying that some action ought to be taken by government to solve this problem of disposal refuse, and the disposable bottle is one of the factors in this situation.

In the past, of course, we have had disposable bottles of all kinds—ketchup, you name it, it comes in disposable bottles—but one of the largest items in the whole bottle situation is soft drinks and beer. In recent days we have had the cans which again add to the garbage disposal problem and add to the headaches of people in parks and along the highways; these have to be picked up.

As long as the bottle can be returned, there are always the youngsters and even the owners of the bottles who are willing to get these back into the stores where they are purchased for the amount of the deposit. But without this incentive—the profit motive, I suppose — without this incentive industry throws its burden upon municipal disposal facilities.

I think that all of us are fairly well agreed that the disposable bottle, as it has mushroomed in recent years, is not a good thing. I have an article here which appeared not long ago in one of the local papers. An article by Alden Baker, who points out that each morning patrols of parks department employees visit city playgrounds to pick up discarded and slivers of glass. Teenagers and some adults have fun at night smashing non-returnable pop bottles against teeter-totters and swings. This happened before, but it is happening in greater measure now because the bottles are worth nothing.

Along the eastern beaches 100 to 125 non-refundable pop bottles are collected every day. Broken pieces of glass have to be picked up by hand.

There has been a programme instituted by various municipal bodies to end this menace. I am not going to talk about that this morning; we all know about it. The fact is, that as we check with park superintendents, with people responsible for streets and highways, they are very concerned about this matter. Because today they are finding, not only more bottles, but more bottles shattered and splintered and thereby dangerous to the youngsters who may be using the parks and the people who may be cleaning up on the highways.

You see we have—and I have it here—the argument from the glass industry that they are responsible “for only a small part.” They say: “We cause six per cent of the litter but we get 90 per cent of the blame.”

The facts are that that six per cent of the litter stays there unless some municipal employee or provincial employee picks it up. Much of the other litter—the paper litter, the paper cartons—will, in a year or two at most, disappear under the forces of wind and weather. But the bottle stays, and if it is shattered, it is a menace.

That bottle population builds up unless it is removed and so the six per cent in another year becomes another six. It does not take too long until it is built up and becomes a permanent fixture of the landscape.

Mr. Speaker, there are those in our society who are concerned about a change that is suggested. The glass companies have a vested interest in this, but not only the glass companies but the people who are working in industry—we have had representations from these people, because they feel that a change would eliminate their jobs.

I think again we come back to the fundamental problem in this society. When jobs are eliminated is it done on a crash basis—the plant is closed, the workers are turned out—or is it done on a basis that this party has talked about time after time, that we do some economic planning? So, as an industry is closed it is phased out and the workers are given other jobs, through the proper kind of economic planning in our society.

If this is done then no worker in a redundant industry needs to fear for his daily bread.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): What a dreamer the member is.

Mr. Young: This is happening in other countries. Sweden was mentioned this morning. This happens in Sweden. Where an industry becomes redundant, people are retrained at public or industry expense and there is no unemployment. When the unemployment in that country reaches something like one per cent then the government gets panicky and government measures are taken to bring it down.

Having mentioned Sweden, the hon. member who introduced the bill this morning said that Sweden had done research and they are already making disposable bottles which solve this problem. When the hon. member for Kitchener (Mr. Breithaupt) mentioned this morning that we should undertake this study and this research, all we need to do perhaps is to send our industry to Sweden to find out what they are doing so successfully. What will that take? Two, three, four days? One week? To study the situation and come back and gradually convert our disposable bottle industry into the kind of bottle industry which the Swedes have now undertaken and carried out?

Mr. Kennedy: They are not quite that far along.

Mr. Young: All right, all right!

I have great confidence in the Swedish people because they have led us in so many ways in the past and they will lead us again. I have been delighted to find that Sweden has been quoted increasingly in this House from time to time during the past few weeks.

They are leaders not only in the technical field but also in the political field. Certainly the Hon. Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. Stewart) knows they are leaders in the whole field of farm marketing and agricultural technique. He has seen this and he understands it and he knows I am right.

So, Mr. Speaker, this morning we face this problem. I think we have to recognize that it is a problem. It is a desperate problem. It is a problem that has to be met. No longer can we allow commercial interests to dictate to us and to our municipalities how we are going to carry out the vending of food and thereby add to the problem of the disposal facilities in the municipalities and in the province.

So I would support this resolution this morning. I would urge that this government gets busy—and gets busy very, very rapidly—in solving this problem of litter, not only in the bottle industry but other kinds of litter that are befouling our civilization today.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: Mr. Speaker, I have been very interested to hear the points of view put forth on this resolution this morning. I believe it should be stated fully, as the member for Kitchener stated, that the container and beverage industries are not insensitive to the litter problem. They have supported advertising campaigns. They have financed anti-littering laws. They deserve credits for these efforts.

The basic problem is that none of these measures have really made any dent in the litter problem, which grows worse and worse each year as the shipments of bottles and cans continue to increase. That does not mean that such programmes should be abandoned. Far from it. It simply means that more effective anti-litter measures must be found.

It is perfectly obvious that public education programmes should continue to expand. Increasing emphasis should be placed on reaching school children, who can have a strong influence on their elders when they become involved in good causes. Some thought should also be given to more public involvement in the collection of litter. But all these efforts still are no more than patching plaster.

In considering the alternative approaches for dealing with litter, one is tempted by the idea of placing heavy taxes on beverage containers or prohibiting them entirely, such as this resolution suggests. But such a negative approach is not the fair or constructive way to deal with the problem in which many people are involved. Moreover, experience suggests that it probably would not work.

The real problem that confronts us is how to control the millions of tons of refuse, as the member for Yorkview (Mr. Young) has mentioned, produced by our affluent society. What we really need is a creative approach to deal with components of litter. One of these ways is in the re-use of garbage and disposable items in our society. I have spoken before on this and I truly believe that this is the real solution to the problem.

When the bottle ends up on the side of a highway, the cost of disposal can add up to over 30 cents a bottle. This is an expensive way to underwrite private industry.

The means for dealing with the problem should be obvious. Those who are making profits out of the bottle—and cans and containers, too—should bear some part of the expense of disposal. The province itself should set up a deposit return system for all containers sold in the province, which could operate on the manufacturers' level, rather than retail.

The manufacturer or processor should be required to deposit a fixed amount for each bottle or can shipped by him for sale within the province. He would then have his deposit returned to him for all empty containers he recovers for salvage or other disposal at his expense. The balance would be charged as a disposal fee and applied to the cost of refuse and litter collection. Then it would be up to the ingenuity of each manufacturer to figure out ways to get his bottle and cans and hence his deposit, returned to him. I think this is an alternative solution.

I thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: According to the list furnished to me by the previous occupant, the hon. member for Grey-Bruce has the next space.

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): Thank you, and my able colleague.

Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the debate that has gone on here today, especially the statements by the hon. member for Yorkview, when he took a rather hypocritical cut at the member for Kitchener. It appears to me, Mr. Speaker, that no one who has risen here today, except perhaps the member for Kitchener, has spoken to the resolution, which, Mr. Speaker, reads: "The government of Ontario should prohibit the sale of non-returnable glass bottles in this province."

Mr. Speaker, we have heard a lot said about what may result in the way of injury and damage through the improper disposal of what sometimes today has been called non-returnable bottles and on other occasions disposable bottles. I am rather perplexed by the use of those two words as synonyms because if one listened to the hon. member for Yorkview he was contradicting himself. He talks about planning and the only place where they have planned economy at the present time is behind the Iron Curtain, in Russia and Poland and Czechoslovakia and Hungary and they are all falling apart, they are now having to bring in free enterprise. The only other place in which they did try it on the North American continent was Saskatchewan, with disastrous results. In other words, talking about using non-returnable and disposable as synonyms, we might say that to the NDP planned economy and bankruptcy are also synonymous.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Ben: I guess I must have struck a nerve there, there is a lot of agitation from the ranks over on the left.

Now, to manufacture bottles which shatter in such a way after their disposal that they do not create a hazard, is a laudable goal. If the resolution had been worded that this government will now demand that all bottles manufactured for the use of beverages or any other product and which are non-returnable be made of a substance which will disintegrate in such a fashion that it will not harm anybody, that is fine, I am sure we would support that. But that is not what the member for Yorkview said. He said to ban the use of non-returnable bottles.

The only difficulty is, I suggest, that it is not as the hon. mover of the resolution put forth, that the manufacturers have created a demand for non-returnable bottles and that the consumers have been encouraging them, but that the consumers have created a demand for non-returnable bottles and the manufacturers have been encouraging them. Because of my experience in another jurisdiction, in city council and Metro council, where resolutions such as this were treated every year, I am convinced that because of the affluence our society has experienced over the last 15 or 20 years, it became below the dignity of most people to go through the formality of returning a bottle to a store to obtain the two cents' refund. It got to the point where one even had difficulty convincing the Boy Scouts that there was still merit in collecting bottles for the few cents that were refunded on them or the five cents that used to be refunded on milk bottles.

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): GM blames the car buyers for higher prices too!

Mr. Ben: Well, talk about GM—Now, the suggestion came from the speaker who preceded me, Mr. Speaker, that the bottle manufacturers should be compelled to subscribe to a fund which could compensate some of the people who suffer as a result of coming into contact with shattered glass originating from disposable, or non-returnable bottles, whichever the case may be. He did not indicate how they are going to distinguish between the bottle that was non-returnable, or disposable, and the one for which the manufacturer, or storekeeper, had offered a refund on its return. I imagine that they could go into manufacturing a special type of bottle which would contain a special type of indelible colour which could be recognized.

What interests me about that argument is that I find it attractive to a considerable degree, Mr. Speaker, because what I have advocated for a long time is that brewers and distillers and manufacturers of alcoholic spirits be compelled to subscribe—that is donate—to a fund which would be used to compensate the victims of the use of their products—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is now himself not speaking to the resolution on the floor of the House.

Mr. Ben: Well, there was an alternative that was suggested—

Mr. Speaker: I would call the hon. member's attention also that very shortly he will have used up the time allotted to him and that left over from the first speaker from his party.

Mr. Ben: Well, that last statement I will accept with thanks, Mr. Speaker. The point is, Mr. Speaker, that it is easy to sit here and crucify people who cannot be here to defend themselves. As a matter of fact I dare say that this is synonymous to a crucifixion that we ought to refer to, because no defence is being offered.

The fact is, I still suggest, Mr. Speaker, that our society is too affluent and you are not going to get people to return bottles if all they are going to get for them is two cents. The teenagers may be smashing bottles. I suggest they are smashing them because they have too much jangling in their pockets and they do not want to walk the block or two to the grocery store, from which they received this bottle, to get the two cents. You cannot even convince children below the teen age. I suggest that what we have to do is educate people into pride and cleanliness.

I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that where you have a pride and cleanliness, like in Holland, Belgium, Germany and Austria, where cleanliness is next to godliness, you do not have a litter problem, period; whether it be with tin cans or brightly tinselled boxes, or bottles, returnable, non-returnable, disposable, non-disposable. I think that is the solution—education.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Is there a member from the New Democratic Party who wishes to speak? If not, the hon. member for Prince Edward-Lennox has the floor.

Mr. N. Whitney (Prince Edward-Lennox): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with a great deal of interest to all the remarks that have been made on this resolution, and I have a few comments to offer myself. Having just listened to the hon. member for Humber, I would suggest that perhaps elsewhere in Ontario, the society is not as affluent as he described it. I do know that refuse is an ever-increasing problem. I have two farms with a sideroad running between them, and each year more and more bottles and more and more garbage are thrown not only along the sideroad, but sometimes on my own property.

There have been occasions when evidence of the ownership of some of this material was left, and some people who have been responsible have been taken to task. I might say that wherever there are bottles, and I or my employee or one of my family find them, we remove them ourselves because of the possible damage we can receive as a result of those bottles being there. The damage they can do consists of a flat tire on a pick-up truck or a farm machine; if the bottles get broken, livestock can be injured by them. I would say that with the advent of the non-returnable bottles, the desire to throw away bottles is more prevalent than ever before.

I know that this is only a part of an overall problem, but I do suggest that to make studies and prolong this whole thing right on for 30 years, is going to simply compound the damage that is being done. In regard to the non-returnable bottles, action should be taken in the very near future in order to avert the spreading of these practices to as great an extent as possible. I do not know if there is a general problem in this regard, but it does seem that people from the cities, who perhaps are camping, just have no regard whatever about local conditions. Sometimes I have seen correspondence written by children in the garbage and so you know that they are not local inhabitants. They come along and they think it's fun to throw out their garbage any place at all. I agree with what has been said about education, about the possibilities that another type of container might be invented which would change this whole situation. But I do wish to reiterate that what has been said about the non-returnable glass bottles I would agree with wholeheartedly.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, I feel sorry for the member for Victoria-Haliburton (Mr. R. G. Hodgson), and I can understand his frustration in dealing with the Cabinet and department heads in the civil service. You know, they can tell you to go to hell in such a nice way that you find yourself looking forward to the trip. It must be frustrating for him, but I know when the Liberals are in power the backbenchers are going to have a good say.

Is that not right? That is right!

Come across and join us and you will have a chance to have this thing settled.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, this is another case of our changing economy, whereby a new technology is bringing out new packaging. One member says it causes six per cent of the litter and gets 90 per cent of the blame for it. I think this is a case of a small minority of people making a big stir about what is really not a truly important matter.

As to the position of the bottlers, they have a good case. The case for them is an economic one. It is not feasible for them to go along with any type of legislation like this, insofar as it would mean throwing out whole packages, as you want to do it. This is typical of socialist propaganda. Here we have an industry; and well, they can go along with them.

We have a case where a bottler in any area has to conform with this nonsense they are putting forth here. It would have to cost them $1 million. To go into canning and things like this would be a $1 million packaging change. They are good businessmen and they have their staffs—about 50 people were employed by this man I talked to on the phone—and they cannot possibly conform to canning at this point.

I think that this industry has a kind of policing of its own. Education, and selling certain non-returnable bottles to certain areas of the retailing outlets, are the answers. But at no time should we take the approach of the socialists, that of the hon. member for Yorkview. This would disrupt a multi-million-dollar industry, and put them back to where they were before automation. This is not intelligent.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that they are flying a kite, sir, for a small minority group, and the whole thing won't work.

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): Mr. Speaker, on Monday we will continue the debate on the Speech from the Throne; and there will be a private members' hour from five to six.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Highway Traffic Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to provide for regular inspection of all motor vehicles in the province of Ontario.

THE ONTARIO SOCIETY FOR THE PREVENTION OF CRUELTY TO ANIMALS ACT, 1955

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Ontario Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals Act, 1955.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to allow the Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Animals to license dog kennels in this province.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of Trade and Development has a statement.

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Trade and Development): In view of the fact Ontario Housing Corporation is now taking over the operations of the Housing Authority of Toronto and the City of Toronto Limited Dividend Housing Corporation Limited, perhaps a short report on this matter would be appreciated by the hon. members.

May I make it perfectly clear that this added responsibility was taken by Ontario Housing Corporation at the specific request of the city of Toronto. In doing so, the city has been relieved of a very heavy financial burden that will be borne by the federal government, the government of Ontario and the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto.

At the request of the city, I met with the board of control in July 1967.

Among matters discussed was the question of Ontario Housing Corporation assuming the responsibilities of both the Housing Authority of Toronto and the City of Toronto Limited Dividend Housing Corporation Limited. I suggested that such an arrangement might be considered and that in order to qualify for operating subsidies at the federal level, Ontario Housing Corporation must effectively hold title to the properties in question. The municipal equity in the developments to date would be represented by the value of the lands at the time of acquisition by Ontario Housing Corporation, this value being determined as the amount of indebtedness which had been liquidated at the date of acquisition or, in simple language, OHC would assume the unpaid balance still outstanding on these projects.

The lands would then be leased by OHC for a nominal consideration and the corporation would also assume responsibility for retiring the debenture debt service or would assume the existing mortgage or mortgages as the case may be. At the termination of the lease periods, ownership of each development would again wholly vest in the municipality.

On March 7, 1968, I wrote His Worship, Mayor William Dennison, outlining the conditions under which Ontario Housing Corporation would assume these added responsibilities.

One of the conditions was that the city would offer alternative employment to employees of both the Housing Authority of Toronto and the City of Toronto Limited

Dividend Housing Corporation, for whom equivalent employment could not be offered by Ontario Housing Corporation, or who of their own volition chose to remain with the city. These matters were resolved at a meeting March 8, 1968, with board of control and William R. Allen, chairman of the corporation of Metropolitan Toronto.

To ensure a smooth transition a joint staff committee consisting of senior employees of Ontario Housing Corporation and the city of Toronto was established. This committee undertook the following tasks: All personnel matters, inspection and valuation of the properties, verification of inventories, financial matters and legal implications.

By absorbing the city's housing stock into the overall management portfolio of Ontario Housing Corporation the city of Toronto will, on the basis of figures provided to us by the city, be relieved of an annual operating loss of about $850,000. The city of Toronto on November 27, 1968, passed a resolution formally requesting Ontario Housing Corporation to assume the financial and management responsibilities of its nine developments totalling 2,761 units. The government of Ontario concurred in this request by Order-in-Council dated November 28, 1968. We are now awaiting final approval from Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and the corporation of the municipality of metropolitan Toronto before the formal agreements can be executed. No delay is anticipated in this regard.

Of the 118 employees of the two city housing bodies, Ontario Housing Corporation was able to offer comparable employment to 104 and, to date, 66 of them will be joining our staff. Those who will not be joining have been offered alternative employment with the city.

In the interim it has been agreed that those employees who have elected to remain with the city will continue to work in their present capacity at Regent Park North or the Limited Dividend projects while the necessary realignment of staff occasioned by the transfer of responsibilities takes place. We have undertaken to give the city at least two weeks advance notice of the date on which they will be required to transfer these employees to other duties.

In a letter to these employees we have pointed out that should they reconsider and wish to join Ontario Housing Corporation, the original offer by the corporation is still open and will remain so until the formal agreements have been executed.

A letter has been sent to the 2,761 tenants affected welcoming them as tenants of the Ontario Housing Corporation. To dispel any uncertainty, we have pointed out in the letter that in the terms of management there will be very little change and, in fact, the management system used by Ontario Housing Corporation will give them very close contact with those employees of the Corporation who will be concerned with the development in which the tenant lives.

In point of fact, in terms of day to day management, the tenants for the time being at least, will be dealing with exactly the same people as they have been accustomed to dealing with in the past.

Those tenants living in Regent Park North have been paying rentals based on the same national rent-to-income scale as that used by Ontario Housing Corporation. Consequently the change-over will in no way affect their rental rates.

However, in the limited dividend developments, a fixed rental has been in effect and for these units there will be a change, hopefully with effect from January 1, 1969. Rentals will then be calculated on the basis of the rental scale and if past experience is any guide, a number of them can expect to be paying lower rents. The rental scale will be fully explained to these tenants before any change comes into effect.

With any change of landlord it inevitably follows that a number of questions arise which must be answered. For this reason, within a week or two, Ontario Housing Corporation will be making arrangements for a meeting between the tenants and representatives of the Corporation to clarify any misunderstandings.

When the limited dividend units are changed over to a rent-to-income basis, all family public housing units within Metropolitan Toronto will have the same rental rates and the same basis of allocation. Properties previously administered by the city housing bodies will no longer be restricted to applicants residing in the city of Toronto as has been the case in the past.

The portfolio of rental housing in metropolitan Toronto currently under management by Ontario Housing Corporation consists of 7,985 units located in 44 separate developments and includes 212 single family scattered units.

The addition to the Corporation of Metropolitan Toronto's housing stock of these nine city developments, with their 2,761 dwellings will raise the portfolio to 10,746 units in 53 locations—an immediate increase of 34.6 per cent.

The Province of Ontario's contribution to the operations of the Toronto Limited Dividend Housing Corporation and the Housing Authority of Toronto will be effective from January 1, 1968. This will result in a provincial contribution to December 31, 1968, in excess of $515,000. In addition, there will be a capital investment in respect of North Regent Park in the amount of approximately $800,000, as part of a refinancing of that development by Ontario Housing Corporation. In total, Ontario Housing Corporation will be relieving the city of Toronto of a debenture and mortgage debt of nearly $20 million.

The projects for which OHC is now assuming responsibility are: North Regent Park, 1,397 units; Moss Park, 903 units; Phin Park, 34 units; McCormick Park, 106 units; Greenwood Park, 81 units; Bessie M. Luffman Apartments, 25 units; Donald Summerville Apartments, 120 units; Pendrith Park Apartments, 54 units; Eastview Park Apartments, 41 units.

It is anticipated the annual subsidy to be met by the province alone will amount to approximately $366,000 in 1969. However, in order to consummate this transaction it was necessary for the province to bear a substantially greater share of the losses in 1968.

Certain other properties, including the family hostel on Dundas Street West, will continue to be operated and administered for emergency purposes by the Department of Welfare of the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto.

In summary therefore, Mr. Speaker:

(a) The provincial share of operating losses on these former city properties for 1968 is $518,000.

(b) The approximate total annual subsidy from all levels of government in subsequent years is $862,000 a year.

(c) Ontario Housing Corporation will assume the outstanding indebtedness amounting to $20 million which will be repaid with interest to the federal government and the city debenture holders.

(d) All employees of the Housing Authority of Toronto and the City of Toronto Limited Dividend Housing Corporation Limited, with the exception of 14, were offered comparable employment with Ontario Housing Corporation with the same or better terms than they enjoyed before.

(e) At the end of the agreed lease period all previously city-owned properties will be returned to the ownership of the city.

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): I rise on a point of privilege, one touches the Minister of Health, and I hope he will take a seat, and the other concerns you personally, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, on December 5 of this year, I asked the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) the following question:

Will the Minister table a letter which he sent to Dr. E. H. Botterell, vice-president of health sciences at Queen's University, in connection with doctor shortages in Ontario.

The Minister refused to table this letter, stating that it was just ordinary correspondence and similar to much other correspondence that passed between him and other people in the province of Ontario. He was pressed, but refused.

Mr. Speaker, the following day the letter, or what purports to be the letter which the Minister had sent to Dr. Botterell and which he had refused to table in this House as being inconsequential, was published in the Toronto Globe and Mail. The letter reveals, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister was motivated to write the letter because of his concern, or I presume his concern, for the shortage of doctors in this province, asking the people concerned to take what you might call very strong remedial actions to try to remedy this situation.

I think it has been an affront to the House, Mr. Speaker, for the Minister to have refused to table this letter in the first instance; and secondly, to try to have led the House into believing that the contents were of little consequence and that it was only in the ordinary course of his duties that he sent the letter.

That is my first point of privilege. If the Minister wishes to reply, I will take my seat for that purpose only.

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Speaker, I really can't understand why the hon. member is getting so worked up about what is an ordinary piece of correspondence similar to many passing between my department and others concerned. But I would like to point out to you, sir, I did not affront the House, because I had nothing to do with publishing the letter in the newspapers. I repeat what I said in this House a few days ago, sir. I fail to understand the irresponsible action of whoever was responsible for publishing that letter in the press before those to whom it was addressed even had the opportunity of discussing the subject matter of the letter with me.

I do not expect that the public interest is well served by entering in into a discussion or dialogue through the medium of the communications media before the parties concerned have an opportunity to discuss it in person. There was no intention of affronting the House. I still maintain, sir, I write letters of even greater importance to people in connection with government business, but which I never tabled in this House. There was no affront intended to the House any way whatsoever.

Mr. Ben: I do not agree with the Minister's contentions, but that is neither here nor there.

The fact is I stated my position. I trust I stated my position on behalf of the members of the Opposition.

Mr. Speaker, the next point concerns yourself. In the first session of this Parliament, Mr. Speaker, I regret to say that you and I had strong words touching on your action in placing a question which I had made before the orders of the day on the order paper. At that time, I had risen in the House and objected to your actions, stating that your actions were contrary to the rules of procedure of this House.

I am sure your memory does not need refreshing on the point but for the purpose of record, I will state that I brought to your attention Rule 37-a, section 5, captioned, "Questions Put by Members". And I also drew to your attention at that time to part c of section 37, which stated:

Whenever any question requires, by way of a reply thereto any statement of facts or records or statistics of a lengthy or voluminous nature or other material which in the opinion of the Minister whose department is concerned should be made the subject of a Return, the Minister may, instead of answering such question, require a motion to be made for a Return.

My position at that time was that you were taking upon yourself powers which were not inherent in your office to decide to put a request for information on the order paper rather than submit it through the normal channels to the Minister of whom it was asked.

I pointed to this particular section and stated that it was only the Minister who had the prerogative to decide whether or not the answer required voluminous or lengthy answers.

Mr. Speaker, today I submitted a question, through your office in the usual course, addressed to the Minister of Trade and Development (Mr. Randall) which asked—

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member is not now to ask the question.

Mr. Ben: I am not asking the question now—

Mr. Speaker: I know. I have a recollection of what was in it. If the hon. member will proceed to elaborate on his case.

Mr. Ben: Well that may, Mr. Speaker. I am sure Your Honour does know what the question said, but I am sure that Hansard does not, and the argument for purposes of precedent is redundant if we do not record for posterity what the point is.

Mr. Speaker: All right. The hon. member will spend more time talking about it than reading the question. Will he then read the question?

Mr. Ben: How many housing units have been (a) bought; (b) built; (c) are at present under construction for Ontario Housing Corporation?

The second part was how many others, if any, are planned to be completed on or before December, 1969?

Mr. Speaker, I discussed it first of all in indignation; I discussed this matter with the hon. Minister. I say with indignation, because I expressed the opinion to him that if this could not be answered in 15 minutes by his department then both he and his department were idiots and should leave the office.

He stated that he had never seen this question but he made it clear that an answer could be provided, at the longest within 24 hours, and that was only with reference to the second part.

I question again your propriety; the propriety of you, Mr. Speaker, taking it upon yourself to decide which questions will be passed on through your office to the responsible department and which questions are going to be put on the order paper. I suggest it should be left to the Minister to rise in this House and state to the member asking the question that he cannot, on short notice, answer that question, and either request that it be put on the order paper or else say that he will take it as notice and answer it as soon as possible.

So I again raise the same objections, Mr. Speaker, as I raised in the first session.

Mr. Speaker: Of course, the hon. member will realize that questions asked before the orders of the day must be of urgent public importance. In my opinion the question which the hon. member read and the other questions which I also sent back and suggested be put on the order paper, were not of that type. Therefore, the Speaker is required by the rules to ensure that the questions that are asked are of urgent public importance.

Mr. Ben: Well, if I may, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will please give me the same courtesy that I extended to him and hear me out. Therefore, so far as I am concerned, the redirection that I suggested should be made and the Minister has nothing to do with it. I am advised, and I think it is correct, that the rule to which the hon. member is referring refers only to questions for the notice paper and not to the oral questions which are being dealt with now and which are covered by another rule.

I would be most pleased to discuss it with the member either now or in my office or his office. But I propose to ensure that the questions which are matters of public importance, but not urgent, do not clutter up the question hour but get themselves replied to by the ministry in the way provided by the rules.

I will say this—that last session I arranged with the office of the Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts), and I tried to do the same this time, that the questions on the order paper will be answered much more expeditiously than they have been sometimes in this House. Now that is the situation so far as Mr. Speaker is concerned. If the hon. member wishes to enlarge on it or speak further he has the floor.

Mr. Ben: I thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will just point out two points:

1. A member is bound to decide for himself whether a question is of public importance and there may be something within his knowledge that is not within the knowledge of the hon. Mr. Speaker.

2. The front page of the Toronto Star of Saturday contained a feature article pointing out the iniquities that have been arising out of public housing. Therefore, it is of public importance that we know in this House how many similar units there are, or are planned. It may not be of public importance in the Speaker's mind, but that is not our responsibility in the Opposition. But it—

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member—

Mr. Ben: I am not being sarcastic.

Mr. Speaker: No. Would the hon. member allow me to refresh his mind as to what I said?

I said that his questions were matter of public importance. I agree entirely.

But what I said was that the rules said they must be urgent public importance and I saw no urgency. I still see no urgency in that particular question.

Mr. Ben: At any rate, Mr. Speaker, I have made my submission.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. leader of the Opposition has a question of the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

First, do provincial regulations permit a list of preferred citizens exempt from municipal zoning by-laws, as is maintained in Toronto, according to Mr. Justice Haines?

Second, is the Minister undertaking an investigation into the matter and the possibility of a similar procedure in other municipalities?

Hon. W. D. McKeough (Minister of Municipal Affairs): The answer, Mr. Speaker, to the first part of the question is no; and to the second part of the question it is also no.

It appears that there may well be an appeal to the courts on this matter and I do not think it would be appropriate for us to investigate it until that has been determined.

Mr. Nixon: May I ask, Mr. Speaker—if the Minister will permit—if in fact the procedure of implementing the zoning by-laws is on a basis of provincial enabling legislation? If it is, then surely it is our responsibility to see that the municipality concerned does not step beyond the bounds of that enabling legislation.

The point is well taken: If there is an appeal to the courts on this matter then perhaps it would be as well to see what the courts have to say about it. But surely this is something that has been going on for some time and I would suggest that the Minister might well have undertaken a survey of the situation previously.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: No, I do not think so, Mr. Speaker. We pass a great deal of enabling legislation in this House on this matter and many other matters and I do not think it is up to us to peer over the shoulders of municipal councils across the province to see how they are interpreting that legislation. Presumably, that is the responsibility of the council involved and of the individual citizens.

Mr. Nixon: If I may further question the Minister, does he not believe, since the legislation is ours and it is, in his words, inept, that if it is not being used according to the spirit in which the Legislature and the government first proposed it, then it is up to us to see how it is being used and what we can do to improve it?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, I think that I can use a very simple comparison, perhaps not altogether appropriate, but we allow municipalities to pass by-laws under The Highway Traffic Act setting a speed limit on a certain street. We do not feel, in this Legislature, it is our responsibility to see whether that by-law is being obeyed or not.

Mr. Nixon: I would think, Mr. Speaker, if you will permit a further question, that I would ask the Minister if he would confer with his colleague, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Haskett), who does keep a very strict surveyance of what the municipalities do with their right to determine the local speed limits.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Perhaps.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I do not think either of us feels that our function, Mr. Speaker—to answer the third supplementary question—is to continually peer over the shoulders of municipal councils who are elected. There are protections for the citizens; the matter is before the courts and when the courts have settled this then perhaps we will take a look at it.

Mr. Nixon: The judge's comment is not "peering over the shoulders".

Mr. Singer: Perhaps the Minister should get Mr. Justice Haines to advise him.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sarnia has a question.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Attorney General. Will the Attorney General indicate what particular reasons the Crown Attorney for Ontario country, Bruce Affleck, has given for his twice requested delay in holding an inquest resulting from a train accident at Pefferlaw on March 16, 1968?

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, I have tried to check this matter since the hon. member's question arrived at my office. My understanding is that the Crown Attorney, Bruce Affleck, is not aware of this matter. Pefferlaw is in the county of York and Mr. Affleck is the Crown Attorney for Ontario county.

If the hon. member would give me the name of the deceased I will check the matter; if there is unusual delay I will find out why.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sandwich-Riverside.

Mr. F. A. Burr (Sandwich-Riverside): Mr. Speaker, a question of the Attorney General. Will the Attorney General consider the practicality of the use or development of tranquilizer bullets as a substitute for lethal bullets in the arming of police forces in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, Mr. Speaker, that is a very interesting suggestion. I will refer it to the Ontario Police Commission for their consideration.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Peterborough.

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Attorney General. Has the Attorney General received complaints about police action on the picket line in front of the Peterborough Examiner last Friday? If so, is any investigation being made of these complaints?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I have not received any complaints whatsoever.

Mr. Pitman: Is it true, Mr. Speaker, that the Attorney General was phoned in Sault Ste. Marie and told about the events that took place last Friday? I think he made the assurance at that time that he would be receiving some kind of briefing when he got back here on Monday; at least this was the statement that was made over the radio station in Peterborough.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, the only phone call was not a complaint. I was phoned by the local radio station operator last night from Sault Ste. Marie to Toronto to ascertain if I had received any complaints and I said, no; and I added if I got any information on the matter I would get in touch with him today. But so far I have not.

On my desk now is a copy of a telegram dated December 6, from Jack Dobson, asking that we launch an investigation into the matter. But I have not, up to this moment, received any complaints.

Mr. Pitman: Mr. Speaker, on the basis of the telegram would the Attorney General be carrying on an investigation?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I would like to look into the matter and see what it is all about.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Humber has questions.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Attorney General. Is the Attorney General aware of the circumstances surrounding the conviction of Douglas John Woods, who is alleged to have been induced to commit a crime by two Ontario Provincial Police officers, as reported in the Toronto Daily Star, December 7?

Has the Attorney General directed the Crown to prosecute these police officers?

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member for High Park, who has similar questions about a similar incident, I presume, would place his and they could be dealt with together.

Mr. Shulman: A portion, sir, of my question, has to do with that. May I place that portion now?

Mr. Speaker: Right.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, does the government intend to reimburse Douglas Woods for the time he has spent in jail and what charges does the Attorney General intend to lay against the two police officers who procured Douglas Woods to break into the Fort Severn arena?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to answer both the questions. I am quite familiar with the—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I am quite familiar with the matter.

Some time ago I obtained a transcript of the evidence in this case. I believe I answered a question in the House about it some time ago.

I do not propose to direct prosecution of the officers. I am aware of the fact that the Court of Appeal has set aside, or quashed a conviction.

I would add this: That I deplore the action of these police officers. It is—it was unusual. It is something that I think is not likely to occur again with respect to these officers. They have been severely reprimanded. I have examined, as I say, the transcript, with a view to considering whether action should be taken but the evidence, in our view, does not warrant the laying of a charge against the police officers and I think would not support a conviction.

I might enlarge upon that, anticipating perhaps, a supplementary question.

The charge would probably be conspiring to have a crime committed. Now the crime which Woods committed was breaking, entering and stealing an outboard motor. Police officers' evidence, as the transcript clearly indicates, discloses the fact that they were conducting an investigation of stolen goods and they asked if they might purchase a stolen motor. But that is a long way from saying, "Go and break in and steal the motor".

In short, the answer is: I will not be directing a prosecution. I think the evidence would not support the laying of a charge.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Speaker, would the Minister accept a supplementary question?

In view of the statement just made by the hon. Minister, what is his position on the practice of police departments of paying what they call informants, to purchase illegal liquor, or purchase illegally, liquor from what is called a bootlegger to enable them to obtain a conviction?

An hon. member: That is not a supplementary question.

Mr. Ben: Is the Minister prepared to order that those kind of activities cease?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I do not think I shall answer that, Mr. Speaker. The agent provocateur is used in liquor cases and that sort of thing and that evidence is quite admissible. But I do deplore, as I have said in answer to the question, police officers urging the commission of a crime in order to get a conviction. A crime has been committed by the bootlegger, that is a different matter.

Mr. Ben: Is not using an agent provocateur the same thing, Mr. Speaker, if I may ask that as another supplementary question?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has strayed very considerably now from his original question. If the Minister wishes to answer, it will be quite in order. If he does not, then perhaps the member for High Park has a supplementary question.

Mr. Shulman: Before I ask a supplementary question, I would like to have my first question answered.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I have answered the original question, and I would be able to discuss this at some length with the member.

Mr. Shulman: The Attorney General overlooked my first question. Does the government intend to reimburse Douglas Woods for the time he has spent in jail?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The answer is "no".

Mr. Shulman: In the form of a supplementary question to the second question which I have asked, Mr. Speaker, can the Attorney General inform me whether this caper—I can use that word—by the police officers was done on their own volition or whether they were following orders at a higher level on the police force?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I will accept this supplementary question. As I said, I have the full transcript of evidence here. It is quite apparent, I think, that one of these officers was very young, new on the force; the other was not a man of experience. They went about this apparently without any direction from above whatsoever, something they decided to carry out on their own, as far as I can take it from the evidence I have.

Mr. Shulman: May I put the third part of my question now?

Mr. Speaker: Yes, I think we should dispose of that question now.

Mr. Shulman: In view of recent cases in which legal aid was refused appellants on the ground that the appeal could not succeed—Rose Szego of Toronto and Douglas Woods of Port Severn—and yet in which successful appeals were subsequently launched without the assistance of legal aid, will the Attorney General intervene to see that such changes of personnel are made to ensure a more competent examination of cases under the legal aid system?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to intervene. A committee of this kind must use its judgment. I think it was free of partiality or any malice or anything of that sort. I would not for a moment suggest that every committee is right, that legal aid directors are always right in their decisions, but that they might be wrong on occasions does not mean they should be dismissed, or that the personnel should be replaced.

These are matters of judgment and I think judgment here was exercised reasonably and to the best of their ability. I do not think there is any suggestion here of incompetence. I would not think of changing the personnel, because in these two cases, in the opinion of the committee, there was not a proper case which entitled the appellants to legal aid.

Mr. Shulman: Will the Attorney General accept a supplementary question?

Would he not agree with me that it is very odd that both of these cases were appealed to Mr. Lawson, the head of the legal aid committee, and in both cases he said, "No, we won't give you help because you have no chance of winning". Yet one case was won even without the aid of a lawyer; a doctor went in and managed to win that particular case. The other case was won, I point out, by an NDP lawyer, so perhaps there is something wrong in this situation.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): An NDP doctor, too, it might be said.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: All I would suggest to the hon. member is that possibly—I do not know whether these particular cases could be further appealed—that is why we have courts of appeal to set these matters right—it is altogether possible cases might be appealed in another court and the original verdict restored. So I do not think that is a very cogent argument. I merely say that the legal aid committee exercised, I think, fair and proper judgment.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Humber has a further question of the Minister of Energy and Resources Management.

Mr. Ben: My question, Mr. Speaker, is: What is estimated to be the production cost per kilowatt hour of electric power from:

(1) The nuclear fuel plant at Douglas Point. And for the benefit of the Minister, that is the new one whose construction was just announced.

(2) The fossil-fuel plant at Bath, 22 miles west of Kingston?

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): Mr. Speaker, knowing that the average annual cost per kilowatt from electric generating stations varies over a wide range, dependent upon the actual station loading, the following are answers to the question:

(1) The production cost per kilowatt from Douglas Point generating station operated at high annual capacity factor has been estimated by the owner, Atomic Energy of Canada Ltd., to be approximately six mills per kilowatt hour. That is when the station has reached maturity as an operating unit.

In answer to the second question: The cost per kilowatt from the proposed coal-fired generating station near Bath based on (a) current costs for construction and coal, (b) 7 per cent interest charge on capital and (c) 80 per cent annual capacity factor, is estimated to be approximately 4.7 mills per kilowatt hour.

Mr. Ben: May I ask a supplementary question, because it was not the question I was asking. I was asking for the production cost, not the construction cost built into the production factor. What I want to know of the hon. Minister is the production cost per kilowatt hour aside from the cost, the capital cost of the plant?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, that is the production cost on both plants. That is the cost per kilowatt hour as it is produced.

Mr. Speaker: I believe what the hon. member is trying to get is the production cost without the inclusion of the capital cost. Perhaps the hon. Minister would see if he could ascertain that information and furnish it to the member.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: I do not know how you would estimate production cost without taking into consideration your capital cost, because that is a part of your cost and it varies with different plants. This is why it has to be based that way. A coal-fired plant is the cheapest plant they can build. The next is atomic energy and the most expensive is hydraulic, in the actual construction. But then it varies as you have to buy fuel to operate these plants.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Speaker, you are correct in your assumption. I think it is well known that hydro power is the cheapest source of power, next is nuclear and then comes fossil fuel. The Minister obviously is including the capital cost into it. I want the answer the way you said I wanted it, Mr. Speaker, and I would appreciate receiving it tomorrow.

Mr. Speaker: Well, I believe the Minister will supply it.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, but I cannot get any answer for tomorrow because the hon. member said "nuclear" is the second cheapest. Now he has no proof of that and no one else has because they will not know what the life of a nuclear plant is until such plant has been operated for at least 30 years. Hydro are basing their cost on a 30-year life of these plants. Well, now, who knows? There has not been a plant operating 30 years so it would be impossible for me to get that answer.

Mr. Ben: The estimated cost then!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Brantford—I am sure the hon. Minister will endeavour to provide the figures. They may not be accurate but they will be an estimation.

The hon. member for Brantford.

Mr. M. Makarchuk (Brantford): I have a question of the hon. Minister of Energy and Resources Management:

What plans have been made by the Minister to build dams on the Grand River between Galt and the mouth of the river?

What plans have been made by the Minister to restore navigation on the Grand River between the mouth of the river and Brantford?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, the responsibility for the preparation of plans for dam construction rests with the Grand River conservation authority. I understand the authority has had an engineering survey made of one dam between Galt and the mouth of the river, but it has not yet been submitted as a project to our department.

The answer to the second part of the question is "none".

Mr. Makarchuk: By way of a supplementary question in relation to the second part of the question: Does the Minister plan to have any plans made to restore navigation on the river? Or does he intend to investigate this further?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, I think that investigation would rest with the conservation authority. As yet we have had no request to study it or investigate it.

Mr. Makarchuk: A question of the Minister of Correctional Services:

What steps are being taken by the Minister to replace the jail in Brant county, as recommended by the most recent and earlier grand jury reports?

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): Mr. Speaker, after taking over responsibility for the complete operation of county and city jails, my department instituted a task force to survey the jails and their facilities. This task force reported to me recommending a priority list of replacements and I made this public on October 29. On that date I announced that planning would begin immediately for the replacement of the Carleton county jail with a modern regional detention centre.

I also indicated that in accordance with the task force recommendations, priority in the replacement programme would be given to five other areas. These areas are Halton and Peel, Hamilton, London, Niagara and Metropolitan Toronto. In addition to recommendations for replacement, the task force made recommendations with respect to interim repairs and improvements which should be made in jails not slated for immediate replacement.

I can assure the hon. member that it is the government's intention to replace all outmoded jails in the province, including the Brant county jail. As I have just indicated, the task force has not recommended top priority for the replacement of the Brant county jail. However, as recommended by that task force, we have so far replaced kitchen equipment and started a programme of other necessary repairs to the Brant county jail.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Wentworth.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I withdraw that question at this time.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough East.

Mr. T. Reid (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Education.

In view of the recurrent complaint by most of the 72 main speakers at the 10th annual conference of the Ontario Education Research Council at the Royal York Hotel this weekend, that while pupils are naturally falling in with the active discovery patterns of learning encouraged in the Hall-Dennis report, the real problem is teacher acceptance of these educationally sound techniques, will the Minister urgently consider diverting funds and giving a higher communications priority to in-service teacher instruction, curriculum updating and professional teacher development courses than they presently possess?

Second, in particular, will the Minister consider diverting some of the current ETV production from the primary pupil level—where comparable or better programming is abundant—to the professional level where there is a great dearth of suitable material? And, within the transmission time pattern now available to him, will he allot the most suitable times to this type of broadcast?

Hon. W. G. Davis (Minister of Education): Mr. Speaker, I am going to take this question as notice, but just thinking from memory there are two or three things I think can be said in answer to this question:

First, the department gives a very high priority to the question of in-service courses and the whole question of the acceptance by the professional teacher of changing curriculum and teaching methods. At the present moment we have some 140 programme consultants within the department, and this is one of their prime functions.

There are some 45 curriculum committees and on the 45 curriculum committees there are a number of teacher representatives who are dealing with curriculum on a day-to-day basis with the thought, of course, that this is then more easily translated to the active professions. This past summer we had some 15,000 teachers who were involved in the summer course training programmes that relate to the very question the hon. member is raising.

And, of course, in the last two or three years — and this has been one of the very encouraging developments — I think in this current year some 6,000 teachers are involved in the in-service training programmes offered by the boards. As the larger units of administration begin their activities in a few weeks then more boards will be able to offer this type of service.

With respect to ETV, Mr. Speaker, I believe that last year there were some two series of programmes relating to this particular question. With respect to this year in ETV there will be nine series with some 65 programmes, and the times allocated are basically those of a Saturday morning when we feel the teacher, perhaps, has the freest amount of time available.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Brantford had a question of the Attorney General.

Mr. Makarchuk: I have a question of the hon. Attorney General. In view of the fact that in some cases people have been forced to wait in the streets because of inadequate family court facilities at Brantford, what steps are being taken by The Attorney General's Department to improve the facilities?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I know that the family court facilities at Brantford are not as adequate or complete as we would like them. We have been able to improve the magistrates' court area there, and we are much concerned with the other as we are in several areas of the province with court facilities which just came to our responsibility this year.

Just as soon as we have the funds they will be improved, and this goes for other places besides Brantford. We are working toward that objective as quickly as we can.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Timiskaming.

Mr. D. Jackson (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Development.

In view of the Minister's statement in March, 1967, when details of the HOME programme were unveiled, that 6,000 to 7,000 HOME lots would be available in 1967 — Globe and Mail, March 18, 1967 — and his further statement that 6,000 lots would be offered in 1968 — Toronto Star, February 1, 1968 — can the Minister explain why only 3,316 lots have been offered in the 22 months since the programme was announced according to statistics given in an OHC press release dated November 22, 1968?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I will take the question as notice and get the information for the hon. member, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Yorkview.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Minister of Trade and Development.

On what date did the Ontario Housing Corporation make its original offer to Renmore Development Limited for the purchase of land in Waterloo county? On what date was the deal closed?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Speaker, in answer to the question the agreement to purchase was dated April 30, 1968.

The transaction was closed in two sections: (a) Section 1 — June 30, 1968, for 282.937 acres; (b) Section 2 — July 10, 1968, for 62.842 acres; for a total of 345.779 acres.

I have questions from two other members, Mr. Speaker. Will I answer them now?

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps we will finish today's questions; we have one more question from the hon. member for Scarborough East.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs, in two parts.

1. Does the consumer protection division of the Minister's department investigate the complaints of apartment lessees who have leases broken unilaterally by the lessors?

2. Has the consumer protection division investigated any complaints against Haver & Sons construction company who lease apartments at 875 Kennedy Road, Scarborough?

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the first part of the question, the consumer protection division has looked into this type of complaint on request and has, through discussion and moral suasion, obtained some degree of success on behalf of tenants.

In answer to the second part of the question—the answer is “no”.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of Trade and Development has answers to questions asked earlier.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Speaker, I have an answer here to a question from the hon. member for Humber (Mr. Ben) of a few days ago.

Over the past six months Ontario Housing Corporation has issued lease termination notices to 524 of its 8,042 tenants in Metropolitan Toronto. Of these 524 notices, 512 were for arrears of rent. The remaining 12 are classified as follows: Withholding information regarding income, one; violation of minimum standards by-law, one; bad house-keeping, coupled with anti-social behaviour, one; rental arrears coupled with other lease violations, nine.

In 71 cases the tenants complied with the notice to vacate and left the premises of their own volition. In 12 cases it has been necessary to obtain an order for possession through the courts. In the remaining 441 cases the leases were reinstated, as the tenants made satisfactory arrangements to settle their rental accounts.

It should be noted that in the case of rental delinquency a lease termination notice is issued automatically if, despite repeated attempts on the part of management to effect a settlement, the tenant fails to respond.

In those instances where a notice is issued for a reason other than rental delinquency, authorization has to be obtained from the board of directors of Ontario Housing Corporation. This same board approval is necessary in all cases before an order for possession is sought.

Where a tenant receives a notice to vacate because of rental arrears, he has recourse through his project supervisor or the regional manager, and the notice is rescinded if the tenant makes suitable arrangements to settle his account. For cause other than rental arrears, the same procedure for appeal applies, or the tenant may communicate directly with the chairman or managing director of Ontario Housing Corporation so that the matter may be brought before the board of directors.

Then I have an answer to a question from the hon. member for Sudbury East (Mr. Martel).

The geared-to-income rental scale applicable to all Ontario—

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. Minister would let me inquire if the NDP wish this question answered in the member's absence. I do not see the hon. member for Sudbury East.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Do they want the question answered now?

The geared-to-income rental scale applicable to all Ontario Housing Corporation developments throughout the province is a scale which has national application and can only be amended with the concurrence of the federal government which bears 50 per cent of the operating subsidies. It is not a question of policy on the part of Ontario Housing Corporation.

With the approval of the federal government the present scale was frozen as at May 1 of this year, based on the family income of the tenant at that date. However, in the event of reduced income caused through illness, unemployment, and so on, rental reductions are still being applied.

The purpose in applying the freeze was to permit an interim period during which a study could be undertaken which would indicate what revisions, if any, to the current scale should be introduced. As part of this study it had been suggested that a rental ceiling should be considered which would be related to market rent for a particular type and size of accommodation within each municipality. This part of the study has been concluded, but it does not appear that such a ceiling, because of the many variable factors, would be practicable. Nevertheless, discussions are continuing with Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation with a review, to a more complete review, of the national rental scale now being carried out.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Grey South.

Mr. E. A. Winkler (Grey South): Mr. Speaker, if I may briefly, on a privilege, I would like to rise and say that the presentation on members' desks today is from the Georgian Bay Fruit Growers Association. Half of them are MacIntosh Reds and the other half are Red Delicious, both Canada's finest. I am proud to represent these producers who send them with their compliments and best wishes.

Mr. Speaker: When I heard the announcement I was hoping that they would all be MacIntosh apples, but apparently some strangers have gotten in. Also, as I watched the hon. members for Prince Edward-Lennox (Mr. Whitney) and for Riverdale (Mr. J. Renwick) enjoying these apples I was reminded of a news item in the paper last week where a member of the House of Commons at Westminster was enjoying the much with a crunch in the Houses of Parliament in Westminster. And at that time, while there was no ruling made, it was felt that the members in question should have had their lunch before they came to the House.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Speaker. The reason that the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. R. S. Smith) and I did not get an apple is because we are not apple polishers.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence (Minister of Mines): No real bite!

Mr. Speaker: I would rather suspect that someone reached the desk first.

Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The first order; resuming the adjourned debate on the amendment to the amendment to the motion for an address in reply to the speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor at the opening of the session.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. R. T. Potter (Quinte): Mr. Speaker, this is only the second Throne Debate in which I have had the opportunity of participating, and I must say I am disappointed to note that there is no mention made in the Speech from the Throne of proposed changes in either our hospital care or welfare programmes. I sincerely hope I will not have to emulate my good friend the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha) and make these suggestions an annual event.

Certainly I hope I will not still be expounding on the same issues eight or ten years from now.

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): The hon. member will not be here that long.

Mr. Potter: Do not kid yourself; just do not kid yourself!

Mr. T. P. Reid: He will still be on the back benches!

Hon. A. F. Lawrence (Minister of Mines): That is not necessarily so.

An hon. member: Voice of experience.

Mr. T. P. Reid: There is only room for one now.

Mr. Potter: Maybe you could tell me who is supposed to be making this speech?

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): The Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) just walked out.

Mr. Potter: I feel though, that since these are the issues that—

Interjection by an hon. member.

An hon. member: The member for Montreal is speaking.

Mr. Potter: The third party continues to flounder just like they have ever since they were established.

Mr. Shulman: He must be reading the wrong speech.

Mr. Potter: I feel though, that since these are the issues that prompted me to seek a seat in this Legislature, I must continue to try and impress our members with the urgent need for a complete review and re-vamping of these programmes. I do not believe I need to go into great detail at this time. This is already recorded in Hansard from one of my previous speeches. But last week, Mr. Speaker, the member for Riverdale (Mr. J. Renwick) gave us a very disturbing account of the difficulties an unfortunate individual in his riding, has been experiencing for the last number of years. I do not believe, Mr. Speaker, that there is any member in this Legislature who could not relate a similar instance in his own riding, if he cared to do so.

Earlier this year I introduced a resolution that nursing homes should be included in benefits under OHSC. At that time I stated that this was one of the two great gaps in our otherwise excellent health programme. The other was the lack of subsidisation of OHSC premiums for those in the lower-income brackets. During the past summer I had occasion to speak to some university students on this subject and apparently, I scandalized some people by suggesting that doctors could find it necessary to lie in their long-stay reports in order to ensure that their patients receive necessary care.

We have heard from the member for Riverdale a classic example of what happens to a patient when the doctors concerned put in a completely honest report. Frankly, I am tired of government officials quoting statistics instead of facing realities. I am surprised that the hon. member got the answer he did from the department. I am surprised that he was not told that his problem was non-existent, that we have plenty of accommodation for this type of patient, because statistics prove it.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, I wonder how much longer it will be before we can eliminate this type of "ostrich thinking" and begin to make some of these badly needed reforms.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Potter: Mr. Speaker, this seems to be the year for reading letters and I do not want anybody to think that I do not get letters too.

Perhaps I should start by saying "Dear Doctor Potter". This letter came to me on October 27 from the doctor located in a different part of the province than that from which I come; I do not know him and I still do not know who he is, but I thought you would be interested in what he had to say. He said:

I have read with considerable interest the report in the August 26 edition of the Globe and Mail regarding your emphasis on the need for more chronic beds for Ontario.

I do agree that this province woefully lacks beds for chronic patients and the elderly infirm. We have an acute bed shortage in our hospital, yet there are many chronically ill patients who are occupying these beds while awaiting chronic beds. Whenever possible, if the patient's condition permits, we try to use nursing home facilities which are not plentiful in themselves. Many patients cannot afford the extra cost, and many who perhaps have some savings, object to having to pay for nursing home care, feeling that this should be covered by OHSC.

As far as doctors lying on long stay forms is concerned, I would not exactly agree with this.

And, Mr. Speaker, I would just like you to listen to this.

As you know the delineation between active and chronic care is extremely fine, and I would think that perhaps many of us have interpreted towards active care in some situations where perhaps if more chronic beds may have been available, another interpretation may have been derived.

In other words, "we are not lying we are just changing our diagnosis".

I agree with you that our active hospital bed shortage would be greatly relieved if more chronic beds and nursing homes were built, along with OHSC coverage for nursing homes. I do appreciate your efforts to introduce such legislation.

As I have stated before, Mr. Speaker, due to the tremendous programme developed by our Department of Health, particularly over the past 15 years, we are rapidly approaching the stage when we will have sufficient active treatment beds to properly look after the actually ill patient in this province.

But let us not make any mistake, we will continue to have enough beds as long as we make sure that they are used for the purpose for which they are constructed and that is, for active acutely ill patients. We cannot afford to maintain long-stay patients of a convalescent or chronic nature in this type of accommodation. I know that OHSC is expanding its facilities but when it is so vital that we stretch every tax dollar as far as possible, then we must accelerate our programme to provide accommodation for this type of patient more economically.

I emphatically believe that this can be done by constructing more chronically ill hospitals and by having rehabilitation wings associated with our active treatment hospitals today. I am convinced that any patient, whether he suffers from accidental injuries, heart attack, stroke, or is recuperating from major surgery, would make a much faster recovery under these conditions.

It was intimated in the Throne Speech that changes in our health programme are anticipated.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): How about doctors' fees going up?

Mr. Potter: They are going up too. I had hoped, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister would seriously consider extending OHSC coverage to nursing homes and would consider the subsidisation of OHSC premiums in the same manner as provided by OMSIP. It is ridiculous to suggest that a person who is unable to provide his own medical insurance could possibly afford to pay for hospital insurance without similar assistance.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that these two changes are of prime importance. It was encouraging to read in Thursday's paper of last week that the hon. Minister had requested the universities to develop some kind of a speed-up programme in order to qualify more physicians over the next few years. You may recall that I made such a suggestion last July 15 when I spoke on this subject in the House. I must admit it was disappointing to read that the response of the deans of medicine was lukewarm, to say the least. There is no question whatever that we must find a solution to this problem.

I fully appreciate the necessity of maintaining the highest possible standards of medical training in our province but at the same time I appreciate the tremendous role that research plays in such a programme. But we must keep our perspective. What we need right now is a large number of well-qualified general practitioners.

Surely this goal can be achieved with the excellent training schools we have in the province? What can be accomplished in wartime can certainly be accomplished now. It is not an insurmountable difficulty, and the only question is—when are we going to begin?

With regard to our welfare programme, Mr. Speaker, may I again suggest that we concentrate our efforts on rehabilitating people rather than merely supporting them. We must find ways to provide jobs to make them self-supporting, responsible individuals again.

At the same time, may I suggest we take a more realistic view of our pensions, and consider practical changes to bring them more in line with present day values? Our present guidelines are completely outmoded and sadly in need of revision. Mr. Speaker, the case cited to us last week is a perfect example of what happens. We have a man whose income is sufficient to keep himself and his wife, providing he does not have to pay extra for her care in a nursing home.

Under the regulations today, he does not qualify for assistance because his income is too great. But if he were to give up his job and use what savings he has, then our department is quite prepared to take him over and keep both of them. I have a similar instance in my own riding of a widow with several children who is determined to work and raise her own family. Now that they are of school age, she has found she needs some additional assistance.

The case worker who saw this woman was very sympathetic. She realized she must have more money, but under the regulations she is making too much money now to qualify. Her suggestion was "Don't work so hard; only work half the number of hours, then you are eligible for assistance and you will be making more money than you are making today."

Mr. Speaker, it is for this reason that I say that our programme is sadly in need of revision.

The Throne Speech, Mr. Speaker, has been referred to us as an austerity programme, but I would suggest that in reality it is a programme based on sound economics. First of all, I would like to congratulate the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. MacNaughton) for his timely remarks on how Ontario is applying the brakes.

I am sure that by far the majority of us in this House, and indeed in the province, will agree that it is time that we completely review all expenditures in the manner suggested by him. At the same time, we must give careful study to future plans and, as he has stated, decide first of all if each suggested programme is really necessary at the present time.

I am sure that many of these things that have been planned can be either postponed or cancelled without any undue hardships. When it has been decided definitely that a particular project should be proceeded with, then, as the hon. Minister has suggested, we must ask ourselves if the necessary financing can be assisted by a cut-back on any existing programme, or if the costs can be reduced by making use of any existing facilities.

I might revive once again the suggestion that we have all heard from time to time that we develop a more economical type of construction for our schools. Are all the expensive frills really necessary? Do they really add sufficiently to the quality of our education to justify the added expense? Like all taxpayers I am anxious to see just how serious our departments are about adopting this enlightened, common-sense programme.

Certainly, if we review our financial status we will find that the few socialist programmes we have adopted over the years have proven to be very expensive indeed, and would appear to be more costly than are warranted by any benefits that have been derived from them.

One may argue that the basic shelter exemption has helped the lower income group, but as far as I am concerned the cost has far exceeded the benefits. Not only are we subsidizing the wealthy but we include foreign property owners, many of whom find that they are provided with tax-free summer cottages by our benevolent government.

Far too many landlords are raising rents if tenants ask for their rebate, and we find as great abuses of this plan as we have seen with the student loan and grant programme. In my opinion, this leads to the conclusion that the plan warrants a darn good, hard, second look.

While we find ourselves looking over our shoulder at this latest of our socialist programmes, we again hear rumblings of our government being forced to abandon party principles and policies, and accept the federal government's Medicare plan to subsidize everyone, regardless of need.

Last week, the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nixon) once again urged our government to adopt the federal scheme. I do not know why; his reasoning is hard for me to understand. When he promotes Medicare, he is promoting the subsidization of the wealthy before those in need are given assistance with their hospital insurance and before the disabled and handicapped are provided with sufficient funds for a reasonable living standard. I am disappointed, because I was confident he would carefully examine each issue objectively, and not blindly allow party unity to take precedence over public interest.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): I would never do that.

Mr. Potter: Mr. Speaker, the Medicare programme, like OMSIP, is concerned only with medical services, services that are supplied by a medical doctor. When I was discussing the shortage of hospital facilities for certain types of patients, I was referring to the Ontario Hospital Services Commission, which concerns itself with hospital facilities in Ontario and which needs revision. Our medical services insurance programme ranks among the best in the world.

Mr. Speaker, our housing programme alone presents a much greater challenge than medical care in Ontario. If we can bring all these areas I have referred to up to the high standard we have achieved with our medical insurance plan, then we will have accomplished a great deal indeed. The federal government would be well advised to study Ontario's present system in this field and could undoubtedly improve upon their own scheme accordingly.

Today in Ontario, Mr. Speaker, we have one of the most advanced educational programmes in the world. We are the proud possessors of 20 colleges of applied arts and technology. When the plans were made for these colleges, the Minister was anxious to leave control of their management in local hands; the boards were to be appointed locally, and the feeling was, and still is, that if the colleges attain their goal of serving the community and meeting its needs, then control must be made in the hands of a local board.

Unfortunately, in some cases we find an abuse of these powers. Not enough consideration is given to control of expenditures, and perhaps there is too great a desire to grow. I believe a review of some of these institutions would show that the cost per student, particularly in administrative staff, is far out of line.

In addition, while I am on the subject, I would like to suggest that consideration be given to transferring all types of education, including that of student nurses, to The Department of Education. I believe it would be more economical to provide facilities to teach nurses in the community colleges during their first two years of training than to provide teaching facilities in connection with the hospitals.

I understand that under the new system for the first two years the girls don't go near the hospitals, anyway. Consideration might be given to changes of this nature to determine what savings could be effected. If this system were to be instituted, I believe that we would be able to make available better-qualified instructors, because their time would be distributed amongst the various groups of students.

Mr. Speaker, I understand that there are already in the province two or three areas where they are doing this. But it is being done on a purely local basis, where the local hospital board is making arrangements for this instruction to go on at the community college level. I think the time has come when it should be established as a department policy.

While this review of expenditures is taking place, Mr. Speaker, I think it might be well to review the civil service generally. Over the years, it seems to me that there has been a growing tendency by the civil service to assume responsibility that should remain solely in the hands of government.

Far too often, I have had complaints from some citizens that they have been subjected to some uncivil service indeed, at the hand of some government employees. Many times, I, myself, have found their attitude to be overbearing, to put it mildly. It seems to me to be only practical to suggest that the government should run a course in public relations for all such personnel. Perhaps we can give consideration to a plan that would require more careful screening of prospective employees to assure that they are capable of meeting and dealing with the public tactly. I feel that these qualities, Mr. Speaker, are of as great importance as efficiency and ability.

One of the most significant and encouraging of all the Prime Minister's (Mr. Roberts') statements, is that pollution of all kinds will be of first priority. As the hon. leader of the Opposition stated last week, OWRC often finds itself in the unhappy situation whereby the only solution to the problem of pollution of an area appears to be the closing down of a particular plant. This fact must be faced, and a suitable alternative found, since we have all agreed that pollution must be stopped today, or our country will not be fit to live in tomorrow. Indeed, there are already some very questionable areas. I trust that in line with the Treasurer's announced plans, we are now past the talking stage and will see some positive and productive action.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that I was very heartened when our Prime Minister announced that his government has no intention of taxing places of worship or of extending the sales tax to food and children's clothing. We are all aware of the important studies on taxation that have been carried on by the Smith committee and the White committee, and the recommendation that they have made to our government. But I sincerely hope, in view of the announcement of our Provincial Treasurer that spending is carefully scrutinized, that a careful review will be made of all departments before consideration is given to any increase in present taxation or the introduction of any new means of raising tax money.

Mr. Speaker: Order, the hon. member for Port Arthur has the floor. Perhaps we will give him a hearing.

Mr. R. H. Knight (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, "kechet-wah-wan-dah-gozewin", in the Ojibway Indian language, means "dignity" or "honour". The importance our original Canadians attached to this quality of man, I think, is apparent from the length of the word "ketchetwahwandahgoozewin"; 24 letters in eight syllables, which, broken down and analyzed, means: "Worthy of great respect".

Just as you, sir, are concerned with upholding the dignity of the legislative procedures in this chamber and I would say, have done so excellently, my remarks in this Throne Speech Debate today will be concerned with the dignity of life in Ontario in 1968.

And well every member of this assembly might spend just a few moments considering with me the respectability of this society we are building for ourselves: a society which sees the dignity of those time-honoured institutions of old age, family, motherhood, parenthood, church and government under assault by an army of ill-guided professors and philosophers, disillusioned youth, unscrupulous commercial enterprisers, spineless religious leaders, confused, incompetent politicians, high-tax, high-cost, high-credit weary adults and merciless news media which tell everything, no matter how personal or how damaging the way it is.

Yes, our society, where growing old means relegation to loneliness and uselessness unless of course you have the money or the social stature, to end your years in dignity.

Our society, where students are allowed to be misguided by subversive militants or professors to use their education and their numbers to defy, to disgrace and to scare the very ones who bought their education, their affluence and their present freedom at heroic expense. Where is their respect?

Our society, sir, where many a man can't afford the current price of a home of his own or to rent for that matter; and, if he takes to a home on wheels, yes, a mobile home like my own, sir, he finds hardly a municipality where he is permitted to park it and live in dignity.

Our society, where a couple with more than two children are called fools. Dignity?

Our society, where a man who gets up to give his seat on the subway to a woman is scoffed at by others as an oddball. Where has the dignity of womanhood gone?

Our society, where a single moment of human weakness is a sufficient thing to see one's good name splattered like mud across the page of a newspaper or thousands of TV screens. How vulnerable the shield of dignity is, in—in our society, where the majority cannot afford the high costs, and high taxes, which are today the price of dignity.

Our society, where the personal privacy of an individual's social records: medical, credit, educational, legal and employment may be invaded by anyone with the right connections.

Sir, the list of indignities this society inflicts upon the people is too long for me to read off here, of course, and I know every member here has his own little batch to elaborate on. But those are some of my current observations.

Those I represent in this Legislature, the people of Port Arthur riding, along with their neighbours in Fort William, have a whole new kind of indignity staring them in the face at this time. The indignity of being considered by this Robarts' government, through the Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. McKeough), as not being intelligent enough to decide through a democratic vote whether or not their cities will be united into one super-city of one hundred and twenty thousand people.

The Minister of Municipal Affairs says, "no plebiscite", and he has repeated it often, it is up to this assembly to decide. He is right. Ultimately this Legislature must decide. But is not knowing definitely how the Lakehead people feel about this vital decision something we should arm ourselves with before we, as the elected body, decide? What is wrong with that? Is the Minister afraid the people, the taxpayers will turn his great dream down? Does he dare to insult the intelligence of my people in this way? They want to vote. Many have already told him so by petition; and there will be many pleading for that democratic privilege before this is over.

What makes him and his government continue to say "no"? Is it really courage, wisdom, and political responsibility? I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, it is nothing more than sheer fear and a lack of knowledge and understanding of Lakehead people.

And I notify the Minister, sir, here and now that Lakehead people, whether for or against amalgamation, feel they have the right to decide this proposed unity by a plebiscite. This is what so many have asked me to tell this House. And I warn the Minister, through you, Mr. Speaker, that if they are not allowed to vote on it, they will be launched on this new municipal course with the confirmed belief and shame that it was forced upon them by a government who did not think them intelligent enough or progressive enough to accept it on their own.

And what is just as bad, Lakeheaders are aware that many people down in southern Ontario and other parts of Canada believe Lakehead people would have to be legislated into this amalgamation whether they like it or not and that is the only way it will ever be done. How humiliating for those proud independent-minded people in Port Arthur and Fort William. How undignified. I am asking this House to give Lakeheaders the opportunity to prove they do not have to be forced by legislation into progress.

Let them make the decision and eradicate these totally wrong conceptions. A plebiscite on the simple principle of uniting Fort William, Port Arthur, Neebing and parts of Shuniah into a single super-city in one referendum involving all of the qualified voters from the four municipalities is the way to do it and the only way.

The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs in his statement to this House concerning regional government last week said:

One of the cardinal principles we are following during implementation is the meaningful involvement of the local communities. Our desire for local participation is such that we will, in some cases, endure delays in the establishing process in order to give local opinion time to form and express itself.

Meaningful involvement! How can there be meaningful involvement by a people who know they have been forced into something with no regard for their community pride and dignity? Further in his statement the Minister said:

In a very real sense, the entire programme of regional government will fail if the people in the region are not convinced of the programme's merits. These are the people who will have to live with and run the regions once they are established.

Beautiful, sensible language — but words — that is all it is — words. And hypocritical words at that. To insult these people as not being intelligent enough to understand. To fly in the face of their requests for involvement in the decision, and then to state the success of the whole venture swings on their willingness to participate has got to be either sheer stupidity or hypocrisy.

I heard the Premier (Mr. Robarts) himself on TV the other day saying: "We want to get the government closer to the people." Well, I can assure you, sir, dictating Port Arthur and Fort William and their neighbouring municipalities into unity is the way to force government upon the people, but it is no way to bring the people up there closer to the government.

Mr. Speaker, this is a shotgun wedding. My people are being corralled into a new way of life. It is no way to start a marriage.

Let me be absolutely clear. As a resident of the Lakehead and a broadcast news editor I have been on record for nine years as of December 15 as being in favour of amalgamation of the Lakehead cities. I put my neck on the line long ago; but mine was a cause and a way of education and democratic debate and procedure. Never would I think of forcing my views upon my adopted people. It was a difficult row to hoe and I found myself cornered on my position at many public meetings. And just when we battlers for the big Lakehead city had the majority of people thinking our way, along comes the Minister of Municipal Affairs to spoil the whole shebang with his dictatorial ideas, and that is what I submit to this House.

The hon. Minister, sir, is spoiling the whole thing. Believe me, Mr. Speaker, the Lakehead people need the boost a new city hall will give them as proposed in the Eric Hardy report. It can be the big wholesome new thrust that will open up the great northwest of Ontario and I sincerely believe that. The government and the Minister of Municipal Affairs are right there, but Lakeheaders are proud independent people, who, along with their ancestors, have had the courage to tackle that new frontier up there when many others preferred the affluent society of the south, and when everything else seemed gone, they have always had that self-respect, that independence, yes, that great community dignity. To deprive them of the right, the privilege, the opportunity of expressing it on amalgamation, where so much of their lives and their money are at stake, is an insult to them. To state many other communities in Ontario will have to submit to the same kind of legislation, is just not good enough and I have heard that said by representatives on the other side. Lakeheaders are not the same as everyone else. They have their own brand of attitudes and community ways and are entitled to individual attention on a matter of this importance. Is this not true of every community in Ontario?

Mr. Speaker, I am obviously not opposed to Lakehead amalgamation. What I oppose is the way this government is proposing to implement it. I, too, want the fullest cooperation of the people. It is their community. They will have to live with it. They will have to pay for it. Surely they must be allowed to decide. If they are not, so many will want no part of it. So many will consider the beautiful big new city like a sour pill to swallow. Lakeheaders must be trusted to vote on this and this is what is lacking, trust. I trust them, and I want amalgamation. Why cannot this government trust them so far?

I have the word of the leaders of those opposing amalgamation that if the new Lakehead city idea is approved in a vote of Lakehead people, they will stop their opposition and join in this new effort to build the Lakehead area. I will stand on that.

Even now a giant petition is being circulated at the Lakehead requesting a vote on amalgamation. But the organizers are afraid the Minister will get his legislation through this House before the petition has been completed. I ask the Minister, even though he is not in the House, through you, Mr. Speaker, and through Hansard: Will he delay introduction of that legislation long enough for that petition to arrive here at the seat of government? If that petition does not back up my arguments here today, then we will have to conclude that he was right, and I was wrong. And we know how Lakehead people can put petitions together when they feel strongly enough. There were 12,700 names on the last one I brought to this House.

So, Mr. Speaker, my plea today is for the dignity of Lakehead people. Once again I ask this Minister to let them vote on amalgamation or to at least delay the legislation long enough for the petition to prove how much the people there want the plebiscite.

Mr. Speaker, true dignity is so intently sought in many other areas of our society. Perhaps the most glowing example today is the Canadian Indian. Hardly a newscast or a newspaper goes by without a story on the deprivation of our original Canadians. And yet, here is a people who once could have taught us many great lessons about human dignity, a people who honoured and included their elders to such an exalted degree in their society, and who held leadership, God, motherhood, family and self-respect at such a high place of importance.

To see the name of his people slipped so low in the esteem of today's civilized world is perhaps the greatest difficulty a Canadian Indian has to face; to me that is at the source of his problem. I know so many Indian friends who are ashamed to be an Indian. That must be a most difficult emotion to cope with, to be ashamed of one's own race.

Recently I learned of some Canadian Indian ancestry of my own, and I was extremely proud to realize that I had the blood of not only the two founding races—English and French—in me, but that of our original Canadians as well.

I immediately sought out a book on the Ojibway Indian language, it took me a year to find one, and then I set about learning it. But do you know that when my 11-year-old daughter, who is learning Indian with me, began trying it out on her schoolmates, she was called "a half-breed" and laughed at, in an Ontario school. As she cried her story out to me, later in the day I suddenly was able to identify a little bit better with our Canadians of Indian origin.

Mr. Speaker, nonetheless I must say here I am really proud to live at a time in Canada, in Ontario, when so many Canadians are starting to realize the Indian fact and so many are trying to do something about it. Part of my personal contribution will be to learn the Canadian Indian language which I have already found reveals so much about this wonderful race.

And I would like to do something in this exalted Chamber of hierarchy in which I am proud and privileged to find myself today which I hope will be interpreted by my Indian friends back home and other Indians, as a positive genuine effort to lift their heads and their spirits to a renewed self-respect and pride in what they are. I respect them and I honour them.

"Wa-ge-mah-we-yun, me-uhpe-zheg-wuh-che o-ke-chet-wah-wa-ne-maun ke-uh-nish-e-nah-bag-me-naun uh-yoon o-pee-duh-muh-waun uh-nish-e-nah-ba-moo-win oo-oo mah-wun-jee-de-wing en-an-dal-gwud."

That, Mr. Speaker, is my personal effort in our Ojibway Indian language, which might stand to be improved on in some places.

The translation: Sir, the time has come to honour our Canadian Indian people by introducing the Indian language in the Legislature.

I reiterate that I hope this effort will be accepted as a gesture of friendship toward our Canadian Indian people, and that it will indicate to them that one elected member of this House considered their language of origin worthy to be introduced in the highest legislative chamber in this province.

Mr. Speaker, the highest goal of our procedures must be to uphold and strengthen the dignity of all the people of Ontario. My plea today has been for dignity. Thank you.

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): Mr. Speaker, I rise with some diffidence today. You may recall that last year in my speech at this time I spoke, perhaps, over-long and I wandered over many subjects and there was some criticism for that reason. I thought that this year I would avoid that type of criticism by restricting my comments very briefly to perhaps one department.

I had a bit of a problem in deciding which department to talk about because there are a number there on the front bench who invite a few mild comments, and the front benches are a little empty today.

But of the two members in the front bench who are seated here today, one of them certainly, I felt, should have the benefit of a few of my kind words of advice. So I did prepare a few comments about The Department of Correctional Services; but then I thought about The Attorney General's Department, Mr. Speaker, and the way the courts are run. I felt perhaps I should make a few brief comments about The Attorney General's Department. And then I thought about the Minister of Energy and Resources Management (Mr. Simonett) and it was such a problem that I finally decided we would do this democratically, Mr. Speaker.

So I sent to every member of the Opposition, Liberal as well as NDP, a questionnaire. I asked their help, and the questionnaire read:

To all members of the Opposition: I need your help for a survey for use in reply to the Throne Speech and I would appreciate a reply to the question below:

In your opinion, which provincial government ministry is run most inefficiently?

I am delighted that I received so many replies and I will give you the results of my survey, Mr. Speaker, so you can understand how I chose the department to speak about today.

I was surprised; the Attorney General (Mr. Wishart) got only one vote; Municipal Affairs got only one vote; Transport got only one vote; the Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) got one vote; Lands and Forests got two. To my amazement, The Department of Correctional Services got only two votes; Energy and Resources Management got three; Highways got three, Trade and Development got five. But the winner, the overall winner, Mr. Speaker, was The Department of Health. It got 12 votes.

So, working in the democratic manner, I shall restrict my comments today to The Department of Health.

The Department of Health does give a little scope for discussion, Mr. Speaker. There are a number of matters which are not run exactly as we would like them run from this side of the House. The member for Quinte (Mr. Potter) who spoke so very well just a few minutes ago has outlined some of the criticisms which we have been voicing here for some time. But to begin—and I will follow with some of the matters which he spoke of—to begin, I think perhaps I would like to say just a word about air pollution because it is a matter of great dismay to us, on this side of the House, that air pollution is unfortunately controlled, or supposed to be controlled, by The Department of Health.

We had the pleasure the other day, of hearing the member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha) speak at some length about his vision of the north, and I might digress, just for a moment. He gave us his beautiful 62-page, printed speech which I read with great interest. He led up to the final great point at the end, which was that we should have a study. I rather liked that speech because it sort of summarized the position of all three parties in the House. The Conservatives are happy with everything the way it is; the Liberals want a study; and we want to make some changes.

I will start off by talking about Sudbury—

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Tell us what the hon. member says about the north—

Mr. Shulman: That is what I am going to talk about right now—the north; air pollution in the north, and particularly air pollution in Sudbury.

There has been a great deal of controversy in recent years about things that have happened in Sudbury, Mr. Speaker, particularly about the air pollution problem produced by the International Nickel Company in that city. Outside of the general despoliation of the area which we all know of, the union up there has expressed deep concern regarding the health of their men, and has expressed the view that the sulphur dioxide level in the plant is dangerously high.

This has been vigorously denied by INCO, and they have been supported by inspectors from The Department of Mines who have gone in time and time again and have found that everything is just fine there, the sulphur dioxide level is very low. It was very hard to tell who was telling the truth; whether the union was telling the truth or whether the people who worked for The Department of Mines and the company were telling the truth.

I am delighted to say, Mr. Speaker, that due to the public interest of one of Toronto's great newspapers, combined with the bravery of a McGill University student, the truth is finally available today. I have it here in my hand.

It has not been made public before and it is with great excitement I bring it to you. The background is as follows:

Before I give you the results of this very interesting visit to Sudbury: Copper Cliff is a tiny town lying just outside Sudbury, surrounded by miles of desolate land—I have been up there twice in recent months—rotted three trunks and barren blackened rock. With a population of 3,400, it is legally an independent, incorporated municipality with a mayor, town council, police force and all other trappings of an average town.

But in reality, it is a “company town.” It has been incorporated for over 60 years, and always the mayor and council have all been officials of the International Nickel Company of Canada.

There has never been an election. Mayors and councils are selected by “acclamation”. Copper Cliff collects taxes, like any other town, to finance its education, public works and police force. But Copper Cliff has only two taxpayers: a tiny branch of the Toronto-Dominion Bank which owns its land, and INCO—which owns every other inch of property.

The police force here is technically one like any other. But the Copper Cliff police also act as company-paid guards for INCO, and the jurisdiction between a private and a public force is an academic distinction not worth drawing.

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): INCO coppers!

Mr. Shulman: Right!

Three huge smoke stacks dominate the sky over this flat little town. Twenty-four hours a day, every day of the year, the three giants belch grey-white columns of smoke that curl to form the ghostly cloud that hangs over Sudbury.

On the edge of Copper Cliff is a vast complex of smoke-blackened buildings that feed the stacks. The complex is couched beside a 300-foot high range of slag—waste rock and iron—and stands out of the flat wasteland like some Alcatraz. It is surrounded by a 20-foot high fence, which is closely watched by the armed security police.

This is the Copper Cliff smelter of INCO—and a brave man whose name is Mark Starowicz climbed over that slag heap to get you the results that I am going to tell you about in a few moments, Mr. Speaker. This smelter is the largest of its kind in the world, the pride of the Ontario mining industry. And this is where all the trouble is.

Here, the workers claim, they are forced to work in conditions that are archaic and unsafe, amid fumes that poison their systems, in dust that chokes their lungs.

Here, in these buildings, where clouds of blue-white gas prey through the various floors, and where millions of tons of chemicals are spewed into the atmosphere, they think lie the explanations for two startling facts discovered by a study done at Laurentian University.

These two facts are there: first, the death rate of a Sudbury male over 55 is 50 per cent higher than for the rest of Ontario.

And second, the life expectancy of a Sudbury male over 45 is seven years below the national average.

The men who work in Copper Cliff don't believe this is coincidence. They think they're being poisoned.

The vice-president of Local 6500, United Steelworkers of America, Kenneth Valentine, is the union's pollution and safety spokesman, and he has been fighting INCO on this for years.

It's something out of the industrial revolution, he said.

The disregard INCO has for the men working there, and the effects they suffer in those stinking conditions sound like something out of the coal mines in the 18th century. It makes a farce of INCO's so-called concern over safety.

But INCO replied in their calm, reasonable way these charges are “exaggerated and irresponsible” and, as far as INCO is concerned, the excess gases are a product of the union's imagination. Well, who is telling the truth?

The gas is sulphur dioxide. It is produced by smelting the ore in the huge furnaces of the reverberator building. It rises from the multi-storey furnaces, and would escape through the giant centre stack at the plant, except for INCO's conscientiousness in trapping it.

Sulphur dioxide is a highly valuable gas because it is the essential element in the manufacture of sulphuric acid. CIL has put up a permanent plant within the INCO complex which just manufactures the chemical for industry.

In order to trap the gas and prevent it from escaping through the stack, there are dampers in the furnaces that choke off its escape. The workers have claimed that the dampers are responsible for gas escaping onto the work floors. Valentine said:

INCO is so greedy to trap that gas that they keep the dampers three-quarters closed and poison their own workers just to prevent its escaping. When the dampers are open, as they should be, the gas conditions virtually disappear.

The effects of sulphur dioxide on the human body have been studied in many countries. The result of these studies have been compiled here in Toronto—before air pollution was taken over by the province. The man in charge who was doing an excellent job, supplied this to anyone who was interested and, doctors have all agreed that sulphur dioxide causes congestion of the bronchial tubes and lungs, affects the circulation of the blood and eventually leads to heart failure if it is present in the air at a certain level, and for any length of time.

Now, the question is what is the level?

First of all, if we are going to do anything about INCO, we have to be sure whether the sulphur dioxide level is too high, or whether it is safe. Now, the only legislation covering such a condition is a vague paragraph in The Mining Act:

Part IX, section 430 (i) states:

In every mill or plant where poisonous vapours or gases exist or may be formed, suitable means shall be adopted to provide such ventilation as will prevent the formation of dangerous concentrations of the same.

What are "dangerous concentrations"?

These are not defined in any legislation. However, industry has found it is generally accepted to follow the guidelines set out by the American Conference of Governmental Industrial Hygienists.

The Ontario Department of Health has recognized these as guidelines. The guidelines set a ceiling of five parts of sulphur dioxide per million as the safe working limit. Five parts per million, let me stress that, Mr. Speaker. They also recommend that good industrial practice calls for staying well below the limit.

Valentine claims it is a rare day when the reading near the furnaces dips below ten parts per million. INCO has replied that this is just not true. Our Minister of Mines (Mr. A. F. Lawrence) has sent inspectors time and time again. The level was always safe.

Two years ago the union took some clandestine tests. They claimed reading of over 200 parts per million were found. INCO has flatly denied the truth of these tests, and certainly results found by the government inspectors have shown the plant level to be quite safe.

Well, we finally found out in August, Mr. Speaker. To finally settle the truth of this matter, the Toronto Star hired a McGill University student, Mark Starowicz, and on the night of Wednesday, August 29, he went to find out for himself. I quote from the statement he subsequently dictated—after getting out of the plant.

Entry to the plant is illegal, unless one is a worker with a badge, a tourist with a guide, or a special visitor conducted by a company official. The plant is heavily guarded by armed security men. For two days I asked various workers to sketch for me sections of the plant they knew, and draw for me every walkway, passage and entrance.

The only way to avoid crossing the guards who scrutinized all entrants was to wait till nightfall, and climb over the massive slag range that dominates the rear of the complex.

Wednesday night, dressed in clothes given me by workers, and equipped with the required safety goggles and gas mask, I began crossing the slag heap. With me I took a camera and a drager meter—a compact precision instrument used to measure gas content in the air. Guards intermittently played powerful lights onto the slag range, and that made my progress slow, having to duck them.

But finally, after an hour, I was within the plant and at a set place, prearranged, met one worker who was going to be my guide that night. The worker would, without question, have been fired for helping me enter the plant if he was caught. But he shrugged off my fear, saying, "If you see it like it really is here and report it, then it will be worth getting fired."

We moved toward the converter building beneath the centre stack of the three giants, avoiding groups of men and supervisors' offices. Entering the giant operation, we inched past machines that dwarfed the men tending them and worked our way to the giant furnaces that were the core of the building. Several hundred men were in the plant on the night shift.

After half an hour of winding ramps and ladders, we reached our first destination: "D" floor, the base of the furnaces. Open furnaces blasted the ore, molten red, and through the furnace doors we saw the gentle rising of silvery grey fumes that followed the neck of the furnace up to the stacks.

Here was the source of the sulphur dioxide. Upstairs, on "M" floor, were the areas the men were complaining about. But they were also complaining about "D" floor, which is where we were and so we approached the groups of men who worked by the furnaces.

The heat grew in intensity at every step, and it was like breathing with your head in a hot oven. The heat pounded you and you felt the veins in your head.

I asked that we stop before we even reached the men near the furnaces. I was streaming sweat, and trying to walk towards these stoves of hell was like walking against some big, soft hand that was pushing you back. I could see the men better now—like automatons performing their tasks, their eyes half closed by the heat, moving silently. I myself could barely move.

You get used to this, sneered the man with me, but maybe if you ask the company very nicely they'll tell you how very conscientious they are about ventilating it.

He said the heat reached 150 degrees at times, and I believed it. As we climbed the east stairs to "M" floor, I held my breath so as not to inhale the hot stench of the furnaces.

"M" floor is a 20-foot wide walkway around the top of the furnaces, which fill the centre of the building. On the west side, the air is acrid, but bearable—it's the prettier side of the building where they show the tourists and where some supervisors' offices are. But down the walk-area, dimly lit by naked hanging bulbs, the east side was immersed in a shiny blue pall. In that pall, I saw the silhouettes of men working.

We donned our masks and goggles and moved toward the pall. After 50 feet, the acrid smell was penetrating my gas mask, and my mouth and throat felt suddenly as if I had gargled in kerosene. As we moved in deeper, the pall became a milky cloud, and I could only see a few feet ahead.

My eyes began stinging unbearably, and I struggled to keep them open to see. They watered so much the tears formed inside my goggles. A feeling of nausea began to grow in me, and I began gasping for air, which gave me acute chest pains. I pressed the gas mask to my face, but I could not shut the gas out. I held my breath and tried to pull my camera out. But I began coughing, and unwittingly breathed a gulp. A sharp pain in my chest doubled me over, and the nausea overwhelmed me. I pulled off my mask and began to retch. As I groped for something to grab hold of, I felt very suddenly dizzy. Then, I collapsed.

I wasn't unconscious for long—45 seconds to a minute, said the worker who was with me. He had been right behind me and dragged me to a window when I passed out. The gas was rushing over my back as I bent low over the window sill to find air that was fresh.

After a few minutes, I pulled out the dragged meter, held my breath, and moved back into the gas cloud. I loaded the long, grey tube into the instrument. According to gas content, the tube turns white from one end, up a scale towards the other.

The maximum reading on the scale is 200.

I moved to the centre of the walkway—not near the furnace flues—but within a few feet of the men who were incredibly working there. The test took one minute, during which I didn't breathe.

I moved quickly to the window, gasped air, and looked at the drager meter tube. It was completely white. Off scale.

The air contained over 200 parts of sulphur dioxide per million. The guidelines said five was the recommended safe limit.

Goggles made no difference to my eyes. A gas mask was useless there—you'd need a scuba tank and pure oxygen. And as we moved into the cleaner air on the west side of the building, I stared at the silhouettes of the men who spent hours there in that shiny blue-white cloud. And I knew I'd do my share of coughing and spitting that night, as these men did every night of their lives.

After a few weeks, you can stand it, said my guide.

But what does it do to you later, I wondered.

The morning after my clandestine visit I telephoned assistant general manager of INCO, Don Fraser, and said I wanted to tour the areas the workers were complaining about.

I was told it was "irregular", but after some pressing and three hours waiting for a decision they agreed to give me a tour. They refused to admit my photographer, however, saying only "It is against company policy". Any photographs I needed, Fraser said, I could be given from the public relations files in Toronto.

In the executive offices, which are air-conditioned by passing the air through a special chemical solution to cleanse it, I was started on my tour. My guide was Norman Spears, another assistant manager. I was taken on a broad tour of the plant, and when I asked to see the reverberator building, I was shown all along the fresh and tidy west side, where tourists are taken through every hour.

Standing on the clean and well-ventilated side of "M" floor I asked Spears if the spot we were standing in was the vicinity the workers were complaining about.

"Yes," he said, "and you can see there's nothing to those complaints. We take tourists through here every day."

So I pressed him to take me to the east end of "M" floor which is the actual area the workers are complaining about. The air was bearable, and there wasn't a worker in sight. My guide had predicted that the dampers would be opened for my visit, allowing all gases to escape—flattering, considering that costs INCO a few thousand dollars in sulphur dioxide. As I stood over the same spot where I had collapsed the night before, the INCO executive was speaking:

"Oh, sometimes on a bad day when the draught blows it here you might get a reading of ten, but that's all. There's nothing poisonous about conditions here. Those workers are a bunch of lazy bastards."

The air was bearable now, even without a gas mask. It was 2 p.m. Thursday.

Later that day I asked two workers I knew were on that afternoon shift if the dampers were open or closed at 2 p.m. They told me the dampers had been opened at 12.30 p.m. I had asked Spears if these were normal air conditions, and he said they were.

"Once in a while," he said, "if a leak is sprung, it might get a bit gassy. But that happens very rarely, and of course we pull the men out."

As best as anyone could remember, there hadn't been a leak on "M" floor for several months.

That is the end of the quote; that is the end of the statement from Mark Starowicz. And, Mr. Speaker, what a scandal that is; what a scandal it is for INCO; what a scandal it is for Sudbury, what a scandal it is for the member for Sudbury; what a scandal it is for the Ministers of Mines and Health (Mr. Dymond), for this government; and what a scandal it is for everyone in this House, that no one has done anything about this in all these years; that this terrible company has been able to lie and lie and lie and nobody over there cares. Where was the Minister of Mines all these years?

I know where the Minister of Mines has been all these years, and I know why he has not done his job, and I am going to tell you that too, Mr. Speaker, and it makes very painful hearing. Union men, the men who work up there, do not understand why the government has not acted. There have been Conservative members who come from the area, they have had members come down here—the member for Sudbury East (Mr. Martel) has spoken time and time again about the conditions in Sudbury. Someone in the government must have known and yet no one would act. Well, why has the government not acted?

The answer is a mixture of incompetence and venality. On the afternoon of December 15 last the member for Sudbury East got a phone call that broke the 25-year old myth propagated by the provincial Department of Mines. The call was from Mickey McGuire, safety director of Local 6500 (Sudbury) United Steelworkers of America. McGuire told the MPP for Sudbury East: "There is going to be an inspection of the INCO plant in Copper Cliff by Department of Mines people on December 18." This was December 15, Mr. Speaker. For 25 years the Minister of Mines in this province has consistently maintained that all visits by mining inspectors to the International Nickel Company plants in Sudbury were surprise ones.

The department stood by the policy that, of course, mine inspections must surprise the company, otherwise they are a farce. Safety violations could be quickly corrected if the company got any warning of an impending inspection.

The MPP for Sudbury East knew this policy was being consistently violated, but had not been able to prove it, not to the satisfaction of the Minister of Mines, not to the satisfaction of the government.

"How do you know there's going to be an inspection?" he asked McGuire.

"Because all the men have been put on clean-up jobs, they've been assigned to repaint, spruce up and doll up the plant," said McGuire. "Other men have been assigned to repair some faulty equipment. They've even got crews working overtime."

And this happens every time there is going to be an inspection and it happens three days ahead of time.

McGuire said all the workers knew there was going to be an inspection—"They've been told all must be spic and span by December 18."

—we finally have good representation from at least half of Sudbury here—

The MPP for Sudbury East saw his opportunity and told McGuire to send him a telegram immediately, detailing the fact that a mining inspection was imminent.

After the Christmas recess, on Friday, February 23, the MPP for Sudbury East rose to ask the hon. Minister of Mines:

Did the mining inspector visit the coal plant at INCO in Copper Cliff on Monday, December 18, 1967, and if so, what were the findings at that time?

On Monday, the hon. Minister presented his answer:

Two inspectors did make such an investigation on December 18, acting on complaints of faulty equipment received by the department, because there had been an explosion there in September.

They inspected three areas of equipment, and found them totally satisfactory and safe: fan motors, vacuum systems and dust chamber of No. 2 dryer.

The MPP for Sudbury East rose in the House to ask a supplementary question. He had a telegram in his hand.

How was it,

he asked the hon. Minister, that International Nickel, in view of this telegram I received on December 17, was aware that this inspection was going to take place the next day?

The hon. Minister of Mines did not answer that question, he took it as notice. On March 5 he got up in the House and admitted INCO was advised 24 hours in advance of a planned safety inspection.

The hon. Minister told the Legislature his initial reaction when asked in the House last week if notice had been given was that such visits were surprises to all parties. However, he had since determined that large firms such as INCO were sometimes advised in advance so safety engineers could accompany the Mines Department inspectors on tours. The MPP for Sudbury East commented that it was like warning crooks of an impending police raid.

"It's a joke among the men," said Kenneth Valentine, vice-president of Steelworkers' Local 6500, and the man who had spearheaded a battle against INCO for several years.

This happens all the time. Everybody knows days ahead when there's going to be an inspection. Faulty equipment is fixed up, and the plant is made to look like a dollhouse. The Department of Mines repeatedly tips off INCO on safety inspections.

The MPP for Sudbury East also informed me that:

There are areas that mining inspectors have never seen, huge drifts where men risk their lives and work in water up to their knees.

This is contrary to The Mining Act, of course. But the government does not enforce The Mining Act when it comes to INCO.

This is a bit of a mystery, Mr. Speaker. Why does the government not enforce The Mining Act when it comes to INCO? Why is that the cries of the member for Sudbury and the member for Sudbury East are not paid attention to in this House? Why does The Department of Mines notify INCO ahead of time when they are going to make an inspection?

We have wondered for a long time about that, Mr. Speaker. We speculate, of course, because we tend to get a little suspicious over on this side of the House about matters like that, but we never had anything more than suspicions. But I am delighted, Mr. Speaker, finally to be able to enlighten you, and enlighten the other members of the House, as to the reason why, because now we finally know, because Mark Starowicz was a very bright young man.

Mr. Starowicz went to see, of all people, Shane MacKay. Now Shane MacKay is no union representative; he is no member of the NDP; he has nothing to do with the workers' side of things. He, of all things, is the Director of Public Affairs for INCO, and he rather neatly and unintentionally explained the whole scandal.

When asked about the suggestion that INCO contributed $100,000 to the Conservative Party before the last provincial election he replied:

That's probably true, although I might point out that the company makes contributions to the Liberal Party as well. This is a normal policy with many firms. We also in the last provincial election made specific contributions to certain candidates. But as far as INCO is concerned, we do not officially admit this, and please do not quote me.

Mr. G. A. Kerr (Halton West): The candidate from Sudbury East?

Mr. Shulman: No, I guess the member just arrived because the members perhaps are a little late coming in. I am quoting Mr. Shane MacKay, Director of Public Affairs for INCO.

An hon. member: Is he still there?

Mr. Shulman: He may not be there tomorrow.

He would not reveal which candidates received contributions, what the exact amounts were, or what parties they represented. He would only add that the New Democratic Party received no contributions.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): At least we are free agents to raise the issue.

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): The hon. member does not even have anything to say about it.

Mr. Shulman: We have quite a bit to say about it and we are saying it now. This is the reason men cannot breathe in Sudbury—it is the government's fault.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Shulman: Led by Valentine, the steelworkers union has been firing a barrage of charges at INCO over the past few years, alleging the company exposes men to unsafe working conditions, specifically poisonous gases in the Copper Cliff smelter.

Defenders of INCO have found a strong counter-argument in INCO's safety record, which is outstanding in the industry and is outstanding in the province. The fatality rate is less than half that for the mining industry as a whole. Does that not sound nice, Mr. Speaker, they have a wonderful safety record except that they cook the books, and I am going to prove that now. Let us go on to that next thing. Why do they have such a wonderful safety record? If things are so bad up there why is their record so good? Now I am going to tell you about that, Mr. Speaker.

Its premium rates paid to the workmen's compensation board are well below the average for all other industries. These premium rates are calibrated for each firm according to how many lost-time accidents it has. The fewer lost-time hours a company has, the lower are its premiums into the workmen's compensation fund.

Valentine and the MPP for Sudbury East charge that INCO's safety record is "trumped up and totally distorted for the purpose of lowering its premiums and parading a false record to cover up its true disregard for safety."

INCO officials call the suggestion: "Preposterous. Those are the figures; it has been checked by the WCBO; it stands for itself; we have a safe record, we are a safe company." That is what they say.

Mr. MacDonald: And the Minister cried "foul".

Mr. Shulman: I am sorry the Minister of Labour (Mr. Bales) is not here; I am sorry the Minister of Health is not here; I am sorry the Minister of Mines is not in the House—what a shame for all of them these facts are.

In Dry No. 1—the building where men have their lockers, where they take their showers and store their equipment—there is a room called "Hernando's Hideaway". At least that is what the workers at the Copper Cliff smelter call it. It is quite a popular joke. And they call it that because of cases like Kerry Size.

Size has been with INCO for six and a half years, and he worked as a switcher. Today he is a motorman, driving the eight-ton electric locomotives.

But on April 6 he was still a switcher, and one of those eight-ton locomotives caught his ankle and crushed it against a timber. He was sent to a hospital, where a cast was put on his leg. He wore that cast till June 1. He never went on lost-time compensation.

At home, he was visited by one of INCO's 33 professional safety engineers, who made a proposition to him: Come back on the job on "light duty" and he would be given a labourer's salary. Size said: "How can I work? I have a cast on my leg." "Do not worry, you will not have to work. Just come back, we will give you something to do."

Size said he couldn't drive to work, so the safety engineer told him not to worry. For a week a cab picked Size up and drove him to work. For the next 60 days the company made arrangements for another worker to drive Size to work. Only Size did not have to work very hard.

For over 60 days I sat around in Hernando's Hideaway and did nothing. Zero. I just sat there, or hobbled around. Once

I wrote some number on some cards for a couple of hours. But that was all I ever did.

His leg had to be kept elevated most of the time, so INCO provided him with a make-shift cot and everything he needed. He says:

It sure was light duty, all right. Once I had to go home because my wife was sick, and I wanted to get paid for that time off so-called work. They said they could not pay me when I was not there, so I just told them I would report to the compensation board that I was in fact a lost-time accident. Next week they had me on an over-time shift, so I made time and a half. Seemed very strange they would put a guy who is doing nothing on overtime, but I sat there on overtime getting time and a half. They must have gotten scared.

Size says he knew why he got this "remarkably light duty" and so does the union. They say it happens all the time—that is why everyone knows that room as Hernando's Hideaway.

If someone is off work more than two days after an accident,

Size said,

—it's listed with the workmen's compensation board as a lost-time accident. But if he is back on the job before two days, it is only a compensable accident—which means you get a little money from the board, but it is not listed against the company's record as a lost-time accident. They got to me before two days were up. It was no light work; they just did not want 500 hours lost time tacked on to their record.

WCB premiums are calculated on total lost-time hours per million hours worked.

Nothing INCO did here was illegal—

Valentine stresses,

—just a bit immoral. The accident was reported to the WCB. Size agreed to the proposition—most men would rather make the money than get three-quarters of their salary. But it gives you an idea of how a company can legally build themselves up a very pretty record that means nothing really. This happens all the time.

INCO's Shane MacKay expressed disbelief, but confirmed that Size had been listed as a compensable accident with the WCB, and not a lost-time accident. He admitted a man had his leg crushed, was put in a cast, and did not lose any time from work. Quite a miracle occurring up there at INCO. That is what is happening inside the plant.

What about the areas outside INCO itself? They have taken this lush land, created a desert, and called it "prosperity". If you arrive from the southeast by train, the forests begin to thin out 15 miles out of Sudbury, and a brown pallor overtakes the green. Ten miles out, you find scrubland, and a scattered breed of hardy bushes that somehow thrive on this black rock.

Approach Sudbury via Coniston, and you move through a pocked, cratered moonscape, scattered with the trunks of rotten trees as the only sign that once something thrived here.

Five miles out of Sudbury on Highway 17 there is a road sign put up by The Department of Lands and Forests, "Please use your ashtrays, prevent forest fires". Smile. What forests?

Test any lake within a ten-mile radius of Sudbury. There is not a living thing in them. And someone who goes hunting will find more game 15 miles out of Toronto than out of this town. Copper Cliff creek crosses Highway 17, and on a cold day it weaves a thick white fog over the highway. People have died in this fog, people have been crippled for life because of car accidents. The cause of the fog was never a mystery. It was generally assumed, and subsequently borne out, that industrial wastes from the INCO plant heated the creek, and the contrast with cold air formed the fog.

The mystery is that to this day, though it has been brought up in the Legislature time after time, nothing has been done save conduct a minor investigation to discover what everyone already knew.

There are white pines on the campus of Laurentian University that are dying. There are white pine on the shores of Lake Penage, 25 miles from the INCO smokestacks, that are dead. And this is one of the most beautiful resort areas in the province. It has been estimated by the government that $1 million in white pine—a rare and delicate type of tree—has already been destroyed. Gardens wilt overnight in Sudbury if the wind blows the fumes the wrong way. The pollution affects clothes. It is estimated that pollution costs each Sudbury resident $60 a year.

One million tons of sulphur dioxide are poured out into the atmosphere through the triple INCO stacks at Copper Cliff and the double stacks at Falconbridge Nickel at Coniston. One million tons of the noxious gas mix with three million tons of water to make four million tons of sulphuric acid. That in diluted form is what passes for water in the lakes and rivers of the Sudbury basin. Government studies show surrounding waters have too high an acid concentration to support anything more complex than algae.

One part per million concentration of sulphur dioxide, exposed for 30 minutes to vegetation, will kill it, and remember that 200 plus.

Trying to grow a crop of anything within 15 miles of Sudbury requires a faith in providence not given most people. A crop can be wiped out in two hours. And most farmers to whom this happens have no recourse against the companies that pollute the atmosphere. In the thirties, farmers who were hard hit by the depression sold the "surface rights" to their lands for pittance, and thus gave up forever the right to seek recourse against the nickel companies.

A family buying a new home in Sudbury is likely to find this ancient clause attached to their lease, barring any claims against INCO or Falconbridge.

"What can that mean," asked Ken Valentine, the Steelworkers' Union expert on pollution, "except that in those early years these companies actually premeditated the destruction of the land?"

And he also asks: "Can we be breathing all this and really think it makes no difference in the long run? If it does this to vegetation and fish, what is it doing to the very young, to the very old?"

For years, among the town's businessmen and elected officials, a curious attitude prevailed towards the blatant facts of pollution. It was best summed up in the editorials of the Sudbury Star, which in about as many words asked: Do you want pollution or a ghost town? INCO has now invested in a slick magazine and newspaper ad campaign, which explains that INCO is really concerned about helping find ways of combatting pollution. It was best summed up in one of the editorials in the Sudbury Star.

One ad boasts how INCO is recovering two-thirds of the sulphur dioxide before it is allowed to escape in the stacks. It does not mention that the culling of the gas is a source of great profit to the company, as it makes valuable sulphuric acid. It suggests the motivation is philanthropic rather than mercenary.

The company has made breakthroughs in developing strains of wheat that grow on tailings—waste rock and dust—and also developing gas-resistant types of grass.

"All of which is very nice," says the MPP for Sudbury East, "but why don't they get to the point and just stop polluting the air? Several years ago a plant in Trail, British Columbia, was forced to stop polluting the air, because it was ruining crops in Washington State, and the American government threatened to take it to court. The federal government should do the same thing here. If the legislation does not exist, they should seek recourse to the courts."

The hon. member for Sudbury was interviewed by Mr. Starowicz. He said: "INCO is a more powerful legislator than the elected ones. The government is deaf whenever INCO is concerned. It is a very, very powerful lobby. Honest to Christ—and don't quote that because I don't want to lose the religious vote—but honest to Christ, those bosses in New York think of Sudbury as some place in the wilderness to be ravaged, exploited for all it's worth. Goddamit we contribute to make all these gee-gaws that are the baubles of western civilization and we have some rights."

An hon. member: Is "goddamit" a perfectly legitimate expression?

Mr. Shulman: I would not use that expression, Mr. Speaker, I was just quoting another member.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Shulman: I am quoting the hon. member's statement to Mr. Starowicz.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Shulman: Possibly the only comparison that can be made to determine the effects of sulphur dioxide on a population is with the famous London fog of 1952.

Mr. Speaker, I see we are at the hour, and we are coming to the private members' hour. May I move that we adjourn the debate and continue this pleasant subject tomorrow?

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Shulman moves the adjournment of the debate. Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry?

Motion agreed to.

NOTICES OF MOTION

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): It is private members' hour, Mr. Speaker; may I call Resolutions No. 7 and No. 10?

Clerk of the House: Notice of motion No. 7, by Mr. Gaunt.
